He said students need an academic code to protect them, and asked if present offensive clauses in the academic code could be reformed once approved, he said: "It would be an uphill struggle because the administration has the structure."

However, he pointed to the shelving of the non-academic code as a victory, but said he realized there would have to be a lot of organizing to prevent the code as a victory, but said he realized there would have to be a lot of organizing to prevent the code from coming down off the shelf.

Supporting student parity, the Kanowitch slate pledges itself to get into departmental organizing in the face of "increasing numbers" of untenured professors getting fired.

Tied into that is what Kanowitch terms the university's "misallocation" of funds. He says there is no budget crisis, just a university management crisis.

He cites the $1 million U of T

continued on page 8

Baumann makes second bid for president

Peter Baumann is making his second bid for SAC's presidency with a platform which is similar in some areas to his platform in last year's defeat for the top spot.

Baumann has different running mates this year. Last year his slate drew 120 votes out of more than 3,000 cast.

The third-year economics student from UC is running this time with Bill Paterson (Eng III) and Laura Conn (Scar I) and is again calling for "fresh blood" in SAC and ousting the "old clique".

In an interview Baumann and Paterson said if elected they would immediately re-open negotiations with the administration over the non-academic discipline code.

They said they would conduct these negotiations in the summer while students were off campus and agreed to the idea if Simcoe Hall perceived a weak SAC the non-academic code might be brought in.

Admitting Simcoe Hall's discipline discussion leader Jill Conway is a "difficult" person to talk to, Baumann said the purpose of summer-time talks would be to keep the non-academic code from being passed.

During the past month, the present SAC administration, which went on record last fall opposing the entire code, was only able to get the non-academic code temporarily suspended after conceding the academic section of the code following negotiating sessions with Conway and other administration members.

The Baumann slate is not happy with the penalties section of the academic section of the code but they pledged to do nothing about it until they see whether it is to be enforced or not.

Baumann says if the harsh penalties are enforced against a student in a specific case, then he would urge SAC to oppose the code but not solely the case by case battles.

The slate is not committed to student parity on hiring committees because they feel representation would be sufficient student input in hiring new professors.

However, on departmental tenure committees the Baumann slate says parity is absolutely necessary for the tenure and firing function.

Baumann and Paterson said they had not considered the issue of whether the proceedings of a departmental tenure committee should be open or not, but after questioning concluded the results should be public but not the actual proceedings themselves.

Yet they separated the principle of parity at a departmental level from other higher levels of the university structure saying that those levels parity would be the goal but representation could be settled for depending on the committee.

Both had sharp words for the Ontario Federation of Students, saying they opposed the $1.50 per student rate increase proposal being put to students during next week's SAC balloting.

They said they assumed someone who voted against their position on OFS would also vote against them. They said they did not feel students were getting their money's worth from OFS to have the rate increased.

Borrowed from last year's platform is a plank calling for getting more students involved in SAC and to get SAC to be a campus group with "common sense."

Admitting they did not have an in-depth knowledge of the internal SAC bureaucracy, Baumann says the first thing his slate would do if elected was find out how the bureaucracy runs and then see if they wanted to make any changes.

Baumann says his three-year lack of participation in organized campus activities is consistent with his platform of bringing fresh blood into SAC.

In response to the issue of racism in the classroom, the slate feels parity on tenure committees could solve that problem.

In a leaflet, the slate says they want to "promote an administration dealing with student concerns."

"SAC does not exist as a social welfare agency nor does it exist to solve the problem of the world at large."

"By attempting to delve into these areas, SAC has reduced its efficiency as a campus organization."

Peter Baumann (left), wants SAC top job calling for "fresh blood" in SAC. Bill Paterson and Laura Conn are VP candidates.

Cut SAC budget, Brute Force says

Michel Chamberland, Brute Force Committee (BFC) Chairman and SAC presidential hopeful plans to paint the dome of the SAC building pink if he is elected.

But Chamberland insists he is running a serious protest campaign, promising to "cutback SAC."

The slate includes Victoria college student Jim Maclean and Erindale student Carol Bonhoff. Chamberland said in an interview they were hoping to make wholesale cuts in SAC's $244,000 budget.

The budget cuts, services and more power to the local councils are their main campaign planks.

However, they have unclear positions on two issues that have faced the campus this year and will continue next year—the discipline code and student representation on staffing bodies.

Brute Force Committee chairman Michel Chamberland (left) wants SAC's oval office with Carol Bonhoff (centre) and Jim Maclean.

continued on page 8

Streaking strikes staid U of T campus

By BOB BETTSON

Streaking has hit the U of T campus.

Two men clad only in large smiles walked through Trinity College's Buttery Wednesday night at 5:30. The campus is now on streak alert.

A Varsity reporter was there to observe the new phenomenon. The streakers were sitting in the Buttery and abruptly started to take their clothes off.

After stripping down to their underwear, they finally revealed the bare truth in front of an amused group of spectators of both sexes and walked off, carrying their clothes.

In the past 48 hours, there have been four documented cases of streaking at U of T. A fifth was scheduled for late last night.

U of T can claim to have the first woman's streak in Canada, and the first televised streak, as Global Television was around to capture the historic moment at the Victoria College men's residence.

Streaking is the newest fad to hit US campuses and has become more popular every day as more and more men and women have run stark naked across campuses and other local areas.

There was also a male streaking match at Victoria College where one entrant issued a challenge to women's teams to take them on.

The entrant said it was "good streaking weather." The Trinity students, however, stayed inside, streaking through a banquet at the college.

The first Victoria College streaking on Wednesday night was witnessed by a crowd including women from the Vic residence and two incredulous Metro police officers.

A large crowd gathered as the streakers performed for Loretto College's women, but the crowd dispersed after three more police arrived.

The second streak Thursday morning was filmed for cable television and performed by members of the Vic men's residence.

After the Vic challenge was issued the Varsity asked Innis College student council president Shelly Sinkoff whether he would accept the challenge.

He said if it was an all male streak, "I couldn't get up for it." But he admitted if it was co-educational there would be no problems.

Another call is out for a streak-in at Queen's Park this weekend. And two women appeared at Erindale College earlier this week wearing only hats.

Marshall McLuhan commented the streakers were "betwixt nudity and nakedness" because the nude "is never naked unless he wants to be private."

Streaking started out as an activity by groups of males at several colleges to raid female dormitories. But soon it appeared in public and became co-educational.

Now the fad is turning political as organizers of a "streak-in" at the White House in Washington, DC, on April Fools day are asking President Nixon to "step from behind the towel and lay bare the naked truth about Watergate."

About 5,000 are expected. Now the fad has spread to Canada which never was a country to stay immune for too long from American silliness. This country has only been delayed from the streaking plague because of the cold weather.

Yesterday it was reported there were incidents of streaking at Calgary (in two degree below zero weather).

When interviewed, a Carleton co-ed said she was upset the sport had been limited to mainly men so far and said she had broken the sex barrier and streaked through the busy suburban Ottawa campus.

Streaking has so far been non-violent, and limited to the campus, but there have been several arrests and the police don't seem to know what to do.

As Washington police chief Jerry Wilson said, "we might not have enough undercover agents."

In California it was recently reported two male streakers, unaware they were both heading in the same path, bumped into each other and knocked themselves cold.

With the warmer weather streaking is increasing in popularity.

US campuses have a longer school year than their Canadian counterparts. A national streaking association is being formed and the old record is now held by the university of South Carolina where 500 nude men raced across campus encouraged by thousands of cheering spectators.

Georgia is trying to break the record tonight.

Radio Varsity

2-WAY
RADIO

Fri Mar 8

2 pm - The Sonic Orgasm

In its fourth year on Radio Varsity, Gary Marson hosts the Sonic Orgasm. (3 hours).

Mon Mar 11

11 pm - The Goon Show

This week 'The Flea'. Oooh. (½ hour).

Tue Mar 12

12 noon

An interview with Paul Axelrod from the Ontario Federation of Students. Discussed in the interview is the forthcoming O.F.S. Referendum. (15 minutes or so)

11 pm

Hancock's Half Hour - Another merry half hour of zany British humour.

HAS ANYONE TOLD YOU SPRING

EQUINOX

IS A LITTLE LATE THIS YEAR?

EQUINOX 1974

will be

Tuesday, March 26

AND

HART HOUSE

IS PREPARING A SPECTACULAR SPRING SURPRISE

Remember The Date: March 26

(MORE DETAILS IN WEDNESDAY'S VARSITY!)

HILLEL'S MOVIE CLUB IS PRESENTING

ME AND MY COLONEL

STARRING DANNY KAYE

DATE: SATURDAY
MARCH 9TH, 1974

PLACE: HILLEL HOUSE
186 ST. GEORGE STREET.

TIME: 8:30 P.M.

Refreshments will be served in the coffeehouse following the movie.

LAST DAY

TO BE NOMINATED FOR A

HART HOUSE COMMITTEE

MAKE IT HAPPEN

ON THE HOUSE, ART, DEBATES, LIBRARY,
MUSIC, FARM OR SQUASH COMMITTEE

NOMINATIONS CLOSE TODAY AT 5 P.M.

NOMINATION FORMS AND FURTHER INFORMATION FROM THE PROGRAMME OFFICE, HART HOUSE

ELECTION DAY - WED., MAR. 13

McAuley Stereo...

...the Off-Campus Coffee Shop

Enjoy a cup of coffee
for your between-lecture listening.

...we also deal in Stereo Components

McAuley Stereo

1057 Bay
(at St. Joseph)

966-3597

Few rape victims seek compensation

In the last six years less than 1.6 per cent of Ontario's rape victims have applied for financial compensation from the provincial Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Of the more than 2,000 reported rapes in that period, only 32 applied for compensation, and of those 32 persons, 26 victims received a total of $70,354 or an average of about $2,700 per person.

As one rape victim said:

"The psychological damage I suffered is greater than the money I received, but the award sure will help."

The number of rape victims seeking compensation is significantly lower than victims of other crimes seeking compensation, according to C.O. Huggard, deputy registrar of the board.

"We receive claims, I estimate, from 3.5 per cent of those who might be entitled to compensation, according to the crime figures," Huggard said.

Huggard's boss, board registrar J.B. Lind, termed some of the board's rewards to rape victims "niggardly," and indicated he would like to see larger awards.

"The emotional trauma suffered by the rape victim is tremendous. My sympathy is with her," Lind said.

One reason for the low turn-out of victims at the board is the fear of going through the experience of presenting the evidence for a second time following a court trial in which the victim is frequently more on trial than the accused.

Because of this the board hears all rape claims behind closed doors.

In addition the board covers legal fees incurred by the victim in applying including the lawyer's fees and even will provide support for maintenance of a child born as a result of a rape.

OHIP covers the medical expenses including loss of salary during treatment and trial, travelling expenses, dental bills and pain and suffering caused by the crime.

Judith Lllaram, an executive member of the Toronto Rape Crisis Centre says her group advises women they can apply for compensation and will help them through the entire process at the board.

"Our primary purpose will be to get the cases to court. Compensation certainly will be a help to the victim and perhaps it will help convince her to go to the police."

Of those who go before the board to claim compensation, board statistics show for crime victims in general the success rate is about 91 per cent.

In the 12-month period ending in March 1973, 486 applied and 433 received compensation. Toronto accounted for 243 of the applications.

The most recent figures available show Ontario had 417 reported rapes in 1972, and in Metro there were 223 reported rapes in 1973 compared to 181 in 1972.

Rape figures, however, only show 10 per cent of the actual rapes, according to the Montreal co-director of Montreal's Rape Crisis Line.

Mona Forrest, of the Woman's Information and Referral Centre, said: "The reason so many rapes remain unreported is that many women feel guilty about being raped."

"A woman may feel it is her fault. Her dress might have been too short."

Both the Montreal and Toronto rape crisis centres try to help women get over this.

Throne speech shows lack of university policy

By ART MOSES

Bill Davis' Throne Speech shows the provincial government does not know where it is going in post-secondary education policy, an official of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) said yesterday.

OFS research co-ordinator Paul Axelrod said the government has no coherent philosophy on post-secondary education and the Throne Speech, read to the Ontario Legislature Tuesday, indicates that.

"The only philosophy the government ever had was the philosophy of growth during the sixties," he said. "Now that growth has ended, the government doesn't know where to go."

The Throne Speech only outlined policy in the so-called "open education sector," and Axelrod termed the proposed initiatives "token".

The government gave notice it will increase allocations for educational broadcasting and encourage more people outside educational institutions to take correspondence courses.

"But the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario called for major, concerted efforts to reach people in the work force and encourage them to take advantage of educational facilities," Axelrod said.

"The Throne Speech gives little indication any such fundamental moves are imminent. The only other thing Queen's Park has done has been the appointment of a deputy minister to oversee libraries and museums."

"The only statements the government has made about long-term educational policy are that tuition fees should go up. On other occasions officials have said they don't know what will happen to tuition fees."

Axelrod said with such uncertainty in government policy students should have a strong provincial voice to lobby Queen's Park for favorable policies.

OFS is currently trying to expand its operations by tripling its staff to increase its capacity for research and lobby work and for communication with Ontario students.

The expansion would be supported by an increase in OFS fees from 40 cents to $1.50 per student. U of T students are to vote Wednesday and Thursday on whether they approve the increase, which would mean a $1.50 increase in student fees.

Axelrod said through lobby work this year, OFS' three staff members have managed to elicit a promise of no tuition increases for next year.

"We've managed to delay any effort to put screw to post-post-secondary education but the deputy minister says he favors tuition increases," he said.

A DIVINE COMEDY!

ARE

OR DOWN THE ROAD WITH ABRAHAM & ISAAC • written by Randy Brown • directed by Leslie O'Dell • • •

AT THE GLEN MORRIS 928-8705

wed. mar. 13 to fri. mar. 15 at 8 pm. sat. mar. 16 at 8 pm & 9:45 pm. FREE!

RONNIE HAWKINS

IS AT LOUNGE HADES

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.
OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 10:30 P.M.

for people who walk on this earth...

If you've walked barefoot on sand or soil you know how great it is. Your heels sink low and your feet embrace the earth. Then you put on your shoes, return to the city, and become another concrete fighter... but the concrete always wins. You yearn for the earth that lies buried beneath the city.

The Earth Shoe is the first shoe in history with the heel lower than the sole... this helps return you to nature though you are forced to live in a cement-coated world. The Earth Shoe's patented design gently guides you to a more erect and graceful walk, and reduces fatigue and the aches and pains caused by our hard-surfaced city.

For men and women in shoes, sandals, sabots and boots. From $23.50 to $42.50. Brochure available

the original Earth Shoe

Open Thurs & Fri 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Mon., Tue., Wed. & Sat. 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.
5 Charles St. West at Yonge
Toronto, Ontario 967-7378

The Low Boot in all sizes for men and women

Wanted

Fieldworker for Arts and Science Student Union

Salary - $115 a week for 40 weeks

Starting Date August 15, 1974

QUALIFICATIONS - Must be willing to co-ordinate and organize political and educational work in arts and sciences at U of T. Would have to work with course unions, faculty Council reps., course evaluations and university issue such as staffing and discipline. Experience in organizing and/or campus politics an asset.

Send applications to

Bob Bettson
543 Palmerston Blvd.
Toronto, Ont.

or Ellen Pomer
479 Duplex Ave.
Toronto, Ont.

Deadline Thursday March 21, 1974

continued from

page 5

Kanowitch

spends annually on campus police and the $35,000 spent on discipline tribunals as an example of the waste.

Implying this money is better spent in departments claiming shortages of funds he said SAC should be organizing around this issue to pressure the administration.

He also wants the Forster report, the document circulating in the committee structure of Governing Council calling for no parity, shelved until fall when students get back so organizing can be formed around that issue.

Stewart's presence on the slate brings a new twist to SAC slates.

After a seven-year hiatus in the real world as a restaurant manager and relief bank branch manager, Stewart says his contribution to SAC would not only be closer liaison with the suburban campus but he would free SAC from the struggles of budgetary details so it could argue the "issues" of the SAC budget.

Engineer Buckley, on the other hand, has a strong tie to the St. George campus, having served on the presidential advisory committee on the campus centre.

He says he sees some movement at last on the campus centre issue and wants to push hard for better services out of the campus centre idea, such as decent food services, a bank on campus and maybe a pub.

Currently SAC services commissioner and previously cultural affairs commissioner as well as SAC rep, Kanowitch wants to bring a new commission into the SAC bureaucracy—a women's commission, a position performed in a de facto manner this year by Heather Ridout.

BRUTE FORCE

Maclean admitted staffing was a low priority. He said it would not be the focus of a major campaign if the Chamberland slate is elected, even though students voted eight to one in favor of representation at a fall referendum.

Maclean said he would hire a professional polling organization because it would be more accurate than petitions or referendums.

The team, by their own admission, lack political experience. Maclean ran unsuccessfully for VUSAC, and was managing editor of the Toke Oike.

Chamberland, as BFC chief was on the Engineering Society Executive. Bonhoff has worked for Radio Erindale and has no other experience, being a first year student.

The slate has no major quarrel with the discipline code. They say SAC opposition to the code is "paranoid" though Chamberland said he would like better wording on the disruption clause and elimination of the conspiracy clause.

Chamberland said people basically "don't give a damn" about staff-student parity on tenure committees. In a leaflet the slate say they don't know why students would want to sit on tenure committees but they'll "ask Dr. John."

Calling for large cutbacks, Chamberland and his running mates are committed to cutting the SAC bureaucracy and some of the "duplicate" services such as the SAC film society and pub, started under their opponent, Kanowitch, as services commissioner.

They are also in favor of cutting back the Varsity budget by a third and force it to cut back to two issues a week. They also want to cut back grants to "left wing" political groups.

"I'll give all the money and power I can to the college and faculty councils and COPOUT," said Chamberland. (COPOUT is the committee of college and faculty student council presidents.)

With services priority first as their they didn't have any particular plans, giving as an example funding the SMC grad ball which always loses money.

They feel they can "get along" and be "friendly" with president John Evans and Simcoe Hall. "They have different goals and ambitions but that doesn't matter."

Carol Bonhoff would abolish the women's commission, as she feels any money spent there must be justified before it is allocated. She feels she would bring a women's point of view to SAC and this would make the Kanowitch slate's proposal to put a women's commissioner on the executive unnecessary.

They support continued membership in OFS and NUS as well as the OFS fee increases, but feel these organizations must be tightly controlled by the councils.

Though Maclean feels the slate will be branded as "right wing" they feel they are "radical middle of the road."

On sexism and racism, they feel they are not big issues on campus. Maclean says an ad which he ran in the Toke Oike, which upset the Italian students, was not racist.

Chamberland says the BFC is not sexist though he admitted their main event is the slave auction in which female strippers are auctioned off to the engineers for the United Way.

He defends this by saying men were also auctioned off though not taken and the BFC has 20 per cent female membership.

Lesbian equality

By HEATHER SANGUINS

"When I say I'm a lesbian I'm saying I love women" said Judy, a member of Toronto Radical Lesbians, Wednesday night to an all-woman audience at OCE.

The speaker said: "I am a lesbian. Because I'm a lesbian I can enjoy equality, or have the potential to enjoy equal relationships with the people I love."

"I am radical lesbian. Because I am a radical lesbian I am willing to submit myself to public ridicule" by being publicly affectionate to my friends" she said.

"I am a radical lesbian feminist. Because of this I want to free all women who are now cowering under the yoke of male oppression" said Judy.

The speaker said: "When someone tells me the women's movement is a 'bunch of lesbians' I say it's not true - yet."

"All women carry within them the potential for lesbianism, and this must be realized whether or not it is acted upon."

(PAID ADVERTISEMENT)

To the editor of the Varsity:

The Question of racism has become an important and disturbing one on University campuses. Consequently, we urge all faculty and students to attend Friday's 'Teach In on Racism' in Convocation Hall.

Howard Levitt — U. of T. Governor
Prof. Bruce Alton — Dept. of Religious Studies, Trinity
Bob Anderson — S. A. C.
Renee Block — Human Relations Consultant, Innis
Prof. Ed Barbeau — Math
All Chaiton — Graduate Student Union
Prof. Les Dewar — Dept. of Religious Studies, St. Michael's College
Rev. Arthur Gibson — S. M. C., Chairman, Dept. of Religious Studies
Prof. Dan Goldstick — Philosophy
Prof. R. Kroger — Psychology
Marshall McLuhan — Director, Centre for Culture and Technology
Principal J. Robson — Victoria College
Prof. Tony Smith — Sociology
Prof. J. Stevenson — Sociology, Executive — Faculty Reform Caucus
Prof. F. Tall — Math
Prof. A. Martin Wall — Chairman, Dept. of Interdisciplinary Studies
Bill Whelton — A. P. U. S.
Prof. Fred Winter — Chairman, Dept. of Fine Art

(PAID ADVERTISEMENT)

THE THUMB IS THREATENED.

Student-Railpass.

Just about the cheapest way to see Europe outside of hitching.

Unlimited second-class rail travel in 13 countries. Two months only $165.

You buy your Student-Railpass here—you can't buy it in Europe. And the $165. price is tax free and a beautiful way to beat currency fluctuations. Who's eligible?

Any full-time student under 26 years of age registered in a North American school, college or university.

You spend two whole months seeing practically the whole of Europe. And you travel in comfort. On trains so clean and so fast (up to 100 mph) you wouldn't believe it. Of course, you can also take our cozy little trains that meander through our remote countryside—that's part of the privilege, too.

It can mean the Summer trip of your life, so don't wait. See your friendly Travel Agent or clip the coupon and we'll send you all the facts.

See if you don't agree. The day of the thumb may be over.

Eurailpass is valid in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

Eurailpass, Box 2168, Toronto 1, Ontario
Please send me your free Student-Railpass folder. ☐
Or your free Eurailpass folder with railroad map. ☐

Name _____
Street _____
City _____
Zone _____ Prov. _____

STUDENT-RAILPASS

It shows you Europe as the Europeans see it.

Fares subject to change.

THE ELM RESTAURANT
171 COLLEGE ST.
and proprietors are proud to announce the opening of the
ELM FLAME
BURGER
338 HURON (AT HARBORD)
967-1498
Mon. Mar. 11th
free donut and coffee till 11 a.m.

photosun

The Sensorator sunglasses that darken and lighten automatically.

Shorwey's
OPTICIANS

70 BLOOR ST. W.
4 OTHER LOCATIONS IN TORONTO
SEE YOUR YELLOW PAGES

review

- Arty and monied — p. 10
- A poet to doze by — p. 17
- Rod Stewart — p. 18

Very fashionable
— see p. 20

PEEK-A-BOO PIX ON PAGE 11!

How the art world excludes the genius by hard-sell packaging and the cult of relevance

The Art Crowd
Sophy Burnham
David McKay

Apologists for the contemporary art scene tend to look at it through an analogy. Every age produces its geniuses and as a rule respects and honours them.

Now that more money than ever is being spent on art and more artists than ever producing art, and now that the main factor responsible for previous neglect and dismissal of geniuses — dogged adherence to traditional forms and values — has been all but eliminated, the major contemporary artists must be of the quality of the great artists of the past. The Frank Stellas, the Roy Lichtensteins, and Jules Olitskys must needs be the modern Rembrandts and Manets and Cezannes.

It's incredible how much stock is actually put in this analogy considering how transparently wrong it really is. Even Herbert Spencer would recognize that when an oil field is discovered beneath a tradition bound village, the "natural" selective and evolutionary process of that village become perverted; and this perversion is very much analogous to the one which the art world has undergone. In the past, the selective machinery via which artists graduated upwards was very static and very much controlled by the artists themselves. Now that contemporary art has come to mean big money — a phenomenon which only goes back about twenty years — this selective process has become very disorderly, very arbitrary and the evolutionary process which has supervised the development of art has been destroyed. At no other time has genius had so little opportunity to develop itself to its fullest, and upon doing so, so little opportunity of receiving due recognition. The art world is presently manipulated by big money and by agents of big money. The Madison Avenue ethic of hard sell, catchy packaging, rapid turnover and "big name makes big sell" prevails while genius and beauty (running the risk of sounding melodramatic) are trampled underfoot. Genius work eight hours a day making beautiful paintings in his garage, two hours a day writing florid prose, spends twelve hours a week teaching at a teachers' college and the rest of the time mentally fixed on some day in the future: the men at the top at last having seen the truth, will he have his retrospective at the Whitney or the Museum of Modern Art? He doesn't bring his slides or paintings around to galleries anymore; he's tired of the rudeness, the condescension.

Sophy Burnham, who reveals in detail how the art market is "manipulated" (she hedges from the word, however) profiles this conspiracy bent on keeping our genius friend cloistered in his garage: all influence flows down from the top. A few prestigious galleries, a few prestigious collectors and a few prestigious critics rule by fiat. Any one of these, though capable of propelling an artist into big time, must have the cooperation of the others to keep him up there and keep the prices of his work climbing, and these parties do indeed operate very much in concert, even blatantly so. The elite of the art scene from a single very intimate (nepotism is rampant) and very exclusive family. Investment in contemporary art become a gamble only for the little fish; for these big at the top, in the family, it never is.

These are the actual mechanics of their operations: one of these parties, let's say a prestigious collector, has an artist recommended to him (our friend the genius is not and probably will never be in the position to receive such a recommendation). He sees something promising in the work. In the same motion that he is buying some of this artist's works at a low price, an act which by itself increases the value of that artist's works, the collector is arranging for one of the prestigious galleries to represent him. This gallery, upon consent, is now entitled to from one third to two thirds of the price any of this artist's works are sold for. The gallery, discreetly spreading the word that this artist is already in the collection of Mr. Big-Shit, arranges deals with other prestigious collectors. By the time the prestigious critic (there are very few of these) has been brought into the act and for the understood courtesy of a couple of paintings of his choice, has written a favorable review for this artist (this artist's work of course being integrable into our critic's overall philosophy), the process has almost been completed. Only now does the average rich prestige-hungry collector learn anything about this artist and they provide the big money. The market values of this artist's works keep growing for an indefinite period of time (perhaps, although it's doubtful, somewhat relative to their intrinsic values as art), and by the time the enthusiasm wears off and the bottom falls out of the prices, each member of our prestigious triumvirate will have made a handsome profit. There are, of course, some limitations upon this gambit. It cannot be carried out too often or too arbitrarily. There has to appear to be some definite method and continuity to the selective process.

Despite this system's corruption (and it appears to be this lack of kosherness that

FIND OUT YOUR CHILDREN'S DARK, HIDDEN, FORBIDDEN DESIRES PAGE 2 !

CONFIDENTIAL REVIEW

SUPER SCOOP

WHAT ENGINEERS REALLY DO

By TOM WALKOM
CONFIDENTIAL REVIEWER

When as an undergraduate engineer R.S. Segsworth sunk his teeth into that first juicy slab of Hart House raisin bread over 40 years ago, he didn't even know what kinky meant.

Now Segsworth, an engineering professor at U of T, plus a group of equally civic-minded engineering grads, are putting the spotlight on the seamy scenes of Skull history.

It's all squeezed into an innocuous-looking book with a devastating title — Cold Iron and Lady Godiva. Cold Iron purports to be a series of sketchy memoirs published to mark the centenary of U of T's faculty of engineering. The uninitiated might pass it over as a high-priced coffee-table item designed to gratify and glorify past generations of gouty, doughty engineers.

But to those in the know, Cold Iron is a book that blows the lid off what's really been happening at the south end of the campus (and elsewhere) since 1920.

As a former engineering student myself, I can only say 'hats off' to the raw guts of men like Segsworth who have chosen to spin out scenarios so hair-raising they make New York's crime and corruption Knapp Commission look like so many kiddies' Bible stories.

These are not pretty tales that Cold Iron tells: they involve men and their sisters; they involve violence; they involve crimes against property.

Confidential ret discovered by Uli Diemer

SARAH SAYS:

"Pickle, wick, ding-dong, dork"

Colours of Love: An Exploration of the Ways of Loving; by John Alan Lee;

New Press; $9.95.

The Beginner's Guide to Group Sex: Who

Does What to Whom and How; by Caroline

Gordon; Simon & Schuster; $1.50

John Alan Lee is a sociology professor at U of T who has written what is, without doubt, a serious book, if one that is designed to appeal to the layman (no pun intended) as well as to the academic. Caroline Gordon is the pseudonym of "a housewife, twenty-eight years old, with three children and a cat" who is capable of writing sentences like "Personally, I believe that someone wanting to make love to me is the most beautiful experience in the world," and who has written a exploitation potboiler.

See 'Raunchy!', p. 4

ARTSY DRUBS DISC

By DAVID BASSKIN
CONFIDENTIAL MUSICIAN

Just in case you think that yr. obt. svi. here is incapable of loathing a record (after a year of good many laudatory articles, praising one release after another) two record companies have come to my rescue with new releases of such utter nacreous vile loathsome trash that all my trusty readers deserve a warning to stay away from these two vinyl turkeys.

see 'vinyl', p. 4

see 'raisins', p. 3

NAZIS!

By DAVID BASSKIN
CONFIDENTIAL REVIEWER

A U of T library worker (who has insisted that his name be withheld) has told the CONFIDENTIAL REVIEWER that he has proof elements of the Nazi party have infiltrated the mammoth Roberts library. In a series of startling pix, the insider has given the scoop of the decade to the one newspaper with the guts to tell the whole story. Now read how insidious politicos have smothered a giant concrete fortress, situated smack in the middle of the nation's largest university!

"My first suspicion were aroused when I spotted the way the study desks were set up on the twelfth floor," the worker told us. "I figured that this must be their meeting place." Sure enough, close inspection of the area picked up more traces of hun infiltration. In several locations signs reading "No smoking, eating or drinking permitted on this floor" were spotted (see pix); what next? No breathing? Massive gates guard all exits from the Bookenwald area on the top five floor, and entry can only be gained by showing a "stack pass" to an official at an entrance desk.

It's high time for the gutless wimps who run this university to take a close look around and discover just who runs the show.

It's bad enough to have commies under the bedsheets every time you look around, but to have to contend with top-secret elements of the SS is just too much!

In case any peabrained sympathizers doubt this scorching evidence, just take a look about the next time you enter the building that has only half-jokingly been called "Ft. Book", "The Hemorrhoid of Hoskin" and "The Curse of St. George". Check out the miles of files in the microfilm room. WHY is there

NO
EATING or DRINKING
on this floor
SMOKING in designated areas only

What next: no breathing?

such a tiny catalogue for such a large collection? Is this the headquarters for Nazi files? And what about the "first" floor, never used by the public? What mad storm-trooper schemes are plotted down among the potted plants?

Keep you eyes open! Some call it paranoia, but we call it eternal vigilance! Before you know it, everything will be in the open: when signing out a book, a six-foot leatherclad official will appear behind you and demand to inspect your "reading matter" for subversive authors or improper material! Then, under the guise of complying with a "code of discipline" you will be taken to a back office and be compelled to sign a loyalty oath!

Now, some may doubt this. But eternal watchfulness is the price of academic freedom! As the pix on these pages indicate, now is the time to act! Let's clean Nazis out of the Roberts before they throw us from those conveniently-placed "reading rooms" that overlook the street.

It isn't too late!

Suspected Nazi hideout behind phony sign

Specially-designed "study booths" in the form of a swastika

Inside party member gathers secret information for nefarious schemes.

After a hard bout of studying, Joe College and Suzy Co-ed do "what comes naturally", unaware of fascist terror lurking behind locked doors!

What KIDS really go for.

'RAISINS' from page 1

And they hinge on "seemingly unlimited supplies of good raisin bread."

"How well one remembers the tables set up (in Hart House) with great pitchers of milk and seemingly unlimited supplies of good raisin bread!" says Segsworth.

How well indeed.

And how well one remembers the feeling one gets when one's hooked on raisin bread, and one's got the habit so bad that one can't even look at a raisin without feeling a dull throbbing pain below one's belt.

But that's another story, that one will get to another time.

In the hungry '30s, raisin bread just isn't enough — not for Segsworth and the class of 3T5. The raisin leads on to other behaviour — to wild parties like the School-at-Home where cherished family members are lured away from little towns like Calabogie or Bide-a-wee Sask., only to be subject to the wild "scamfare for 'sisters and cousins'" at the end.

"We took our social events seriously," deadpans Segsworth.

It doesn't stop there. Soon the engineers are (in Segsworth's words) "tapping" each other. Tapping is a bizarre form of punishment, one that combines pleasure with the pain. "Invariably," says Segsworth, "these affairs ended up with the fun and fellowship of dinner in the Great Hall at Hart House."

Raisin bread.

An effete corps of impudent snobs have always called engineers apolitical.

Hah!

Without musing a metaphor, Cold Iron pulls the proverbial wool from the effete eyes and blows the whistle on the real extent of mass engineering radical action.

Here are a few e.g.s:

"Under the influence of exuberance," as Segsworth so neatly puts it, the engineers of the Depression stage one of the first mass marches at U of T against private property.

Abandoning the values that are the very mortar of our democracy, the crazed Skulemen surge past the ticket-taker at a local movie theatre and demand the people's right to see free films.

Match that, Stephen Lewis.

Crusading journalist Alan Heisey documents the case of a group of 1940s engineers who are presumably continuing their attacks on the so-called privileges of the so-called bourgeoisie by smashing holes in the walls of the fashionable Rouge Hills Cold Golf Club.

"Crumbly fibreboard," sneers Heisey.

One of the stories Cold Iron doesn't tell, is the engineer's rampage through the just-opened University subway line in 1966. Usually that caper, with its damage is passed off as pointless vandalism. Only when we remember that former Ontario premier John Roberts officially opened the new subway, that this 'caper' was also billed as an "opening of the subway," and that a shaken John Roberts retired from office a scant five years later, do we realize the full political import of this action.

By the '70s, engineers are if anything, more militant—at least that's the impression given by Eric Miglin, last year's president of the left-wing Students for an Administrative Council. U of T engineers are the only group during the 1970 FLQ crisis willing to defy the Trudeau government and stage a prohibited march through downtown Montreal. Using classical anarchist tactics, the engineers avoid arrest by refusing to name a leader.

"The police were obviously not worried about our group's political leanings," says Miglin, raising the chilling spectre of a coalition between our lawmen and these self-admitted Bakuninists.

If ever the government needed an argument to ban the sale of raisin bread, this book is it.

Cold Iron and Lady Godiva: Engineering Education at Toronto 1920-1972

ed. by Robin Harris and Ian Montagnes

U of T Press, $10.

'VINYL' from from page 1

First comes The Baroque Connection from the worthies at Angel records. Since baroque and classical tunes have caught on when arranged as "pop" works, why not arrange some hits of the day to a baroque sound? Great reasoning, hm? Line up here to get an earful of "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on my Head", "Love Story" and other "favourites" arranged in the manner of Handel or Bach. Line up over here to have hot vinyl dripped onto your extremities. And this line is for devotees of self-mutilation. You get the idea. What conductor Michel Gnanot and the Paris Opera Orchestra have done is simply to annex familiar themes from baroque music to the above-mentioned pop tunes. The rhythms and classical licks are relegated to the background, and the CHFI-style glop oozes out of your woofers and tweeters.

Adorned with tacky cover art, vapid liner notes and a $6.98 tag, this item is as sure a candidate for the delete bins as I've ever seen. There is a copy of this vinyl turd waiting for the first brave soul who comes to the varsity offices to claim it. Fearing nausea overload from running it on my stereo, I confide that it is of no further use to me. C'mon, somebody take it... like new! almost never played!

However, bad taste isn't confined to giant music corporations like EMI. Here in our home and native land, a group called The Hotel Orchestra has deigned to issue a disc, containing (ready?) updated versions of swing and big-band classics. Ignore for the moment the plentiful supply of originals by the finest big bands of the 30's and anything so good. This year is your last chance. Your friend, Alfred."

"Dear Santa: I think it is too bad that you only work at Christmas time. I hope soon you will get a full time job like other people. Love, Bobby."

"Dear Mr. Santa Claus, I want a boat, a gun, a plane, a glove, a cowboy suit, a train set, a football, roller skates, a bike, a space helmet, boxing gloves, a pen knife, a magic set. That is all I can think of. I will write tomorrow. Love Sayre."

"Dear Santa Clause, My name is Robert. I am 6 years old. I want a rifle, a pistol, a machine gun, bullets, a hand grenade, dynamite, and tear gas. I am planning a surprise for my big brother. You friend Robert."

It's a cheery little book. The archeologists of the future should get a chuckle out of it.

sarah rotschild

Confidential paederast

40's, don't even bother to ask why these pieces should be redone, and consider the instrumentation. There's one trumpet, one trombone, bass, piano and drums. Is this a big band? Where's the other trumpets, three bones and (above all) the six saxophones? Glad you asked. They're synthesized.

That's right, nostalgia fans! What's worse, with the marginally possible exception of the side A opening cut, "South Ramparts Street Parade," these cats just can't cut it. Their "In the Mood" is a dirge, Ellington's great "Caravan" is an embarrassment, and "Tuxedo Junction" is enough to make you swear off records for good. The programming of the synthesizers is the best I've ever heard. The sax-sound is virtually identical to that of the instrument, as are the extra trumpets and trombones. So why bother?

Prediction: if you're unfortunate enough to have to work in an office or store where CHFI, CKFM or Muzak is poured out at you, you stand to hear a lot of The Hotel Orchestra. It's just what the tea-cozy set loves, music stripped of its heart and totally inoffensive, just the thing to give Mr. and Mrs. Smug a smile as they read Reader's Digest or gaze at their Walter Keene reproductions. If you want to hear what a big band really sounds like, check out any of the current recordings of Ellington, Woody Herman, Buddy Rich, Stan Kenton, Don Ellis or other jazz greats. Don't go near these bloodless troglodytes until you've recovered from your lobotomy.

This record, too, awaits the first reader to walk in and ask for it. Arrrrrrrrrrgh, as Hunter Thompson would say.

dave basskin

An ENGINEERING FRACAS alleged to be Skule initiation of 1914.

THIS RAUNCHY WORDSTER'S THE GALILEO OF KINKY SEX

Sociologist JOHN LEE collects FACTS!!!

So it should not be surprising that they have managed to write two books that have a good deal in common.

Like a love of accumulating facts.

Ms. Gordon provides the prospective swinger with a handy-dandy set of definitions (this really is a beginner's guide). Like: "Buttocks: The rounded fleshy portions of the lower back on which one sits. Synonym: Ass, Backside, Bum, Rump, Tush, Fanny, Cheeks."

Or "Fats: Overweight individuals."

Or "Penis: Male sex organ. Synonym: Cock, Dick, Joint, Love Stick, Joy Stick, Meat, Organ, Head, Peter, Prick, Rod, Tool, Gun Piece, Thing, Schmuck, Wand, Whang, Prong, Bone, Bird, Pole, Flagpole, Banana, Pickle, Wick, Putz, Ding Dong, Dark, Key, Piston, Equipment, Sword, Mushroom, Staff, Shaft, Pecker."

Professor Lee assumes a somewhat greater degree of knowledge.

But unfortunately he is a sociologist.

Not only a sociologist, of course. As he says, "No amount of research could have provided me with the knowledge of loving and being loved which it has been my great privilege to experience. I chose to study love not merely because it is important and interesting in general, but because it has been important to me. I especially hold dear the revelations of love shown me by Jean, Chris, and Francis, none of whom are with me now, for I, too, pursue the impossible dream."

But a sociologist, even one who has lovers with two-gendered names, knows only one approach. Like a magpie, he must collect as many bright, pretty facts, as he can.

His methodology: "First, I collected hundreds of statements about the nature of love. The sources ranged from Plato to Freud, St. Paul to D.H. Lawrence, the Book of Ruth to Doris Lessing. Each statement was recorded on a file and cross-referenced to any related statements by other authors, under general rubrics such as 'the relationship of love and jealousy'. When more than 4000 cards were on hand, I began grouping into sets or clusters the ideas about love that seemed to occur together most often."

He then found he had six general clusters which he classified as the types of love. Based on this, he evolved 1500 "Love-Story Card-Sort" cards, depicting various situations. "Each card contains a brief description of an event, idea, or emotion which might possibly occur in a love relationship." The respondent is asked to sort the cards so that the pattern of his or her love relationship emerges. All of which produced a correlation pattern between eight major and secondary types of love, and a number of characteristics present or absent in different relationships.

And so another Ph.D. thesis was completed.

The problem with Lee's approach, as I see it, is not that he has tried to bring the cold eye of science into the sanctuary of love. Far from it. Love is an important human experience, and is certainly one that deserves to be analyzed. If anything is clear, it is that the attitude to love as something mystical, that solves all problems, has been the cause of the falling apart of many relationships and much unhappiness. There is no reason to suppose that emotion and reason are mutually exclusive. Rather, they should be able to combine in bettering a wide variety of human activity and experience.

But the usefulness of Lee's method is severely limited. First of all, he by no means solves a problem central to many efforts at classification, even though he states his awareness of it: "Typologies may easily degenerate into circular reasoning. You erect several types out of scattered and superficial observations, then sort a variety of experiences into these indefinite types. Behold, the existence of the types is confirmed!"

The problem is not avoided simply by using systematic and reliable observations instead of "scattered and superficial" ones, or by ensuring that the types are related to "real data."

For it is possible to construct classifications based on any kind of data, whether it be the season in which the love affair began, or the size of the woman's breasts, and sometimes even to find significant correlations between kinds of criteria. The point is of course, that it is not sufficient to produce correlations that allow you to isolate "types" of one thing of another. There are an infinite number of possible types. The classification has to mean something, has to produce some kind of meaningful conclusions. Otherwise it becomes yet another example of the fact-grubbing that establishment sociologists engage in lieu of trying to explain what goes on in society.

It should be pointed out to Professor Lee, that for example, the biological taxonomies to which he compares his work were neither founded nor made use of in further study without explanatory hypotheses. In social science, the point is more crucial yet, since social phenomena are much more affected even in the short run by historical and environmental factors than those of the natural or physical sciences. The nature of love and related relationships changes far more from century to century and from culture to culture than does the nature of, say, squirrel life. Which makes a collection of data about young Britishers or Canadians rather useless in itself. As it stands, Professor Lee's study is simply another example of the abstracted empiricism that C. Wright Mills deplored. Lee's hope, he says, is "that other social scientists will adapt, modify and improve these techniques and apply them to the collection of more and more data." For what? To add to that great sprawling dung-heap of data that our social scientists love to play in, while avoiding explaining anything?

If anything is clear, it should be obvious that the category of human relations that are "clustered" around, under, and about the "classification" of love are in something of a state of crisis in this society. So some serious analysis is definitely called for, analysis that takes into account historical changes, social pressures and interconnections, and alternatives. To this task, Professor Lee's ahistorical, relativistic (there are several kinds of love, love relationships aren't faring too well these days, etc., and that's that), and uncritical volume has little to contribute. A classification is no substitute for analysis. Anyone who thinks that the way to tackle the problem of unhappiness is to "improve the odds through careful study" is unlikely to do much to further our understanding of the movements and crises our society is undergoing, and how to change its direction for the better.

Caroline Gordon, at least like Galileo, has an understanding that the world does move. She suggests that group sex may be a way to reverse the ever-increasing divorce rate, especially since monogamy, the supposed ideal, "is never even hardly probable" anyway.

Still, her book is not quite on the intellectual level of The Harrod Experiment (the book, not the movie) and with its assurance that group sex is perfectly compatible with being a Republican, a business executive, and a pillar of society, it may be an indication that it is unlikely to get at the root causes of our major social problems.

Maybe she took sociology in college.

At any rate, she too has a questionnaire which she provides for the prospective swinger. I took the test, and my results indicate that there's a good chance that I "possess the mentality and maturity to take Swinging in (my) stride". I got points for things like going to parties and "sometimes" liking "to touch, feel, and fondle someone of the opposite sex" which more than compensated for my wrong answers, like not being "fascinated by new gadgets" and for not "Always" having "sexual dreams about attractive people you may have met during the day". (Nobody is perfect, after all, even swingers.)

Her passion for facts, at least, is more immediately useful than Professor Lee's. Now I know that it "is proper Swing etiquette to wash your genitals after each encounter" and that I shouldn't "make the mistake of thinking that you shouldn't wear underwear to the party."

Which knowledge may come in useful for anyone who finds him — or herself "Being Horny: Sexually tense and greatly in need of sexual release, usually through intercourse." Synonym: Looking for Action." Swinging might be a good alternative to Masturbation: Self-stimulation of the sexual organ.

sarah rothschild

Friday, 8, 1974

NEW FLICKS MIX TRICKS

By BOB BOSSIN
OUR HOLLYWOOD
CORRESPONDENT

There are so many good movies around next week a body can hardly count them. Cries and Whispers continues at Cinecity. Last Tango in Paris is back downtown at the Uptown, at what are misnamed "popular" prices. Last Tango by the way, is a truly controversial movie, in the sense that men of goodwill respond to it in the most varied ways. Our reviewer hated it. We thought it was great: funny, erotic, well drawn, well acted and rich with things to ponder.

Friday and Saturday, St. Mike's revives Sounder, an example of mass art at its best with a beautiful performance by Cecily Tyson. Or, on Friday, there's Truffaut's perfected The Wild Child and The Thief of Paris at the Revue, Saturday the Revue switches to Truffaut's masterpiece Jules and Jim, with his short Mischief Makers, running through Tuesday. Or, on Saturday, Cinematek brings back Bill MacVicar's favorite, Sunday, Bloody Sunday.

On Sunday, St. Mike's shows the first of the three-part Apu trilogy, Saga of the Road by Satyajit Ray. On Monday, Ontario College of Art shows Claude Jutra's early feature A Tout Prendre and the Kensington gives you another chance to see Robert Altman's magnificent reworking of the private-eye movie, The Long Goodbye. It's on for the week with something called 110th Street. Tuesday and Wednesday, the Roxie adds a double-bill of The Hireling and The Go-Between to the general surf. On Wednesday The Revue switches to The Four Hundred Blows and The Soft Skin, more Truffaut, then it switches to Trell's offends Burnham most), operating as a closed system effecting only those people within it, — filthy rich culture-vultures—it does not harm society at large. However, the influence of this system extends beyond itself in two ways, both of which are very harmful. Its influence extends into the operations of public galleries and museums and consequently very much into the public attitudes towards art and beauty (the public that I'm dealing with is still a fairly limited one), and it extends into and perverts the general development or evolution of art. It corrupts the process by which young artists develop and make decisions. First to deal with the corruption of public taste and aesthetics and then with the corruption of art in general.

Will LIZ TAYLOR show at SMC movie orgy Sunday? What will FATHER JOHN KELLY, SMC principal, say?

The Emigrants for Friday and Saturday. Play it Again Sam and Bad Company (at the Roxie) would be good some other week, though they hardly stand up for the memorable period Mar. 8 to 15. La Bonne Annee (at The International) and The Last Detail (at the Odeon York) do though. Thank Heavens nobody is showing The Projectionist or Wee Geordie.

The men who run public museums are not, as they should be, professional scholars or aesthetes, but professional administrators and hence, by definition, ambitious and idiotic. While these institutions are supposed to be immune from the vicissitudes of the art market and public taste, they are not. Indeed, these administrators judge their own success and their success is judged by others on the basis of their being able to respond to these artificially created and passing enthusiasms. Gratification must be immediate and is measured by turnstile meters and inches of newspaper copy. The gallery and museum directors look to the contemporary art market and hence to the big-fish of the contemporary art market for guidance.

When a prestigious public gallery or museum shows or buys the work of a contemporary artist, the value of that artist's works automatically rises. One of the more disturbing sidelights on the operation of public galleries and museums is that the administrator is not only often intimately friendly with those who stand to profit most from this event or transaction (anyone owning works by that artist stands to profit) but often stands to profit personally, i.e. he owns something by the artist in question. The administrator rakes in his cash, gets into the newspaper, gets photographed shaking hands with some prominent local Blacks, stages a wild party or two in one of the period rooms and moves on to bigger and better things. Public intelligence reaches a record ebb. The galleries and museums which should exist to combat those most potent of modern philistinism: the belief in the need for immediately apparent and gratifying "relevance", and the "chauvinism of the present days," not only fail to do so but sanction them.

More disturbing than the impact the manipulations of the art scene have on the public attitudes towards art, is the impact that it has on the evaluation of art itself. An artist can live comfortably on a college teacher's pay, but this is not enough. Many artists would rather work with one hundred feet of studio space in New York, the seat of all significant recognition, than work with ten thousand feet of studio space in Toledo, Ohio, regardless of how their work suffers because of it. Recognition is so important to an artist that he will often convince himself that any work which attracts it is good and paint accordingly.

The commercial invasion of art has moved artists away from the study of life and the contemplation of beauty. The art marked doesn't really concern itself with the buying and selling of paintings but the buying and selling of names — brand names. The painting itself is merely packaging for the name and the same laws that control the packaging of other brand names control the packaging of brand names in art, (incidentally, it's interesting to note how many of the big names in contemporary art started out in commercial art). The package must be catchy, readily identifiable, modern looking, and finally and most importantly, homogeneous. There can be no mistake about what you're intended to notice, about the most important thing: HERSHEY chocolate bar. X-LAX candied laxatives.

Since artists themselves no longer control the process of selection and development, original work has little chance of gaining recognition.

ANDY WARHOL. Burnham suggests the same problem when (with insufficient indignation) she remarks how the career of a contemporary artist can very often accrete around a single idea, or more to the point, around a single gimmick. Franck Stella mapped out his career on the pot one day, spent two or three years perfecting his technique and has been turning out FRANK STELLAS ever since at thirty-thousand a shot. Our friend the Genius does not produce homogeneous work; the works of genius seldom are. His paintings are rich and multivarious and although there is a symmetry of detail and cooperation of parts forming a coherent whole, this whole cannot be conveniently separated from its parts and unfurled as a banner: R. B. GENIUS. Anyway, the name just isn't catchy while the city and street address of his garage are déclassé.

david wise

Brand names, like Hershey's Ex-Lax and Warhol have become the new criteria of esthetic excellence.

If Rembrandt were alive today he'd have to hire a marketing manager.

Ecstatic culture-lovers find the shelves of their neighborhood supermarkets crammed with objets d'art.

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55% . . .

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer. Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers. Vainqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity. Vainqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow.

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dynamo electric lighting with generator; back carrier; padded seat; chrome chain guard; and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

		RETAIL	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE			IMPORTED RETAIL	PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MARK III	WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER 10 SPEED	149.00	95.00	AMERICAN ARROW SIII	ALUMINUM FRAME, PINLESS, SAFETY LEVER, QUICK RELEASE WITH CHROME FORK, CAMPANOLO DERAULLEUR 10 SPEED	195.00	125.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI	WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER	149.00	95.00
AMERICAN ARROW SII	QUICK RELEASE NO CHROME	159.00	101.00
VANQUEUR OLYMPIC	QUICK RELEASE	169.00	110.00
VANQUEUR	NO SAFETY LEVER WING NUT	149.00	95.00
LA PERLE	WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	149.00	85.00
VOLKSCYCLE	QUICK RELEASE SAFETY LEVER	159.00	101.00
VOLKSCYCLE	CHROME, QUICK RELEASE	159.00	110.00
VOLKSCYCLE	WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	149.00	95.00
MODENA	SAFETY LEVER, CHROME, QUICK RELEASE	159.00	110.00
				ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW SIII HAVE SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAULLEURS
				VISTA	WING NUT MEN OR LADIES 5 SPEED	149.00	95.00
				GX2000	LADIES, FENDER, CARRIER, REFLECTOR 3 SPEED	89.00	63.00
				TIGER	LADIES SUNTOUR DERAULLEUR 10 SPEED	119.00	80.00
				LA PERLE	DUOMATIC FOLDING BICYCLE	99.00	79.00
				SAFARI OR CAPRI	FOLDING BICYCLE	79.00	58.50

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.
- Open Mon.-Fri. 2 p.m.-6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-2 p.m.

- Brake cable and manufacturer's material defects. Warranty for three months on all brand names.
- Minimum service charge for assembling.
- We have a professional mechanic stand by to give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept chargex.

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #36C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario
Phone: 749-6171
Your Chargex card is accepted

Rhymester's slick disc inundates unsuspecting public with waves of drugstore banality

To You With Love
Terry Rowe
Kates Productions

Bzzzzzzt. A rum tada tum tada. It's Sunday morning again. It arrives every week at the same time. The radio beside my bed that has been playing music all night now takes a break...

A clock-radio buzzér, a few strains of non-descript instrumental music, and then Terry Rowe begins to read the first poem on his record, To You With Love.

Twang. Twang. To give roses is supposed to mean a token of love. I can't afford those greenhouse specials. Will you settle for a handful of dandelions that will give you sticky hands as you prepare them for display? When I was a young boy I always looked for the biggest and prettiest in the field to give away to the someone I loved. So why should today be any different? I have more love now. I'll wrap my love around this fresh bouquet and like that little boy of long ago, I'll give you these flowers without the rose, and give them with love. And that's the most precious flower ever to grow. To you with love. Twang. Twang.

I am supposed to waste my time reviewing this?! My annoyance makes me supercilious. Ah, the sweet sweet sounds of banality! Oh Terry, shall I compare thee to Walter Brennan among the nightingales? Stompin' Tom in Juliet's tomb? A dandelion by any other name would smell very much like a dandelion... Baby, you schtink!

The record is based on a book of the same name published by Lester and Orpen Limited, Toronto. No less than 33 people have gathered together to make Terry Rowe's poetry a saleable commodity (count them, they're listed on the back cover). He has been produced, directed, composed, arranged, conducted, performed, engineered, designed, and coordinated. The result is very like an advertisement, and very unlike a product which I would consider buying.

However, many people would buy this record and enjoy it. I am certain that To

If Romeo and Juliet had evaded the clutches of the Grim Reaper, would they have moved to Don Mills and exchanged copies of To You With Love at Christmas?

You With Love would be a great hit in the drugstore trade, along with cards and little books like "For My Sweetheart", "To a Dear Friend", and "Thinking of You". This is poetry for the people who feel that T.S. Eliot and Co. are nasty, dirty, and incomprehensible. (Rowe has apparently written another book entitled The Warmth of Christmas, which would no doubt also appeal to the same people.)

I hasten to add though that Rowe's work is not poetry "for people" in Milton Acorn's sense (now there's an interesting book: More Poems for People, NC Press Ltd., 1972, $1.75.) Rowe is not so self-aware as to have identified himself with a particular audience, an oppressed group to whom he will minister comfort, etc. Like Rod McKuen and other culture sharks, he seems to imagine that what he has to say is of universal appeal and importance. At least, this is what Kates Productions, the producers of Rowe's record, seem to imagine.

Sure, we all like to hear about love. And most of us can't afford those "greenhouse specials" either. But some of us take our poetry and music too seriously to be patient when the same old things are said again, and said badly.

A rum tada tum tada. There's so much I want to share with you. Spring's gentle rain ruining today's dry cleaning... I'm going to take you around the world and back. Come, take my hand. We'll walk around the block... Come, and when we come back, we'll make love to the sound of the sea in stereo. WOOOOOOSH (and other sea noises).

heather kirk

Many prominent intellectuals, including Jean Paul Sartre, have personally endorsed this critical Teach-in

TEACH IN on RACISM and the UNIVERSITY featuring Ashley Montagu

FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1974
CONVOCATION HALL
UNIVERSITY of TORONTO

"Academic racism" is alive and still well in the universities. Arthur Jensen of Berkeley and William Schockley of Stanford say hereditary factors give blacks lower intelligence than whites. Richard Herrnstein of Harvard claims "unemployment may run in the genes like bad teeth". Edward Banfield of Pennsylvania explains southern Italian poverty by the "amoral" character of its residents. Dr. John Baker of Oxford, and Hans Eysenck of London, both prominent English scholars, also number in the ranks of the "academic racists".

Pseudo-scientific theories that justify racism are nothing new to the university; these modern ideologues merely rewrite garbage that has been around for decades. But their influence is staggering. They are published in the most prestigious academic journals, they teach at the most prominent universities, and their books and articles are used at universities from one end of the continent to the other — including the University of Toronto.

10:00 AM
Medical Sciences Auditorium

Prof. Grant Cooper, Dept. of History at University of Arkansas in Little Rock: "Banfield's theories of cultural deprivation". The University of Arkansas is currently trying to fire Dr. Cooper for fighting the use of Banfield's books on university courses.

Prof. Donald Smith and Prof. Sinclair Robinson, Dept. of French, at Carleton University in Ottawa: Racist Attitudes and Approaches Towards the Teaching of "Joual" or Canadian French.

Roy Brown, Chicago: "Genetic and Cultural Theories of Racism": Mr. Brown, a former janitor at the University of Chicago, is writing a book rebutting the theories of Jensen and Banfield.

Banfield's book about Italian amorality is taught at the U of T. Herrnstein and Jensen find their way into psychology and education classes. Carl Bereiter of OISE professes that black ghetto children have a "non-logical mode of speech". Ian Hector, of the Medical School, claims Italians are "culturally predisposed" to take injury.

The Teach In On Racism and the University is being held to raise and expose the racist myths that hide under the cloak of scholarship. The issues are vital. They are being debated in universities, professional associations, and journals around the world.

We urge all professors and students to cancel classes on March 8 and to attend this important Teach In.

1:00 PM
Convocation Hall

Ashley Montagu, world renowned anthropologist, author of some forty books: "Race, Intelligence, and the Intelligence Testers".

Prof. Tobias Schwarz, Dept. of Physiology, University of Connecticut, and Co-Chairman of the Committee Against Racism: "Academic Racism and the Fight Against It".

3:30 PM
Medical Sciences Auditorium

Guy Sifton, grand reporter of Le Nouvel Observateur: "Racism in France and the Persecution of North Africans".

Charles Roach, a Toronto lawyer: "Racist Immigration Policies in Canada and Their Connection With The University".

Jerry Green, a Toronto general practitioner, member of the Health Liberation Collective: "Medicine and Racism".

8:30 p.m. International Student Centre:

Party: everybody welcome. We can talk about how to oppose 'academic racism' in Canadian Universities.

Sponsors:

- 1) Arts and Science Student Union
- 2) Engineering Society

- 3) Graduate Association of Students in Political Science
- 4) Graduate Students' Association, OISE
- 5) Graduate Students' Union

- 6) Linguistic Students' Union
- 7) Medical Society
- 8) Political Economy Course Union

- 9) Jean Paul Sartre
- 10) Students' Administrative Council
- 11) Victoria University Students' Administrative Council.

"THE ORIGINAL"
NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

WINNER
1970 1ST ANNUAL TORONTO
PIZZA AWARD
STAR WEEK'S JUNE '71
PIZZA CONTEST
620 YONGE
NORTH OF WELLESLEY

DINING ROOM OPEN 11 AM
1 AM MON.-SAT
SUN 3 PM-1 AM
TAKE-OUT AND DELIVERY
DELIVERY FROM 4 PM-1 AM

925-1736
Award winning pizza as you like it

P.J. I SUPPORT:

1. Students on Staffing Committees.
2. SAC Position on Discipline (Repeal).
3. Representative Student Politicians.

Give Your Opinion

VOTE JARRETT

PETER JARRETT-VIC 3
FULL-TIME A&S UNDERGRAD GOVERNING COUNCIL

unclassified

LOST - RED & WHITE STRIPED KNAPSACK containing student's clothes. Substantial reward. No questions asked. Phone Cam. 928-2609

ONE PERSON NEEDED TO SHARE HOUSE with four others. Near campus. (Sussex and Major) 967-1038

GRADUATE STUDENTS in Humanities and Social Sciences - KITTY HOFFMAN asks for your vote to elect her as your representative to The Governing Council.

FREELANCE WRITERS REQUIRED to prepare papers on University subjects they are fluent in or have majored in. Essay Services, 57 Spadina Ave. Suite 105, M-F 12-8 p.m.

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Professor's wife. IBM electric with carbon ribbon. Campus pick-up/delivery. Have done dissertations, books, term papers, minor editing. Neat, accurate, prompt service. 267-8721.

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4. 757-0621.

QUEBEC SKI TOUR March 17-22 $79. Five days of skiing at Mt. St. Anne. All transportation and excellent accommodation included. For information write Canadian Ski Tours, 25 Taylorwood Dr., Irlington or phone Gordon Allen 247-2339

YOU'RE GONNA BE ALRIGHT, JAMIE-BOY a situation comedy by David Freeman. Tues. to Sun. at 8:30, matinees Thurs. 2 p.m., Sun. 2:30 p.m. Tarragon Theatre, 300 Bridgeman Ave. 1 block N. of Dupont 2 blocks E. of Bathurst 531-1827

DO YOU HAVE ANY OLD UNIVERSITY ESSAYS lying around collecting dust? They could be worth money. Essay Services, 57 Spadina Ave. Suite #105 366-6549 M-F, 12-8 p.m.

SATISFY YOUR OTHER APETITE Come to the AOTT Spaghetti Dinner on March 10th from 4:30 - 7:30 at 24 Madison Ave. All you can eat for $1.25 Proceeds to the Canadian Arthritis Foundation.

PART TIME EMPLOYMENT - Assist 2 graduate students with psychology research $2.50 hr. Approximately 40 hrs. work. Must have flexible schedule. Call Karl or Jan 928-3402

EXAMINERS WANTED - Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T", Toronto M6B 4A3.
NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING? Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674

FLYING TO ENGLAND? One way ticket $79. - one only - For end of March. Call Les 363-2244, local 237 or 925-7394 (evenings)

HARPSICORDS MADE using historic principles for reasonable prices. Several models available. George Haah 920-8841

ROOM AVAILABLE IN STUDENT HOUSE. Quiet, share bath, kitchen, cooking, 20 minutes from campus by T.T.C. Through summer and next year if desired. Phone 537-2775.

LOST - GOLD FISH SHAPED BROACH on St. George St., between Women's Union & Roberts. Finder contact A. Claener at 928-2289 or 924-8851. Generous reward.

LOST: WOMAN'S GLASSES in turquoise case, early Feb. on campus. Reward. Phone 961-2975

FREELANCE SECRETARIAL SERVICE. Will provide secretarial service from my home. Assignments taken by mail or phone. Reasonable Rates. Please call 783-3003.

WAITRESSES OR WAITERS WANTED fully licensed dining lounge - must have tidy appearance. Part time only (12:00 noon to 2:30 p.m. or 6:00 to 10:00 p.m.) Monday to Friday. Call 466-2023 for appointment.

TO SUBLET: large mostly furnished six room apartment Avenue Rd. & Bloor. Available around May 1st until Sept. 1st. $345./mo. or $110/mo./person. Parking included. 921-6907

DINE AT LEISURE before the theatre in the Gallery Club, Hart House.

EXPERIENCED, SENIOR TYPING WANTED, essays, letters, envelopes. Call 368-7252. Day or evening. Rate on essays 65 cents per page

TIRED OF THE CITY? want a weekend or summer retreat? I br. available in shared furnished 5 br. farmhouse on 100 acre farm overlooking Rice Lake, near Peterborough. Sept. 1974 - August 1975. $75/month. Call Ron 967-4624 - 928-8768.

IMMEDIATELY AVAILABLE. Quiet furnished bed-sitting room. Fifteen-minute walk from campus. $16/week includes linens, utensils. Shirley Walton 921-4351, 29 Chichester Avenue, Annex area.

WHY FREEZE? Used furs from $10. new from $99. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets, Muskies, Raccoon, Rabbit etc. EXCELLENT SELECTION. Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGDER FURS 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077 Open Thurs. Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

Fairport LP could use new songbird

Fairport Convention
Nine
A & M: $6.98

Fairport fans will be delighted to learn that this collection of tunes is played by the same five who waxed the group's last album, Rosie. To the layman this would seem as nothing unusual, but one must consider that throughout Fairport's history, their personnel have changed like the scheduled guests at the El Mocambo. Consequently the overall sound is much tighter and more impressive than any of their previous albums. But where is Sandy Denny?

Since her departure (after Liege and Lief) the group's members have all attempted to croak their way through a song. And even with the new members, (superb instrumentalists), they have neglected the need for a strong lead vocalist. Acoustic guitarist Trevor Lucas, veteran Fairporter - bassist Dave Pegg, and violinist Dave Swarbrick all sing on Nine with Swarbrick no longer dominating the vocal chores for the band. A good thing. He usually sounds like the Bananaman singing oily-dolty-dolty, (which is fine for their token traditional material. Fortunately most of it is instrumental anyway.) In all fairness, Fairport's vocals aren't that bad, but a band of their obvious instrumental ability and background, owe themselves a singer. Fairport have again used their album formula - two tight, clever instrumentals, one or two traditional English ballads, and an ever increasing move toward American styled music, helped immensely by the astonishingly excellent lead guitar work of Britisher Jerry Donahue. Long-time Fairport drummer Dave Matlock, who always shines on their albums, saves the dirge-ballad "Polly on the Shore", from falling into 16 RPM.

Two instrumentals, "The Brilliancy Medley", and Donahue's Jerry Reed influenced guitar composition "Tokyo", feature as usual intricate guitar-violin synchronization. Another track, "To Althea from Prison", sounds at times suspiciously like "Auld Lang Syne" but remains very nice, especially the repeated riff ending. Other cuts like "Bring 'em Down", and the countryish "Pleasure and Pain" feature outstanding violin work by Dave Swarbrick as well as some of the most beautiful soaring guitar that we've ever heard. This applies as well to the production of the album which is better appreciated at a higher volume.

For someone who's never heard Fairport before, this would make an excellent Easter gift (even to yourself), and to Fairport enthusiasts who don't as yet own a copy, well... have I ever lied to you before?

mink

Andy Williams croons smooth cocktail rock

Solitaire
Andy Williams

One of the finest easy-listening rock albums (well, cocktail rock, perhaps) obtains when hot ticket in the production racket Richard Perry (credits include Harry Nilsson, Carly Simon, and lately Ringo's production chores) teams up with one of the music businesses' purveyors of "the standard", Andy Williams. What results when a fine voice like Andy's meshes with Perry's gilt-ear for lush and balanced production and the assorted instrumentation of luminaries such as pianist Nicky Hopkins, drummers Jim Keltner and Hal Blaine, bassmen Klaus Voorman and Joe Osborne, with sundry string and horn arrangers, can only be described as a triumph for old-timer Williams. The selection of tunes from distinguished writers Neil Sedaka, Stevie Wonder, Nilsson, George Harrison and Paul McCartney could hardly impair Andy's chances on this solid entry.

The title song "Solitaire", as well as "Getting Over You" give Andy's voice a chance to display the range that has kept him alive in the "middle of the road" catalogue at Columbia for so many years. On the Harrison tune "That Is All" which was included on Living In The Material World, Andy's multi-dubbed vocal blends perfectly with the work of Keltner, Voorman, and Hopkins, all three of whom worked on the composition on Harrison's album. Worthy of note as well is the duet Andy sings with himself on the Sonny Curtis (The Crickets) tune that was such a monster for the Everly Brothers in March, 1961 - "Walk Right Back". Andy's performance on Solitaire is so good that even the most hard-hearted music-lover might allow the album to contract against the galling memories that Andy's TV program in the mid-sixties discovered, fostered and promoted the notorious Osmond Brothers—and that's saying a bunch.

dick loney

Flashy Rod plays for the moola

Coast to Coast Overture and Beginners
Rod Stewart/Faces
Mercury/Polydor; $7.29

The most interesting thing about this new Rod Stewart/Faces LP is the distribution deal surrounding it.

Rod Stewart has been recording solo albums for some seven or eight years now on Mercury Records. But Stewart is also the lead singer of the Faces, who record on the Warner Brothers label. Now the problems really started a few years back, when Stewart's excellent solo album Every Picture Tells a Story became a runaway best seller. Stewart's next release would be with part of the Faces and the music world would regard it as a followup album. So the jousting between the two record companies, Warner and Mercury began.

Warner seemed to be leaning hard on Stewart's name when there was any publicity for the Faces.

Chinese.. a veritable chop suey...

Both companies have recently arranged a compromise to share the harvest of the Faces/Stewart money-making machine. The Overture And Beginners LP bears both names (Rod Stewart/Faces) and is released on Mercury. But the 8-track cartridges and cassettes are on Warner Brothers. No doubt the situation will be reversed for the next release.

The main problem inherent in any live recording is the unavoidable separation of the visual and audio elements. With Stewart and the Faces being as visually dominant as they are, a live LP would seem to be an uphill battle. Actually the situation is a touch worse.

Stewart is a flashy rock star. In a sense he's really the ultimate parody of the rock and roll singer - tight satin pants, spangled t-shirt, and sculptured hair-do. And there isn't a piece of posturing that he doesn't know either. Stewart flails around the microphone a lot, too. It's the kind of stunt that adds colour to the stage act, but wreaks havoc for the sound engineer. The vocal, sound - levels bounce around as the mike sweeps through the air. Most of that has been compensated for, but it still sounds like it's been fixed up.

Generally, Stewart's raspy vocals are a bit weak and ineffectual and to worsen matters the rest of the Faces sound as if they couldn't be less interested. Sloppy instrumentals work around with only keyboard artist Ian McLagan playing anywhere near professional standards.

There isn't a cut in the lot that hasn't seen a better performance on another LP. "Stay With Me", "Angel" and John Lennon's "Jealous Guy" are the only tunes that approach a level of passability. Unfortunately the few mumbled chorus lines of "Every Picture Tells a Story", tacked on the end of "Too Bad" represents the lowest point of this very low album.

Stewart sums it all up nicely at the end of the record. With the crowd cheering for more he says "Thank you for your time...And money." That's what it's all about.

allen mandell

Friday, March 8, 1974

A nifty, if trippy book

Real Time 2: A Catalog of ideas and information; edited by John Brockman & Edward Rosenfeld; Doubleday Anchor; $4.35

Real Time is a trip, self-consciously so. It's full of "new technologies", "new perceptions", "media-mixes", "communication", "system", "software", "interdisciplinary viewpoints", and "consciousness programs".

More concretely, it's a book, 256 pages long, with 108 entries on various topics, grouped under the themes of Communication; Human Systems; Mind; Science and Technology; Trends, and People. Generally, each topic consists of discussion of a specific book, with a brief summary of the contents and author, and longer excerpts (and many diagrams and pictures) from the book itself. All of which is supposed to provide you with a broad range of ideas and knowledge.

When you've said that, there's not much left to be said in a review. The book can be criticized for being too trippy, for being too infatuated with various technologies (including "software" technology), for being oblivious to the existence of power and politics, for often uncritically falling into the assumptions of behaviourist social science (or "pop" futurology if there is a difference.) On the positive side, it does provide some good information and ideas, and does mention some valuable authors.

Topics include: non-verbal communication; defense of poetry; radical soft-ware; independent film-making; architectural design; the roots of coincidence; medicine, mind, and music; the computer; biology and the future of man; on the track of unknown animals.

sarah rothschild

...food: ...of rock, books and theatre

Toronto Women's Theatre premiered their first production Good Night Ladies at the Colonnade Theatre on Tuesday night. This evening of theatre, directed by Cheryl Cashman, proposed to explore females at different times in history and at different points of their development. But in this superficial, rather tacky, treatment of three one-act plays, little exploration of any kind emerged.

Women's show victimizes actresses

In the small, open space of the Colonnade Theatre any flaw or weakness, either technical or dramatic, receives vulnerable exposure and this production seemed to reek of cardboard, imprecision and an amateurish artificiality.

The opening piece, Fernando Arrabal's The First Communion used the main stage area to show two nuns attempting to place a body in a coffin; an action continually interrupted by a necrophiliac man, a half-clown, half-ghoul figure with a long black penis (not real). Offsetting this on the upper stage level was the rather striking image of a young girl being prepared for her first communion by another nun. Along with the layers of white finery which she accumulated came a penetrating lecture on housewifely duties, stressing cleanliness. Repressive religious indoctrination and escapist sexual fantasy merged and exchanged places in the final image of the young girl with knife and then balloon. But if this was a statement made by women for women it certainly had nothing to do with liberation. It merely accentuated the compromise, leaving the game in the hands of a purist little girl — a future castrator perhaps but not a future person.

The second play, Leonard Cohen's The New Step was the simplest piece, with an acceptable performance by Beth Kaplan. She played the ugly sister who discovered that men sometimes reject beauty, as defined by the cosmetic layers of women's magazines. The sketch perhaps debunked the cliches of being beautiful, being wanted and getting a man but this interpretation couldn't decide whether to play it for laughs or to play it for real. Lacking provocation, it did more to downgrade women than expose their plight and led one to think that the group should have stayed away from plays written by men.

Arthur Kopit's Chamber Music, the final selection, was intellectually the most stimulating but allowed its tensions to lapse into a situation as downbeat as a typical women's committee meeting, which was partially what it was about. The women on this committee, though, were both representative and atypical: Gertrude Stein, Joan of Arc, Susan B. Anthony, Queen Isabella of Spain, Mrs. Mozart, Amelia Aherhardt and others. During the course of their business grievance meeting an ambiguity of place, time and reality was created, giving an impression of actresses directing their own movie, lost female souls in purgatory and ultimately inmates of a mental hospital. Unfortunately the last was the definitive image.

The play required a strong stylization of character rather than the vague caricatures presented here. To contemplate what these women might have said and done to each other had they met is a fascinating idea. But there they were reduced (literally) to a spineless bunch of madwomen who destroyed one of their own. The evening said a lot about the need for women to have healthy, strong, self-images but the subtle debilitations of the plays chosen served more to victimize these actresses than provide vehicles for valid self-expression.

sandra souchotte

Rocksters A-bomb out

Old New Borrowed and Blue
Slade
Polydor; $7.29

Look out world. Slade has a new LP out and my review is meant as a humanitarian gesture towards all my devoted readers. To increase its impact I will outline my opinions in simple, clear and unbiased terms.

The sounds produced on previous Slade records were as gentle as an A-bomb, but they were group efforts. Unfortunately their latest release bombs out because the band has taken a back seat to the usual ranting and screeching of Noddy Holder. Image the sound made by a nail that's dragged across a blackboard, amplify it and transfer it onto a vinyl disc. The result is lead singer Noddy Holder.

You'll have noticed by now that I haven't yet mentioned the word music and that is simply because this British quartet plays no music at all. Of the twelve tunes only one, "Just went a little bit", was not penned by the Lea-Holder team, but it is quickly whipped into the band's mould of playing. As with all Slade LP's this one is festooned with banal, simplistic, unimaginative and pointless lyrics which are backed by elementary electric noise. All this mediocrity is topped off with the obnoxious and grating vocal pyrotechnics of Noddy Holder, although we are spared once, when Jimmy Lea does the lead vocal on "When the lights are out".

Of course, when one dredges through slime, there's always a chance that something valuable will be found. And amazing as it may appear there is actually a song worth remembering on this album. It features non-member Tommy Burton, playing some very fine honky-tonk piano, and Noddy Holder, who proves that he can sing without going hysterical.

Old, New, Borrowed and Blue is a rehash of worn out cliches, out-dated playing, and very stale ideas. Not satisfied with just ripping off your money, Polydor insists upon adding insult to the injury by selling a record full of hiss and odd little bumps in the grooves. Hopefully this is the last we'll hear from Slade, because on this record they are as musical as the revolving doors in the Roberts mausoleum.

P.S. Any fool who cares to listen to this record on headphones is in for a free lobotomy operation.

serge schardt

MONTESSORI PRIMARY TEACHER TRAINING

available at the

Toronto Montessori Institute
Victoria College
73 Queen's Park Crescent
Toronto, Ontario Tel. 961-4876

A one year course of study leading to the internationally recognized diploma of Association Montessori Internationale. Applications are now being accepted. Brochure available upon request.

PEDLAR CYCLE SHOP

169 AVENUE RD.

COMPLETE REPAIRS

10 SP. 3 SP.

Raleigh 3 sp's from $82.00

Clearance sale on last year's models

STUDENTS WITH OFFICE EXPERIENCE Register NOW!!

FOR

SUMMER OR TEMPORARY
EMPLOYMENT

Dot Personnel Services

WEST
236-1133
3313 A Bloor St. W.

EAST
429-3706
797 Don Mills Rd.

CENTRAL
923-9801
30 Bloor St. W.

RIDIN' ROPIN' WRANGLIN' and all that WESTERN BULLSHIT pulled together by MEL BROOKS
in his new
COMEDY CLASSIC

BLAZING
SADDLES

brought to you by Warner Bros-the people that gave you "The Jazz Singer"

From Warner Bros. A Warner Communications Company

NOW PLAYING!

CONTINUOUS
DAILY 1:30

UPTOWN 1
YONGE AT BLOOR • 922-3113

recommended as ADULT
ENTERTAINMENT

Larry's
Hideaway Hotel
121 Carlton at Jarvis
THIS WEEK

SUGAR CANE

MARCH 4-9
Next big attraction

FLAG

Mar. 11-16

come HONKY TONK

with

VINCE TROY

Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!!

HOUSE OF LANCASTER

147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0615

ABC CHARTERS

to Europe

-Youth Fares
-Student Eurail passes

922-4161

world travel

SERVICE, LTD.
258 College Street

HOW ABOUT BECOMING A MCGILL MBA?

Exciting things are happening in McGill's Faculty of Management. Want to know more? Come and meet Professor M. Goldberg on TUESDAY, MARCH 12th, 1974, 2:00 - 5:00 p.m. in the PLACEMENT CENTRE.

DO YOU NEED A WILL?

Ms. Marie Huxter, Director of Student Programmes at the Faculty of Law announces a clinical training programme in will drafting. Members of the University Community - academic and administrative staff, students, and their spouses - interested in having a simple will prepared should contact Ms. Huxter at 928-4908. Those interested will be accepted on a "first come - first served" basis. There will be no charge involved. The interview will be conducted and the will prepared by a practising lawyer. A small number of students (approximately five) will sit in on the interview and execution of the will. Two attendances will be required and will be scheduled between 8 and 9 a.m. in the morning or 5 and 6 p.m. in the evening. The first attendance will be during the week of March 18 and the second during the week of April 1.

The Faculty of Law cannot undertake to supply complex estate planning advice in this programme. Should it appear that the particular circumstances of those wishing to participate involve advice of a greater sophistication than the programme can offer, they will be advised by the lawyer in charge of the interview.

Going Abroad for the Summer?

It is Definitely Time to Plan.

visit INTERCHANGE

for information on

- the work situation abroad
- work camps
- language and other study programmes
- tours
- general travel information

INTERCHANGE

International Work, Study, Travel Information Centre International Student Centre
University of Toronto
33 St. George St.
Jane Carney 928-6617

P.S. ISC Issues the International Student Identity Card

Tripping past the cod-pieces of time

Fashion in traditional central African culture.

Rarely do you find a book that is thought-provoking and entertaining, amusing and serious, wise and easy-to-understand, all at the same time.

But Bernard Rudofsky's The Unfashionable Human Body is such a work. It's a discussion of apparel—in the broadest sense of the word—and how it has reflected and shaped attitudes to the human body (as well as having often been literally used to shape the body itself). The text is accompanied by scores of compelling and fascinating illustrations.

The overall message is one of the continual distortion and mutilation of the body and bodily functions, the atrophy of sense, the unbalancing of natural rhythms. The argument is powerful and well-presented, the author's sweep of knowledge and range of argument tremendously impressive. While he points to examples of happy creativity and comfort in styles of dress, the bulk of the book necessarily concerns the length to which the various societies have gone to warp and harm the body. The result, even though the main function of the book is to record and describe, not to polemicize and convert, is to present an indictment of the predominant attitudes to apparel, and to indicate what is possible, and necessary, to change.

He discusses early Christian attitudes to sex and clothing, and traces the crucial relationship between the two throughout history. It's interesting that some Christian painting depicted Adam and Eve as having the genitals of both sexes simultaneously before the fall, while others conceived of them as having no genitals at all.

The development of ideas of modesty is fascinating. Women in certain New Hebrides tribes, for example, must have properly done hair, but wear no clothes. Some cultures force women to wear masks or veils. Others consider it unimportant to cover the breasts, while in Victorian England there were charts that showed precisely, in inches, how much of a girl's legs had to be covered at each age. (It's notable, incidentally, that women have nearly always been subjected to greater restrictions in dress, and to more outrightly deforming apparel, than men.)

In our time, the male genitals are de-emphasized as much as possible in clothing (although tight blue jeans are changing that to some extent); in other cultures, however, variations on the cod-piece have been an essential item of dress. Notable for their emphasis of the penis are sixteenth century Italy, and the New Hebrides, where "the well-dressed man wraps his penis in cloth to form an impressive bundle, held in place with a leather belt."

Another of Rudofsky's points is the decline of certain senses, especially taste and smell, which has put a greater stress on visual sexual stimulation, and a great downplaying of erotic excitement through smelling and tasting.

One of the most compelling sections of the book is his discussion of the decoration and deliberate deformation of the body, ranging from tattooing to devices to deform the shape of the head, to corsets (which displace the internal organs, incidentally) to the foot-binding of pre-revolutionary China. Rudofsky points out that most of our own feet are deformed by our shoes: for example, the two big toes should be parallel and touching when placed side by side; with most of us, however, they curve inward. According to the most popular shape of shoes, the big toe should be in the middle of the foot, not on the side.

Attitudes to hair are another fascinating chapter in human history. The battle against long hair in the recent past is still familiar to most of us (and is not yet over, either); we're probably less familiar with the dramatic variations in hair styles through the ages, each fashion, of course, being the only one that was socially acceptable in its time.

Pants and skirts have undergone phenomenal modifications; it's interesting that many societies did not differentiate between male and female clothing, and also, that throughout history, men have probably worn skirts more than women, while women have worn trousers more. The trouser crease is a recent invention; as Rudofsky says, "its sole function seems to consist of reminding us that trouser legs are not for bending: to the tailor's mind the perfect gentleman is a stiff-legged man."

And so it goes. The Unfashionable Human Body is a journey, simultaneously hilarious and shocking, through the vagaries of fashion, and a must for anyone who is interested in sexuality, sensuality, and the general liberation of the body.

The Unfashionable Human Body;
by Bernard Rudofsky;
Doubleday Anchor; $6.55
sarah rothschild

Fashion in traditional North American culture.

Friday, March 8, 1974

Women writers often tend to get caught up in the Ophelia complex.

Another writer gets snagged in the melancholy baby theme

Days
Eva Figs
Faber

Days, Days, Days, Days, Days, says the jacket of this new novel by Eva Figs.

Yawn, Yawn, Yawn, Yawn, Yawn! I said as I started to read it.

"I recognize the room: although it is still dark. I have been lying in it for several days. It is not quite morning yet: the window at the far end of the room, facing my bed, gleams faintly. It seems so distant because I cannot reach it: in fact it is a small room. The walls, now shadowy, are smooth and white. There is one door, not visible now, in the righthand wall, just below the end of my bed. My arrival has been blotted out: I cannot remember it. I suppose I must have been pushed through the door by somebody.

"Having recalled my surroundings, I am calm once more. After a moment of panic. During which, having opened my eyes from one darkness only to find another, my breathing seemed very fast, and I felt a strong urge to scream.

Sweat soaked into my nightgown, which has since stuck to my skin. It is all right now. I am calm. Listen to my breathing, how regular it is. In: out. In: out."

Yawn, I said.

Another bad woman novelist.

Just like Anais Nin, I said.

Just like Djuna Barnes.

Just like Kay Boyle.

But reading more and becoming used to the style, this is like Penelope Mortimer, I said. This is like Elizabeth Taylor. This is like Sylvia Plath.

Of course, it wasn't like any of them. But perhaps it really is the fate of the woman novelist and of her novels when read by a man to be comprehended and evaluated in terms of other woman novelists.

And yet the quintessential expression of the modern "woman's novel" was written by a man, and as a part, only a part, of his own much larger and much more diversified "novel". I am speaking of course of Molly Bloom's soliloquy at the end of James Joyce's Ulysses.

Days is about a woman who lies in her hospital bed recalling her relationships with her mother, her father, her brother, her husband, and her daughter.

What Shelley said this woman says:

*Yet now despair itself is mild
Even as the winds and water are;
I could lie down like a tired child
And weep away this life of care which I have borne, and yet must bear,
Till death like sleep might seal on me
And I might feel in the warm air.
My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain, its last monotony.*

Not a book, lord, not a book, but certainly an interesting essay remains to be written on the way various painters and poets have taken up the image of Ophelia, the drowning and drowned Ophelia. The image haunted Delacroix all his life. Millais painted a very famous picture. A few of the nineties poets wrote intense poems about her. Some even addressed poems to, her.

The narrator of The Brothers Karamazov mentions a girl he knew, "a young girl of the last 'romantic' generation who had for several years been consumed by an enigmatic passion for a certain gentleman whom she could have married without any trouble at all, but who, after inventing all sorts of insurmountable difficulties, in the end threw herself one stormy night from a high cliff into a fairly deep and rapid river and was drowned out of sheer caprice, simply because she wanted to be like Shakespeare's Ophelia..."

The situation of so many of these women in so many "woman's novels" is exactly like that of Ophelia.

...down her weedy trophies and herself

*Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide, and mermaid-like, awhile they bore her up; Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress,*

*Or like a creature native and induel'd Unto that element: but long it could not be Till that her garments heavy with their drink,
Pul'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.*

But these women always drowning never really drown.

So this novel is typical. But is it successful?

Perhaps you have been sick and have written a letter or attempted a piece of poetry or the keeping of a diary. And what you write inevitably seems to be good writing. But whether good or not, the writing becomes a narcotic, and you continue to write.

In Days it is self-consciousness which becomes a narcotic. And the woman's melancholy "is itself, poetry ... causing language without noise."

Self-conscious melancholy is previous bane. A state of equilibrium which can come down on the side of despair or on the side of exhilaration. The risk that it may come down on the wrong side leads to its deliberate cultivation.

Is Days successful? This may be an unfair question. Days is contemporary.

randy robertson

Chargex Accepted * Student Discount

CONTACT LENSES
$79 complete with all fittings & service

SOFT LENSES
AVAILABLE

GLASSES
large selection
of imported frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.

354 Yonge St.

364-2607

Urban Studies

Meeting of undergraduates, faculty and others interested in urban specialist or minor programmes.

Fri. Mar. 15, 1974

12:15 - 2:00 p.m.

Centre for Urban & Community Studies
Coach House at rear of 150 St. George
(south of Bloor)

To discuss programmes, present course offerings, INX symposium, possible core courses and job opportunities for urbanists.

Coffee

SMC FILM CLUB

PRESENTS

"IT IS A MISSING CHAPTER FROM
'THE GRAPES OF WRATH' AND OF EQUAL STATURE."

—Judith Crist, NBC-TV

"SOUNDER"

A Robert B. Heister, starring Ron Miles
PARAVISIONAL COPY BY DE. LUNA

FRIDAY MARCH 8
SATURDAY MARCH 9

$1.00

7:30 & 10 P.M. - CARR HALL

XEROX

EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY

COPIES

7¢

EACH

1st thru 5th copies per original

5¢

EACH

6th thru 10th
copies per
original

2¢

EACH

11th and additional copies of the same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes, Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work)

20%

• FREE collating

ALSO AVAILABLE

• CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
• REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36"

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-6:00 PM

NOTE
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

Watsup

rock

The four-sister singing team from Oakland, California, the Pointer Sisters, will be in town on Sunday for a concert at Massey Hall. The Pointer girls have only really caught on since the summer. Most of that interest is for their campy 1940's style harmonies. This Toronto appearance is part of a new tour, which follows close on the release of a new album called That's A Plenty (Blue Thumb/Quality; $7.29).

This second LP continues to explore the musical styles represented on the last album - there are touches of bebop, as well as more contemporary songs. But this latest offering sees the Pointers widening their scope material-wise within their established framework.

The focal point of the Pointer Sisters popularity being the Andrew Sisters harmonies and old time songs, the girls provide amply for their fans. There's a Broadway musical type story of their youth called Bangin' on the Pipes/Steam Heat, a '40's crazed bebop song with mile-a-minute lyrics and a liberal dose of scat singing called Salt Peanuts, Lambert and Hendrix's Little Pony and even some 1920's dixieland in the form of the title tune, That's a Plenty/Surfelt, USA.

Though I enjoy the close harmonies, I find the nostalgia material too threadbare for my taste. Luckily the Pointer Sisters haven't been boxed in by their success. The last album only contained one or two real gems, like Allen Toussaint's Yes We Can Can and That's The Way I Feel. That's A Plenty has its own too, but they're less impressive in stature and sparkle a bit less. The best of the lot is an eight minute track called Love In Them There Hills. It combines the best elements of the forementioned songs and features a delicious electronic break that counterpoints the girls' voices with synthesizer and conga drums. There's some good gospel blues singing in the Son House tune, Gripping In Your Face. This time around there's even some country sounds, in the form of great song called Fairytale, written by two of the sisters, Anita and Bonnie. The chorus, that comes in on the line, "I've been lost in a dream" is as sweet as any ever cut by the Byrds or the Flying Burritos.

For some reason there are no musician credits given. That's really too bad because there is some very fine instrumental work on the record.

Personally I'd rather see the Pointer Sisters concentrate on rock and blues. But for now, I guess half an album is better than none at all.

Rory Gallagher, the Irish born guitarist ex of the group Taste, will make his second appearance in Toronto tonight at the Victory. Gallagher and his three-man backup will put on two shows at 7:30 and 11 p.m. Tickets are $4.50 plus tax.

At Fiddler's Green (489-3001) tonight it's the old timey sound of a Rochester area group known as the Swamp Roots String Band. A singer-songwriter from Toronto, Nancy White, is features on Tuesday.

Fred Mollin is at the Riverboat (922-6216) tonight and tomorrow. Next week you can recall a whole other ear of folk music as Phil Ochs returns to the 'boat for one week beginning Tuesday. Ochs' visit is coincident with the release of his first LP in over four years. Guntight At Carnegie Hall (A&M) is a recording of his ill fated 1970 appearance and will be released only in Canada and Japan.

Another less well-known folk singer from the '60's is also in town next week.

Hamilton Camp who recorded on Elektra and Warner brothers and actually had a top 40 hit with a song called Here's To You will be at Egerton's beginning Monday. Bobby "Blue" Bland who has a fine LP called His California Album, is at the Colonial (on Yonge Street) tonight and tomorrow. Bland's voice tends to a laid back version of Wilson Pickett with many of the qualities of blues singer Albert King. The California album features a lot of blues material as well as soul. Arrangements are superb and the musicianship of such people as Michael Omartian, guitarist Larry Carlton and bassist Wilton Felder and Max Bennett, is excellent. This man deserves to be heard.

begin at 8:45 p.m. and student tickets are $2.00.

The Importance of Being Earnest continues at the Palmerston Library Theatre, 560 Palmerston (student tickets $1.50) and Blitzkrieg, a fascinating study of Hitler and Eva Braun played as movie-land 'super stars' is to be found at the Poor Alex Theatre, 296 Brunswick Avenue. Sunday matinees at 2:30 p.m. are pay-what-you-can. A revived Second City is offering a preview performances at its new home in the Firehall Restaurant. A dinner/show package is offered Tuesday through Thursday, and Sundays, for $6.00 with show-time at 9:00 p.m. and Friday and Saturday for $6.50 with show-time at 8:30 and 11:30 p.m.

Coming up next Tuesday, at Bathurst United Church, is a production called Spaces. It is being done by the St. Francis Xavier group which brought a dynamic and demonic play Death of Artaud to Toronto a couple of years ago. This new work, using rhythms, music, dance, poetry, sex and violence, attempts interpretations of personal mind spaces. Sunday afternoons are pay-what-you-can but phone 921-5901 for more information.

Several things are opening soon on campus at the UC playhouse and Studio Theatre but since I have been given no information on them, tune-in to your newest bulletin board or Drama Centre student. Troilus and Cressida plays until tomorrow night at Hart House Theatre.

theatre

This is the week that was and may never be again in Toronto liberation theatre. The newly formed Toronto Women's Theatre premiered its first production, Good Night Ladies, on Tuesday night at the Colonnade Theatre. The show consists of three pieces: Fernando Arrabal's The First Communion, Leonard Cohen's The New Step, and Arthur Kopit's Chamber Music plays which explore females at different times in history and at different points of their development. Performances run until March 17. Tubstrip, taking Boys In The Band out of the living-room and into the sauna, opened Wednesday night at the Global village. It is described as a "biting and bitchy" comedy about the lives of nine homosexuals, one night in a New York City steam bath, and for those who might like to wallow in the sweat that's worked up, be warned that tickets are rather expensive. Michel Tremblay's Montreal Smoked Meat, another new opening this week, is in performance at Bathurst United Church, 736 Bathurst Street. One of Quebec's most socially committed playwrights, Tremblay gives in this mini-epic an exposé of the waste of humanity in the white, middle-class Quebec ghetto. All performances review

editor
art books movies classical rock
theatre production

tom welkom
david wise
ulli diemer
bob bossin
david basskin
allan mandell
sandra souchotte
gene allen

Uncle Vanya

REQUIRES AN AUDIENCE
Fri. Mar. 8-8:30p.m.
for a rehearsal
at
U.C. PLAYHOUSE
(experimental process)

TRY IT,
YOU'LL LIKE IT
A LA STRADA
SPECIAL
FOR STUDENTS
77 Avenue Road

A delicious order of spaghetti with meat
sauce or tomato sauce
Soup of the day
and Coffee or tea

FOR THE LOW BUDGET
OF A
UNIVERSITY STUDENT
daily at

LA STRADA

lunch $1.50
dinner $2.25

Heidelberg

Brewed from pure spring water.

And that's the truth!

Ontario excels in gymnastics

Ontario dominated the CIAU gymnastics championships held at York University over the weekend. Ontario swept the women's and men's individual titles and the women's conference title with the Canada West Universities Athletic Association winning the men's conference championship.

Dominating the meet were two U of T gymnasts—Steve Mitruk and Jennifer Diachun—both veterans of Olympic competition and World Championship teams. Mitruk placed first in four events and emerged with a 52.0 all round score for the individual title, followed by Olympian Bill Mackie (WUAA) with 49.60 and Keith Carter (GPAC) with 49.15.

Jennifer Diachun continued her winning form by taking first place in each event for an all round score of 38.80 and the individual title. Sharon Tsukamoto was second with 34.80 and Lise Arseneault third with 34.35. Both women are on York's gym team.

Canada West took the men's conference title with a total of 234.65, followed by Ontario with 229.55, Great Plains with 181.95, and Atlantic with 165.50.

Ontario women dominated their conference with a total of 167.70 points, while Canada West had 143.90 for second, Great Plains 101.85 for third and Atlantic 66.75 for fourth.

Other sidelights of the meet were Diachun, Tsukamoto and Arseneault, all on Canada's National Team, placing one, two, three in each event but the women's bars, where Janet Terry, another National Team member, managed third.

No matter how active you are

The more active you are, the more gymnastics and sports you participate in, the more you need to know about Tampax tampons.

Because they're worn internally, they don't hamper movement and don't cause irritating discomfort. When inserted properly in place (it's easy!), you'll never feel them. Removal is also easy: the withdrawal cord is chain stitched the entire length of the tampon so it can't pull off.

And you should know that Tampax tampons are economical. They come in packages of 10's and 40's, not 8's and 30's like some others. You get more for your money. More of the protection that keeps you comfortable no matter how active a life you lead.

The internal protection more women trust

Fac b'ball playoffs begin

The Varsity—Auntie McMillan

Vic I and UC I players watch a shot in an interfaculty playoff that Vic won 84-63 to enter the semi-finals.

By BOB PRITSCHARD

Interfac basketball playoffs began this week. In the first game, division IA leading SMC A faced PHE A, who finished fifth in IA and drew the wild card spot. St. Mike's came away with an 81-56 victory, led by 17 points from Campana and Dziemianezuk.

They'll meet Mod A, who defeated Scar 87-76. The doctors ended up third in the IA division, while Sear occupied second spot in the B division. In the scoring department, Caskey accounted for 20 and Horenblas 17 for the victors, while Lichtfuss contributed 22 for the losers.

Vic I, who finished in second place in the IA division, stuffed B division third place UC I 84-63. Watt led Vic with 13, followed by 12 from John, while Limeback and Horak represented UC with 18 and 16 respectively.

The fourth game of the series was somewhat of an upset with fourth place A division Sr Eng nipping B division SGS by a 59-54 score. Gratz hit 20 for the Skulemen, For the Grads, Fjeld was the only man capable of scraping up more than 8 points, as he collected 26.

The semi-finals consist of a best two out of three series. Vic I jumps off against Sr Eng tonight at 5:30.

Med A and St. Mike's play at 7:30.

In the second division, IIA leader PHE C, who completed their season with an impressive 11-1 record, meet Trin B, who finished in fourth spot in the B division. Jr. Eng, who finished behind PHE C, take on third place finisher in B, Pharm. SMC B earned a playoff spot against Dent B, who grabbed second place in IIB, while the leaders of the same division, Innis, meet the fourth place delegate from A, For A.

sportalk

In the interfaculty squash final, Law defeated Dents 2-1 to capture the championship. Law lost the first match when the Dent's Virtue edged Gregory 3-1. Law won the next one though when Sweezy shutout Stranks 3-0 and that tied it at one match each. In the third and deciding game, Law's Morrison edged Tamm-saln to give Law this year's championship. . . There will be an invitational volleyball tournament at the Scarborough gymnasium this Saturday. Play starts at 8 am and continues through the day, with the semi-finals slated to get under way at 6:30 pm. Competing will be 12 men's and 12 women's teams, including the two interfaculty men's interfaculty teams, Scarborough and Erindale. Also taking part will be some of the best high school teams and teams from the Ontario Volleyball Association. Admission is free. . .

W.A.A.

presents an evening Spring

Dance Program

Campus Performance Groups in Modern Jazz
International Folk Dance
Scottish Country Dance Contemporary Dance
plus - exciting Dance Films

Benson Bldg.

320 Huron

Fri. Mar. 8th

8:00 p.m.

Co-Ed

Observe... participate...

All-Welcome... Free...

W.A.A.

presents an exciting

Lecture demonstration and Dance Workshop

on Yemenite and Israeli

Dance Folklore with

Meir Cohen - Nehemia

plus film "GESTURES OF SAND"

Sat. Mar. 9th
1:30 - 5:00 p.m.
Benson Bldg.
320 Huron
fee $1.50

See you there!
Co-ed participation
Everyone Welcome

There is a Red Cross blood donor clinic on campus today.

Can you spare half an hour to give your blood?

You have to go out of your way... to do it.

Today Friday March 8
10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Medical Sciences Building
Galbraith Building

In Memoriam Kafé Kafka

beloved idiot bastard son of Fred Zippa and Busby Berkeley, who passed away peacefully, in the arms of his nearest & dearest, on Tuesday March 5, 1974.

Kafka is survived by his Uncle Vanya and a long-lost business manager somewhere in Argentina. He was cremated at UC Playhouse (this is as he wished it to be)

Pallbearers included Sylvia McMechan, Andrew J. Paterson, S.D. DeZwirek, Linda Pakri, James Simpson Garrard, David Thompson, Gordon Woodbury, George Mur-naghan, Allen Booth, and Charity Grant.

sports

Lawrence Clarke
923-4053

Fac hockey semi-finals are rugged affairs

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

Division I

In the opening games of the division I semi-finals played Wednesday evening, Law A and PHE A battered each other to a 5-5 draw while New I continued their prodigal ways, upsetting SMC A 2-1 in a penalty-studded free-for-all.

The semi-finals are a two-game, total-goals affair, with three 15 minute stop-time periods (as compared to two 20 minute, straight-time periods during the regular season). They are a rugged test of endurance and spirit and to survive it, a team has to be good and perhaps a little lucky.

Law A was good and more than a little lucky when they scored late in the third period to tie the free-skating jocks 5-5 in the first game of their semi-finals.

Law A's, who scraped into the playoffs as a wildcard and then ousted league-leading Erindale 3-2, played badly against PHE in the opening minutes. PHE wingers wheeled and spun freely in the lawyers' end and peppered law netminder Durno with shot after shot. Law A, for their part, couldn't seem to set up in their own end to clear the puck, which led them into innumerable difficulties.

The texture of the game changed suddenly, however, when Law made one of their few sorties into the PHE end. Morrison, fairly certain he wasn't going to out-fox two burly defencemen, shot the puck in four feet wide of the goal.

Somehow the puck then rebounded in front of the net to the energetic MacDonald who flipped it in to give Law a 1-0 lead at the 11 minute mark.

A scant 31 seconds later, Durno cleared a shot out to the stick of a

The Varsity—Aunt McKellin

SMC A's Sibbitt gives SMC a 1-0 lead but New I fought back to prevail 2-1 in the opening game of their semi-final.

defenceman and rocketed a 35 foot slapshot which caught the far corner of the net, giving Law a 3-2 lead.

But then Law, who only had five reserves, began to tire and took several penalties in trying to slow down the fleet PHE forwards. The jocks powerplay did everything but score but it was obviously only a matter of time.

Finally, after three straight penalties to Law, one of their players, Zimmerman, lost his temper and told off the referee, earning himself a game misconduct.

shot on goal in the last five minutes of the second period, continued their seige on the Law net. They fired 15 shots at Durno in the last period and scored on two of them to take a 5-4 lead into the last two minutes of the game.

The PHE goal that tied it at 4-4 came from the stick of Ackley with the goalie Sammut earning an assist.

After some more frenetic activity around the Law net, PHE went ahead 5-4 when a Law player knocked down a shot with a high stick. It caught Durno out of position and misconducts.

A large crowd, divided equally between supporters of both teams, saw New overcome an early SMC lead to win 2-1 on a late third period goal.

New, coached by Varsity Blues' defenceman Rick Cornacchia, carried the play in the first period, outshooting SMC 11 to five. Only good work by SMC netminder Werbicki prevented New from holding 3-0 lead at the end of the first period.

In both the first and second periods, play was characterized by end-to-end rushes and frequent stoppages of play by the referees to award some lucky player(s) with time in the penalty box.

With both teams usually playing one and sometimes two men short, action tended to the wide-open keeping spectators on the edge of their seats and on top of their vocal chords.

Finally, SMC took some pressure off their coach, Don Pagnutti, when Flynn set up Sibbitt to give the mikes a 1-0 lead.

Play sawed back and forth for the rest of the second period until New's Tuck passed the puck to team-mate Ramsden, he cleverly eluded a defenceman and skated in to beat New goalie Kadlovski with a clean shot that left the score knotted at 1-1.

In the third period, with a new sheet of ice, it was all SMC. They looked like another version of the Blues against Western as they poured 14 shots in the third period at the New goal but couldn't get anything on the scoreboard.

With just a few minutes left in the game, after several exchanges of end-to-end rushes by both teams, New's Carew broke up the wing with Ramsden trailing slightly.

Carew drew one of the SMC defencemen into the corner just as Ramsden somehow out-muscled his tired check in front of the net. When the puck sailed out to the momentarily unguarded Ramsden, he slapped it by the desperate sprawl of the goalie to a great roar from the New supporters.

New hung onto that 2-1 lead, despite an intense shelling of their net in the last four minutes, and now carry a one goal lead into the second game.

SMC outshot New 24-23 during the game. They also took 16 of the 31 penalties, including one of the three misconducts. (The frequency of penalties was a never-ending source of amazement to Varsity Blue Ivan Mac Farlane who stood near the penalty box during the game and spectated.)

It takes two to tangle and that's almost certainly what New and SMC will be doing in their second and deciding game. If you want to see their last tangle in Varsity, they go at it again next Wednesday at 7 pm, with the winner meeting the battered survivors of the PHE-Law series.

Division II

The division II hockey quarter-finals got underway Tuesday night with eight teams competing.

In the opening game, division II A winner Jr. Eng (15-10 during the regular season) met Knox who just caught a playoff berth by finishing fourth in division II B.

Knox's luck ran out here though, as the plumbers defeated them 4-2 on goals by Seckington, Kennedy and Raven (2). Knox's goals came from the sticks of Cathrae and Fraser.

The pedagogues from Fac Ed won the right to meet Jr. Eng in one of the semi-finals, edging Scar II 3-2. Wakefield and McKenzie took care of the teacher's scoring while Cooper and Stewart tallied for Scar II.

Following the example of Law A, Law II upset the division II A second place finishers, Forestry A, by a score of 2-0, Armstrong and White each got a goal and an assist to lead the lawyers to victory.

Vic II, the fourth place finisher in division I A, bit the dust against division II B winners, Pharmacy. The druggists eked out a close 2-1 victory to close out Vic II's season.

Marling scored a goal and assisted on Hetherington's marker to lead Pharmacy to the semi-finals against Law II. Clarke was the lone scorer for Vic II.

If you would like to cover any of these semi-finals for the Varsity, telephone us at 923-4053.

Defeat hangs heavy as Knox loses playoff 4-2 to Jr. Eng.

surprised Ackley. He recovered and slipped it over to Scanlan who wheeled and backhanded a shot into the Law net to tie the score.

But Law, inspired by the save Durno made on Turek's breakaway, continued to press and went ahead again at 12:35. Hutchison fired a rising slapshot which a jock defenceman knocked down.

Unfortunately, Wright happened to be at the spot where it landed and he quickly drilled it into the PHE net, giving Law a 2-1 lead.

PHE tied it up 2-2 only 43 seconds after the second period started. Law got caught up the ice after a three-on-one break, leaving PHE's Baggs to streak up the wing and set up Ackley's picture goal.

Law crashed back into the lead a minute later on an unassisted goal by Morrison. He flared wide of a PHE

This left Law with only four tired players in reserve while the PHE bench looked like an over-loaded troop train.

Even so, Law managed to make it 4-2 when Durno passed the puck up to Morrison who went through the entire PHE team and beat their goalie Sammut cleanly.

But Law was obviously on the slide. PHE almost immediately scored when Taylor and Boys ripped through the Law defences and set up Quinlan to make it 4-3.

PHE kept forcing Law into desperate penalties and kept up a steady rain of shots at their goal. The lawyers' position worsened considerably when their defenceman Hutchinson lost part of his eyelid to the carress of a high stick and was carried off the ice.

PHE, who allowed Law only one

Walters tucked it in jubilantly.

Law only had four shots in the last period but they scored on one of them with only a 1:45 left in the game. After a faceoff in the PHE end, Armstrong, up from Law B, dippy-doodled around several bodies and somehow slipped the puck into the PHE net to force a 5-5 tie.

The second and final game between these two clubs will be played next Thursday at 9 pm.

PHE only took five of the 16 penalties in the game. This gave them the opportunity to outshoot the lawyers 38-22, which doesn't include hitting the goalpost twice and missing several empty nets.

The other division I semi-final between New I and SMC A produced some of the most exciting hockey of the playoffs, even though 31 penalties were called, including nine

The Varsity—Lawrence Clarke

SAC hopefuls streak for votes

By JOCK (Gwyno) THOMAS
Students' Administrative Council presidential hopefuls Seymour Kanowitch, Peter Baumann and Michael Chamberland streaked from pub to pub Friday evening in a weekend-before-the-election last minute blitz.

In an unprecedented statement late Friday night a shy Kanowitch admitted that, "if elected, I will streak." However, upon further cross-examination Kanowitch refused to reveal where he would streak to, who he would streak with, and what he would streak in. Kanowitch indicated students would have to wait and see if he was elected before he would bare the whole truth.

This year's SAC services commissioner, Kanowitch has done much to make U of T a more recreational place to be, organizing a popular SAC film festival and the SAC pub, until recently located in the Engineering Annex.

Running mate Tim Buckley came in from the Code long enough Friday night to visit the Victoria College pub. A second year engineering rep, Buckley was the hit of the pub, taking his evening on the hustings so seriously that he explained his SAC platform in its entirety. Fortunately, only one of the 15 beer bottles thrown by disgruntled pub-goers hit him.

Buckley emphasized the services aspect of the present campaign, calling on a rejuvenated SAC to come alive with new student-initiated programs. Buckley did not say whether he advocated SAC join the Peps generation.

At Scarborough, a tired-looking Fred Stewart declined invitations to streak. Stewart chose instead to emphasize his strong points on any future SAC executive — skill and experience in financial management, organizational abilities and seven years working in the real world with real people.

Stewart also emphasized he has managed five restaurants. However, he declined to comment when asked if Norm's Open Kitchen might be one of them.

The Chamberland-Bonhoff-Maclean slate also campaigned late into the night, determined to wrest power away from what they referred to as the "SAC junta."

Using the slogan "Power to the correct people" the Chamberland ticket (one-way) wants to stem creeping SACism and halt the tide of something or other.

The centre-spread of their campaign literature is lavishly decorated with something resembling a moron which is instructing students to "kick SAC in da balls." (A groiner if we ever heard one.) The slate also wants to reorganize SAC into an unintelligible body, merely spreading the socialist wealth among the "pipples."

However, it's not purely a conservative slate, as star witness Carol Bonhoff (who?) testified in the leaflet that her favorite color is "red." (Her favorite TV show, she claims, is Star Trek.)

Chamberland, who insists on cutting down expenses in the campaign by spelling his first name without the "a", claims "he has been extremely active around campus and is grateful that he has not yet been caught."

Aha! But he has. He and the Brute Force Committee SACKED the Varsity office last fall in a fit of sanity, screwing the second floor doors shut from the inside and thereby crippling the paper for the rest of the year. The BFC also ripped off ribbons, pencils, and fedoras, leaving a green trail of spoor behind them. This was not the start of a beautiful relationship. Sam.

Now Chamberland and his henchpersons want to cut the Varsity's budget even further. They might start by returning our ribbons since we've been using ones since mid-November we've ripped off from the Toike.

Bonhoff and Maclean are very experienced in media themselves. Bonhoff claims to have been a DJ on Radio Erindale and she aspires to work her way up to WWVA in Wheeling, West Virginia, the home of the Nashville sound.

Maclean, for his part, has been one of the main criminals producing the Toike Oink this year — strictly campus lowbrow. Linked with Victoria College he has used his position to amass power and thinks he can hang onto the sands of time by becoming a SAC vice-president. However, the tide is beginning to turn, along with our stomachs.

The third slate in contention is the Baumann-Paterson-Conn travelling road show. Their campaign is based around the latest fad — streaking — which is still rated ahead of yo-yos, hula-hoops and Duncan spin tops.

This slate is not opposing SAC but is against OFS which it sees as a "bozo" group, which will only mark in an already impoverished student body for another $1.50 that will bring them little personal gain. OFS is all the students have to gain, judging by the lack of something called a "serious student" on this campus.

According to the present SAC, the "bozos" — alien beings from a dying planet (Earth) — have already invaded the Varsity office, where they persist in milking the students for all they can get.

Baumann is calling for "fresh blood" and makes no bones about it. He came within a whisker of winning last year, coming in close, with 120 votes to Bob "Laughing all the Way" Anderson's several thousands.

Admitting Simcoe Hall's discipline discussion leader Jill Conway is a "difficult" person to talk to, the slate claims this can be remedied with a good bottle of Five Aces.

Baumann admits he does not know the SAC Bureaucracy but, if elected, would endeavour to discover if such a creature actually does exist. (He did say, however, he knows "Tennessee Birdwalk".)

In a leaflet the slate says "SAC does not exist as a social welfare agency", however, all three would like to go on Unemployment Insurance for the year by working around the SAC office.

On the serious side, an editorial on the SAC hopefuls appears on page four of today's campus rag.

The political statements gave the audience lotsalaffs at a SAC all-candidates' meeting Friday.

Racism glorified 'scientifically'

By DAVID SIMMONDS

The theories of Arthur Jensen represent a "reincarnation of Hitlerism," a former janitor at the University of Chicago said Friday.

Roy Brown was speaking at the teach-in on racism and the university, at the Medical Sciences auditorium.

There is nothing new in the theories of Jensen, said Brown.

White have been told they are superior—and blacks they are inferior—before Jensen espoused this view "scientifically."

Jensen, a Harvard university professor, has claimed whites are inherently superior to blacks, as revealed in IQ tests.

Jensen uses "science" as a "magic word", said Brown, when he has not made any scientific contribution to the study of intelligence.

IQ theories do not measure intelligence, said Brown. Rather, they measure "information", or achievement, "much as an examination does."

Grant Cooper, of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, attacked the theories of Edward Banfield. Banfield has claimed families in Southern Italy exhibit "amoral" trends, and that urban blacks in the US have a "pathological culture".

Cooper, who is losing his teaching post for "incompetence" after four years on the job, called Banfield's theories a type of "blaming the victim."

Banfield, he pointed out, has been a top adviser on urban policy to president Nixon.

Banfield has recommended the abolition of the minimum wage, abolition of unions, birth control for blacks, and giving the police power to arrest for "probable cause," said Cooper.

"Being black is probable cause," he exclaimed.

Donald Smith and Sinclair Robinson of Carleton University spoke on racial prejudice in the teaching of Quebecois, or joul, the language of French Canada.

Robinson charged "racism and prejudice" lay at the root of the neglect of Canadian French, and said all uses of the French language were "equally legitimate."

THE Varsity

Vol. 94, No. 61
Mon., March 11, 1974

TORONTO

Soc work fac delays response

Social work students will likely hear the response from their faculty members today or tomorrow about the faculty response to student demands for parity.

The parity demands were made as part of the two-day boycott of classes last week in which about 75 per cent of the 200-member student body stayed away from classes.

Faculty representatives had indicated they would reply to the student demands by Friday. But faculty met through the weekend, and it was yesterday before a draft statement had been worked out.

That statement goes to the faculty for general approval today, and faculty sources indicated it was likely to be approved.

Text of the statement was not available, but one faculty source indicated he was pleased the faculty had come to grips with some of the problems.

The social work student union is to meet tomorrow to consider the hoped-for faculty response. All the students in the faculty are pursuing graduate degrees.

The two-day strike Monday and Tuesday was spurred on by lack of progress in student negotiations with the faculty.

Roy Brown called some "scientific" theories "Hitlerism."

HERE AND NOW

TODAY
noon

Al Candidates meeting: Scarborough College SAC presidential elections forum. Come and hear representatives of the three tickets for SAC leadership and vote questions. Also rap from Ontario Federation of Students discusses referendum. Scarborough College Meeting Place.

1 pm

"Talwan—free enterprise success story" a film, today in New College Room 1017. Free.

Chung-ho Chang Frankel will give a lecture-demonstration on the old-style Chinese drama, K'un Chiu, Room 323, 280 Huron Street (Textbook Store Building). Sponsored by East Asian Studies, Faculty of Music, and Graduate Centre for Study of Drama.

4 pm

The Recorder Club to meet in Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street. Advanced players from 4 to 5 pm, beginners from 5 to 6 pm.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Kasher supper will be served tonight at Hillel House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

8 pm

Dr. H.K. Beecher of Harvard University will lecture on "Moral Values and Human Research" in the Medical Sciences Auditorium. All welcome. Admission free.

The Latin American Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, University of Toronto announces a talk by Professor David Raby on "Cuba and Mexico: Two Revolutions Compared" in The Cumberland Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

Hillel's Movie Club is presenting Monday Night at the movies at Hillel House. The movie "Before Winter Comes" is the first in the series. All welcome to attend.

TUESDAY

10:30 am

Ben Banfield: Edward Banfield, a blaming-the-victim theorist who writes southern Italians are 'amoral' and that lower class people like living in slums is speaking at the U of T. Help run him off campus. Join the SDS demonstration at room 2090, Sid Smith Hall.

noon

A fireside is an opportunity for interested individuals to enquire about Baha' from other individuals whose hearts have been warmed by it.

Creative Writing students of Scarborough College will be reading their prose and poetry in the Council Chamber.

3:30 pm

Ben Banfield: Edward Banfield, a blaming-the-victim theorist who writes southern Italians are 'amoral' and that lower class people like living in slums is speaking at the U of T. Help run him off campus. Join the SDS demonstration at room 2090, Sid Smith Hall.

4 pm

Faculty of Management studies General Seminar Series presents "The CDC, Canada's Newest Private Sector." Speaker Mr. D.B. McCaskill, 7th floor, 246 Bloor St. West.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Kasher supper will be served tonight at Hillel House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7 pm

Hillel's Guitar Workshop for beginners only at Hillel House. Intermediate Conversational Hebrew class at Hillel House.

7:30 pm

SDS Meeting to plan further demonstrations against Hecfor and to take action against Edward Banfield, a blaming-the-victim theorist who is to speak at U of T. Pendaves Lounge, ISC.

"CUSO at St. Mike's"—there will be a CUSO information session at Brennan Hall for anyone interested in working in a developing country for two years.

8 pm

Intermediate French to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

Conversational Hebrew class for beginners only at Hillel House.

Hillel's Guitar Workshop for advanced only at Hillel House.

Free Jewish University tonight in "Jewish Art" at Hillel House.

Free Jewish University tonight in "The Jewish Woman" at Hillel House.

Chilean pleads for solidarity

By ANNE HEALY

Fernando Martinez, vice-president of the Committee for Solidarity with Democratic Chile, at a meeting Friday evening at OISE, condemned the junta government and sent out a plea for aid to his cause.

Martinez, currently representing the overthrown Popular Unity government in Rome, came to Canada for ten days not only to ask for help, but also to tell of the international importance of last September's coup.

"Killing is a daily affair," he said, "and there are 20,000 political prisoners in Chile... Not only those who are with the Popular Unity government are oppressed, but all those who think."

Martinez said that such a thing could happen in Canada, too. He pointed out that during the FLQ crisis in October 1970, "with one stroke of the pen all our democratic rights were removed."

A movie that was made in the spring of 1973, prior to the coup, was shown before Martinez' speech.

"Under the Popular Unity government," Martinez said, "we lived a difficult but real democracy.... There was much hardship, but we were free... These democratic rights were not given to us, but gained by a long fight."

Chile today, under the junta government, was described by Martinez. All syndicates and political parties have been abolished.

There is complete and strict censorship. Libraries are being searched every day and books burnt.

"Life is no longer worthwhile (in Chile)," Martinez said, "Young people have no purpose to aim for. Small children cannot survive."

HART HOUSE

LUNCH HOUR EXERCISE CLASS
TODAY, 12 NOON
WRESTLING ROOM - EVERYONE WELCOME

BRIDGE CLUB

RANDOM SWISS TEAM GAME
TUES., MAR. 12
DEBATES ROOM, 6:45 P.M.

INFORMAL DEBATE

RESOLVED THAT THE RIGHTS OF THE INDIVIDUAL SHOULD BE SUBJUGATED TO THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS
WED., MAR. 13
BICKERSTETH ROOM, 3 P.M.

NOON HOUR

CLASSICAL CONCERT
KATIE KETCHUM, pianist
TUES., MAR. 12
MUSIC ROOM, 1 P.M.

NOON HOUR
JAZZ CONCERT

SUMMER SONG
WED., MAR. 13
EAST COMMON ROOM, 12-2 P.M.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

HART HOUSE CHORUS WITH THE NEW CHAMBER ORCHESTRA
SUN., MAR. 17
GREAT HALL, 8 P.M.
TICKETS FREE FROM THE HALL PORTER

ART COMMITTEE FILM SERIES

"MARGRITTE" — "GERMANY: DADA"
TODAY
DEBATES ROOM, 1-2 P.M. AND 7-8 P.M.

THE VARSITY
The Undergraduate Newspaper
Established 1880

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

The Varsity Board of Directors invites application for the position of the Board to be appointed by the fourteen incumbent Directors, for a two year term beginning July 1, 1974.

The Board represents the various estates in the university community and is responsible for the editorial integrity and the financial and business management of The Varsity.

Written applications should be addressed to Tony Usher, Chairman, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St., Toronto M5S 2E8. Applicants will be interviewed and a selection made at the Board's annual meeting on March 20.

Deadline for applications is 5 p.m., Friday, March 15, 1974.

all the latest in fashion
and custom-made eyewear

BRADDOCK
OPTICAL

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO.
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE:
780 BLOOR ST. WEST 962-2020

WE'RE WHELMED

We've never had a 'speaker sale' before, and frankly, we didn't realize that the response would be so favourable.

Our policy has always been to spend as much time as necessary with each customer, answer his questions, and give him time to listen, and compare. Buying audio equipment is serious business, and we don't like to rush.

No matter how many other customers are waiting, or if you visited us recently, and were frustrated by the seething mass of humanity, take heart.

THE RING-EPI SALE
FEATURING EPI LOUDSPEAKERS
EXTENDED UNTILL MARCH 16

921-3500

RING

629-SPADINA

or DOWN THE ROAD
WITH ABRAHAM &
ISAAC • written by
Randy Brown • directed
by Leslie O'Dell...

AT THE GLEN MORRIS

wed. mar. 13 to
fri. mar. 15
at 8 pm.
sat. mar. 16 at
8 pm & 9:45 pm.
FREE!

928-8705

Dismissals spark McMaster French strike

By MARINA STRAUSS

Grievances of French students at McMaster University in Hamilton were set perking Friday as an estimated 150 students went on strike following the dismissal of three French lecturers.

Spokesmen for the McMaster French Student Union say the students plan to hold a sit-in today at the humanities department dean's office.

On Friday students set up picket lines outside French classes, preventing regular course attendance.

The dismissals, however, came only as a sidelight to McMaster French students' major demand for parity at department meetings.

The McMaster drive for student representation on decision-making bodies parallels U of T French students' current bid for parity representation on staffing committees following the refusal of the Victoria College department to renew a popular lecturer's contract.

McMaster French students are pushing for reform of what they refer to as the degenerating state of their department, including poor courses, bad texts, and lack of spoken French.

The French Student Union voted overwhelming for improvements in teaching, courses, and texts in a referendum two weeks ago.

The referendum also demanded parity on committees deciding on the issues, as well as open evaluation forms and student-devised "counter-calendars" of French courses.

The French students are seeking active support from students in other departments, especially Spanish and Italian.

In an attempt to put pressure on the McMaster French Department, whose enrolment figures are dwindling, union members are visiting Hamilton secondary schools to inform students of what to expect if they intend to take French at McMaster.

At U of T, French students' initial efforts to sit students on the Vic department's body which wields the effective power on staff hiring and firing were quashed last month.

However a petition is now circulating in the department, supporting student representation and students hope to make a second bid for representation before the academic year ends.

Meanwhile there is no sign the Vic department will reverse its January decision and renew the lecturer's contract nor that he will be able to find a position elsewhere. The lecturer does not want his name disclosed.

The Vic department went ahead with the move in January despite a petition signed by 38 of 40 students from the four separate classes taught by the instructor saying he was "a teacher of superior quality" and that his dismissal would be a "loss" to students.

Students felt they were ignored in the decision-making process.

The U of T French Course Union is turning now to University College in an attempt to get student representation on that college's department's general assembly, with the ultimate goal of obtaining seats on the UC staffing body.

The union plans to outline more clearly its strategy at a meeting next Monday.

Women told to drop distrust of each other

If any legal change in the status of women is to be effective, the inbred tendency of women to distrust each other must be eliminated and be replaced by the solidarity of universal sisterhood.

So argued Helen laFontaine of the federal committee on the status of women, Saturday morning.

LaFontaine was one of three keynote speakers who addressed a predominantly female audience gathered at the First Unitarian Church to observe and celebrate International Women's Day.

She outlined the history of the festival and enumerated the most serious problems facing Canadian women now.

Society neither respects nor values women, said laFontaine, and no amount of legislation is going to change this attitude.

If, however, women ignore their individual or class differences and biases — if they regard each other as sisters and demonstrate their self-respect — society's negative view of females will be seriously challenged.

Women must also fight the distortion of their efforts caused by the media which makes women's movements appear a threat to society.

The most immediate problem facing Canadian females today, claimed laFontaine, is their lack of legal control over their bodies.

She noted and applauded the absence of many "sisters" who were in Ottawa Saturday demonstrating in defense of Dr. Henry Morgentaler and in favor of legalized abortion.

Ann Kennedy, a member of the federation of Women Teachers was the second speaker at Saturday morning's meeting.

Her discussion focused on the elementary and secondary school teachers' complete lack of both professional privileges and basic workers rights.

Kennedy was particularly enraged by the policies of school boards, such as the system of merit pay, which keep teachers pitted against each other and divided as workers.

The final speaker, Eva Duncan, an employee at Humber Memorial Hospital, considered the problems of Ontario hospital workers.

She delineated the difficulties she and her colleagues are having in their efforts to gain better pay and the right to strike.

The workers of 11 Toronto hospitals have been organized by the Canadian Union of Public Employees to bargain collectively with the government and the hospital administrators.

International Women's Day, March 8, was first declared in 1910 by the International Socialist Congress as a holiday to honor women and their struggles.

March 8 was chosen because it is the anniversary of two important demonstrations by New York women garment trade workers in 1957 and the 1908.

Helen laFontaine (left), Ann Kennedy, and Eva Duncan speak at International Women's Day celebration.

The Toronto celebration was organized by a special International Women's Day Committee, and it was supported by private donations and a $200 donation from the federal secretary of state.

Approximately 175 women attended the morning's speeches and participated in the workshops which followed.

Morgentaler speaks to Ottawa demo

By BOB BETTSON

OTTAWA—About 500 people from all over Canada demonstrated in support of Montreal doctor Henry Morgentaler outside Parliament here Saturday.

The demonstration, on a freezing windy day, was confronted when it reached Parliament hill with 60 supporters of the anti-abortion Right to Life group.

An indictment was read which has been unanimously adopted after the day-long tribunal calling for the repeal of all abortion laws and the dropping of charges against Morgentaler and his partner Dr. Yvan Machabee.

Morgentaler told the cheering crowd he would continue to fight until all women had the right to safe legal abortions with the human dignity they deserve.

He had earlier spoken at length to a packed Ottawa auditorium saying the woman rather than a doctor should have the right to decide if she will have an abortion. He blamed the laws for the death of many innocent women at the hands of quack doctors performing illegal abortions.

Morgentaler, who has been acquitted of some charges but faces more, said the laws were responsible for driving the women into desperate searches for quacks who are no more than "back door butchers."

He said many cases were not reported so the toll of deaths from illegal abortions is even higher than those released. Blame, he said, must rest squarely on the federal government which has refused to listen to the campaign for repeal of the laws.

Morgentaler, who has been forbidden to speak about abortion on radio or television or at new conferences by court order, said:

"Thank God they forgot to include individual interviews and public meetings."

"It is up to the doctors and hospitals of Canada to bend the abortion laws and defy them if necessary," he said. "We don't have the right to shun our responsibility to women."

Morgentaler said he would continue to fight despite harassment by pro-life groups who picket outside his office and the new attempts at harassment by the Quebec income tax department who have confiscated many of his personal papers, some having nothing to do with his abortion clinic.

He said his "greatest joy" was to "see a woman walk out of my clinic smiling happy and healthy." He vowed he would continue to provide the service to women as long as he could. The crowd gave him a two-minute-long standing ovation following his speech.

Machabee, who is Catholic, said he had changed from his anti-abortion stance a few years ago and begun to provide abortions for women who need them. "I decided it was hypocritical to be in favor of family planning and against abortion."

He decided to do it, like Dr. Morgentaler, openly risking arrest. This was an attempt to help change the laws, he added. He emphasized he had started a complete family clinic with birth control, vasectomies and abortion. He said he would refuse to give up as long as the law remains the same. "We will win even if it takes time," he asserted.

Another physician who spoke at the tribunal was a Vancouver doctor Robert Makaroff who was sentenced to two months in jail in 1970 for performing illegal abortions. He was also fined $15,000.

Women difficult to organize

By JANE WATERSTON

Office employees are about the most poorly paid and badly treated workers in Canada and yet it is uncommonly difficult to organize them—particularly the women among them—into unions.

This was the principal topic discussed by the secretaries, housewives, students and other office workers who attended the Saturday workshop on women in offices run by the International Women's Day Committee.

Accounts of various attempts to unionize office employees were given at the workshop.

The efforts in this direction made this past winter by the legal secretaries in Windsor, the library workers at York University, and the employees at the Canadian Underwriters Association were all reviewed and criticized.

The great difficulty in unionizing office workers can be traced to two major causes, the group felt.

Office employees are white collar workers and there is an inbred feeling among them, grounded in tradition, that unions apply almost uniquely to blue-collar workers.

Although this situation has fundamentally changed—there are 180,000 white collar workers in CUOE—most office employees still feel uncomfortable at the thought of unions.

SCSC initiates course evaluation

By PAUL CARSON

Scarborough College Students Council (SCSC) today begins an intensive course evaluation program following the refusal of the college council to make available results of an administration-sponsored teacher evaluation.

SCSC evaluations, patterned closely after the outline prepared by the college's instructional development committee, are to be distributed to most classes this week.

Results are to be tabulated and made available to students as soon as possible, at SCSC's expense, said incoming SCSC president John O'Donohue.

The decision to embark on the course evaluation program at this stage of the academic year has united all the opposing factions within the students' council.

Members who bitterly fought each other less than one month ago in the SCSC election campaign are now co-operating to distribute and collate the questionnaires.

This student action, somewhat unique in SCSC politics, developed last week after the faculty-dominated college council voted 9-5 not to make results of the administration-sponsored evaluation available either to students directly or to the SCSC.

There are 208 teaching staff and only 24 undergraduate seats on the 262-member council.

The 9-5 vote indicates the meeting lacked the required quorum, but no student member noticed that in time to prevent the vote.

Several important council and committee meetings have recently been suddenly adjourned for lack of quorum.

oops!

On page 1 of the March 4 issue we incorrectly identified a man in the photograph as a student involved in last year's Greek student uprising.

The man, in fact, is Stavros Petrolekas, who was the master of ceremonies at the presentation at the Medical Science Auditorium.

THE varsity TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors
Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Stelmick
Tom Walkom
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

Tonight may be remembered
as the night the editor
ALMOST turned human, under the influence of bel-lomanism. Hacking in font were Phil Stramba, Gida Oran, Paul Carson, Anne
Healy, David Simmonds, Tim
Gallagher, Liz Morrison, Jane
Waterston, Andrew Feludy,
Marina Strauss, Don
Cruikshank, and the giddy gosh, Bobby.

The Varsity, a member of Canadian
University Press, was founded in 1880
and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Dawson
Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee,
Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St.
George St.

SAC slates face apathy in elections

The mood on campus is increasingly grey. There is no clarity about anything for many students.

Alienation and apathy are the opponents of all three slates running in this week's SAC presidential elections for the 1974-75 academic year.

Political action, other than that located in the vanguardist and ineffective left-wing "bozo" groups on campus has almost totally vanished from its high point only a few years ago.

The struggle against the discipline code earlier this year proved students are not really interested in analyzing the real issues that affect their lives on this campus. At least, they aren't interested in getting involved at this point in time.

We wonder how long alienation and apathy will remain before students begin to realize that retreat to the books, themselves, dope, or some other escape will not work to solve their problems. They must become involved and attempt to deal with the "system"—be it the administration bureaucracy, their day-to-day faculty dealings, or whatever.

Recent SAC elections have seen the undergraduate electorate turn to alternate forms of expression of their disenchantment with student politicians for various reasons.

Some feel SAC and other organizations are bankrupt of leadership and ineffective, unable to help the average student with his/her real problems. Students we have talked to don't seem to really care if people in student governments are actually trying.

Cynicism and disregard are the orders of the day.

Last year students decided they really didn't care and gave apathy the vote. The abstentions totalled 428 to place third behind the Anderson and Vockery slates. The Havers, Baumann and Ridout slates all trailed the "apathy" party.

Some political scientists would call this form of vote a "negative" one, and it's difficult to quarrel with them. The vote, indeed, really doesn't solve much except the venting of personal frustrations and dissatisfactions at student politics and student politicians.

We have taken the position that voting doesn't change the world, but it sometimes prevents incompetents from gaining power at the expense of more qualified candidates. This campus hasn't really had it bad compared to some of the country's other play pens.

SAC services commissioner Seymour Kanowitch heads a slate with second-year engineering student Tim Buckley and Scarborough College student Fred Stewart.

"Kanowitch" this year's left-liberal slate has the most experienced team in the race. Kanowitch was services commissioner this year and cultural affairs commissioner two years ago (the portfolio no longer exists in the SAC). Kanowitch has also served on the Faculty of Arts and Science Council and the Interdisciplinary Studies Curriculum Committee.

The slate's platform is the broadest of the three in the race—emphasizing not only services, but also parity, the discipline code, university budget cuts, the status of women and relationships with the suburban campuses.

The three members of the ticket all want to see more local initiative and are willing to fund groups of students who develop specific ideas on improving campus services.

Kanowitch worked intensively on the discipline code this winter and, although we have clearly disagreed with the policy he helped form, he was, nevertheless, one of the few people willing to devote time to tiring negotiations with an insensitive administration.

Kanowitch wants to work closely with students through their college student council presidents. He feels students can offer direction to the central student government through the bodies they associate most closely with—their colleges.

He also admits that SAC made some tactical errors in the recent discipline campaign but is willing to "go on" from here to deal with important issues that affect students—teaching in the classroom, research by faculty members, etc.

Running mate Tim Buckley has served on the Presidential Advisory Committee on the Campus as the Campus Centre and wants to see more work done on the report which attempts to make the campus a "more human" place to be. Buckley also feels better services are needed—decent food services, a bank on campus, and perhaps even an attempt at a central pub.

Fred Stewart brings balance onto the Kanowitch slate with suburban college representation. His major skills have included involvement in the financial world, and his experience would probably help to make the SAC budget go a long way, as well as freeing other SAC reps to deal with other important issues.

Brute Force Committee chairman Michael Chamberland heads a slate with Carol Bonhoff and Jim Maclean.

The Chamberland ticket is waging such a negative campaign that we wonder why they're even running. If they're trying to show the supposed "irrelevancy" of the students' council, we've seen better acts in high schools. And if they're actually serious then they do indeed have problems—serious ones.

A Chamberland-Bonhoff-Maclean leaflet emphasizes their main issue: "Cut back SAC" and asks for a protest vote. Returning to the stale rhetoric of the late sixties Chamberland's slate attempts to "hype" students with the slogan: "Power to the correct people."

One of the slates' key issues is to reorganize SAC. Chamberland's slate neglects to mention that SAC was reorganized under a new constitution two years ago when a certain Paul Cadario and friends ran a similar smear campaign. Cadario's gift to the university was a discipline code.

Chamberland's leaflet also calls for "a closer scrutiny of grant distribution and policy discussions." The slate might start by attending some SAC meetings to discover how grants are actually handed out and who gets them. By Chamberland's own admission until last week he hadn't set foot into the SAC office this year.

The other "Issues" in the Chamberland leaflet are just as muddy.

Administratively the three appear to have little confidence in their own ability. Jim Maclean was at one time asked to run for an engineering society position but turned it down because he didn't think he was "experienced" enough.

Maclean also ran unsuccessfully for VUSAC.

We can't take the slate seriously; they haven't fully explained why they are running and what they want to see done. Their campaign is based on "knocking" SAC rather than offering constructive criticism. It is essentially a negative campaign to gain the "negative" vote.

Peter Baumann heads a slate with Bill Paterson and Laura Conn as running mates. Baumann placed last of seven candidates in last year's SAC contest, although he did run with two different mates.

Last year Baumann's bid for the presidency was written off as "a lark campaign". None of his former slate had any student government experience. One year later that lack of experience remains.

Last year they mouthed platitudes about "getting people involved, in what they want to do, in films, in dances, in whatever they want to do". This year Baumann didn't even get involved in what he, supposedly, wants to do—become a student politician.

And last year they finished last of five slates with 120 votes; even apathy placed higher.

The Baumann slate would renegotiate the Cadario-Conway Code over the summer while students were off campus. This is somewhat surprising, since even the administration has said it will not negotiate the code with students off campus.

The slate also opposes the proposed Ontario Federation of Students increase. OFS is fighting to keep tuition fees from once again rising, yet Baumann and friends feel OFS is not giving students their money's worth.

OFS asks for support in referendum

Students are being asked to support the Ontario Federation of Students in a referendum held in conjunction with the SAC annual presidential elections. OFS wants to see students pay $1.50 to the organization, instead of the present $0.40.

OFS has only existed for a little over two years, and, as the feature on pages 10 and 11 of today's paper explains, the organization is the offshoot of several other similar bodies.

One thing is clear. As long as there is a provincial government in charge of education policy students will need a strong federated organization to support their demands and protect their interests.

Operating over the past two years on a shoe-string budget OFS has not been able to effectively defend and reflect students' interests. The per capita increase would give the organization such a mandate.

University faculty members have the Ontario Confederation of Faculty Associations to defend their interests, administrative employees have the Canadian Union of Public Employees, and, in a similar manner, students need a strong organization.

This is not to say that OFS has been perfect during the past two years—some of its faults are mentioned on pages 10 and 11—but like anything new it has had to go through some difficult teething periods.

OFS is now emerging as a potential force through which to channel student discontent concerning such aspects of the post secondary education as poor housing, poor teaching, and poor services.

Step by step the organization has gained recognition by the provincial government as the legitimate body to represent post secondary students at the provincial level. To stifle the energy of such an organization so early in its existence would be premature, to say the least.

OFS will not solve the problems of the world. On the other hand it doesn't pretend to want to. What the organization will do is give students, through their elected student councils a channel to work through for meaningful educational reform.

OFS is a limited organization for the goals it seeks to attain. However, it is a necessity for students faced with increased tuition hikes, and other major regressive educational changes on the part of the provincial Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

manage the $300,000 annual SAC budget. We consider Fred an excellent representative for the suburban colleges on the ticket.

We therefore encourage students to support the election of the Kanowitch, Buckley, Stewart ticket.

Steve Field,
John O'Donohue,
president-elect,
Scarborough College
Students' Council,
Brian S. Gazely,
president,
Victoria University Students'
Administrative Council,

Peter Smith,
president,
Students' Administrative
Government of Erindale,

Ian Morrison,
UC IV,
Marianne Cheetham,
president,
Students' Council,
Faculty of Nursing,

Judy Wahl,
St. Michael's College,

Joseph Redican,

Patricia Remy,
vice-president,
Victoria University Students'
Administrative Council,

Shelly Slaukoff,
president,
Innis College Students'
Society,

Kent Harvey,
Architect V,

Will Kirshner,
Innis Social Convenor.

Lindsay Kerrigan

Levitt mystifies mystifications

The university infrastructure and all its internal machinations are almost overwhelmingly complicated. This is accentuated by its mystification by those who spend their whole time administering it, and who would like to work with as little interference as possible. Concomitantly, student input into Governing Council is rendered structurally impotent not only by its numerical weakness, but also because our term of office is limited to only one year (as opposed to three for faculty). This is clearly insufficient time to develop the understanding of how to be most effective, the fluency with the information, and the personal chains to communication and contacts: all of which are required to either effectively lobby or criticize.

Consequently, we need student representatives who have previously demonstrated both understanding and competence in university affairs. I must also confess to a skepticism concerning candidates, previously unheard from who, surfacing suddenly at election time, support all the 'right' issues. Certainly any student possessing the interest and commitment (about 25 hours per week for Governing Council and related activities) which Gov. Council requires, would have shown some indication of this previous to the election.

For the reasons stated above, I wholeheartedly endorse Political Science Course Union Chairman, Howard Stein to be my successor on the Governing Council. Howard Stein has been very active for the last three years in a multitude of student issues (including the library and math reform movements). He has been particularly active in his course union on behalf of political science and economics students. I also endorse SAC vice-president Steve Moses for the professional faculty representative.

Howard Levitt
McMaster applicant

Hockey coverage praised

As the manager of the Grads I hockey team and as coach of the Grads II, I would like to say how much the fine job you do in covering the intramural hockey is appreciated by all of us involved with both teams. The players enjoy seeing their names listed after getting goals, as well as the humorous context in which they're often presented.

Dave Copp and the other members of the Hockey Staining Committee have asked me to express the above sentiments on their behalf as well.

Bob Steele

Bargaining unit size unknown

We would like to clear up a couple of points in your article on our application for certification which ran in your issue March 6.

We do not have any idea as to how the university will conceive of a graduate assistant bargaining unit. We will only know their position for sure after they respond to the inquiries of the Labour Relations Board. Therefore, unless you have an inside source of information, we would have to say the figure of 2,400 has no particular significance. The idea that doctors and dentists would be in the proposed bargaining unit is also completely hypothetical.

The numerical size of our membership suggested in your article is incorrect as of the time of our application.

Thanks for your continued coverage of our efforts.

Sandy Gage
The GAA Executive

Varg makes it to New Delhi

A copy of the Varsity, February 11, 1974, has been circulating in New Delhi this week. In it you report the refusal of the Canadian government to intervene at the United Nations on behalf of the hundreds of thousands of civilians held in prison camps throughout South Vietnam. I have joined with you in protesting to Mitchell Sharp: as a Canadian citizen I find the moral bankruptcy of this man outrageous; as a human being I find it deeply shameful.

Few of us who have lived most of our lives in obscene affluence can begin to comprehend the injustice and the suffering experienced by the individuals crammed together in prisons like Chi Hoa or Con Son. I know few Canadians prepared even to attempt connecting the facts of their daily lives with the grotesque mock-lives forced upon these people. I met one such prisoner, one of the few ever released, a Buddhist monk who had been shipped mistakenly to Phu Quoc Island - a detention camp for prisoners of war. With uncanny personal strength hammered out only at the cost of his own ordeal, he related what he and fellow monks, peasants and students had witnessed: the crippled, untried inmates of the tiger cages, the daily handfuls of rice mixed with gravel that the prisoners call "red rice", the rampant tuberculosis and the ubiquitous American advisors. Somehow I suppose he told this in the belief that Canada has played a different role in the agony of his country than the United States. I didn't have the stamina to tell him that the actual green berets worn by the US Special Forces had been knitted by Dorothea Knit Mills in Don Mills, Toronto.

What leaves the most lasting impression upon the mind, however, is not the suffering, but the indomitable endurance of these people, so many of whom have been continuously shackled for up to five years. The letters they smuggle out of prison are testaments of hope - there is a collective understanding that thousands of individuals all over the world are acting in solidarity with them in their efforts to return to freedom. I hope you have printed some of these letters from prison in your newspaper so that people at the university will be moved by the spirit of determination and the quest for peace that they invariably express.

You may be surprised to know that reports here indicate the wave of concern on this issue within Canada itself is unprecedented. On no other issue has the Ministry for External Affairs received such a volume of correspondence. This pressure on the Canadian government must grow. If every student at your university had the simple dignity to write directly to Mitchell Sharp asking for intervention on this issue at the United Nations that might really tip the balance. At least it would begin to redress Canada's last formal act in Vietnam - which was to supervise the release of the captured American bomber pilots and then pull out, abandoning the neutralist monks and students to the tiger cages.

Richard Reoch,
(Class of T70),
New Delhi,
India

Meds students act like babies

Last Friday I attended a lecture in Med Sci. given to second year medical students. The subject was certain infectious diseases and was given by a guest lecturer who is one of the world's foremost authorities in his particular field.

During this lecture I witnessed one of the most unforgettable displays of rudeness, immaturity, and total lack of manners I have ever seen afforded any lecturer or professor, much less a distinguished guest speaker. Such a display I would not have expected from a grade three class of eight year olds and even less adults.

Very regrettably the lecturer was in no position to either comment or walk out, which would have been most appropriate. One of my objections was the number and loudness of the conversations that pervaded the lecture. I'm sure valid attempts were made to be heard above the voice of the lecturer. The other objection was the ostentatiousness and arrogance with which many students made their entries and exists during the lecture. It seems to me to be only common decency to either shut up or leave the room as inconspicuously as possible, if the lecture is not appealing, rather than insult the speaker and annoy fellow students.

To me one of the important issues is whether or not this is the general attitude among the medical students. Is this the atmosphere found in the Faculty of Medicine and if so why is it tolerated?

Another important aspect is that in three years time these same students will graduate and become physicians who are expected to establish and maintain relations with those that go to them and those with whom they work. Such conduct is far from from flattering and in three years manners don't change.

I was surprised and shocked to have seen such a display from students in their second year of Medicine. Perhaps it is not so surprising that there exists a slowly widening gap between physician and patient. I this attitude of "I am God's gift to the world" doesn't (isn't) change, then there can hardly be grounds for any improvement of such relations.

Paul Fenje Jr.
Trinity II

Scarborough College
invites you to UKRAINIAN DAY
WED. MARCH 13, 1974
11:00 - 5 P.M.
CONCERT 12:00 to 2:00 P.M.

Bakka
a science fiction bookshoppe.
282 & 284 Queen St. W.,
Toronto, M5V 2A1,
Ontario, Canada.
Telephone: (416) 595-1161
science fiction, fantasy,
new & used comics, pulps

CHINESE FOOD
459 Dundas St. W. - 366-5411

- Variety of authentic Chinese dishes prepared by our 2 chefs, direct from Hong Kong
- Specialties - 100 Flower Shrimp Rolls-South Sea Chicken
- Beautiful Oriental banquet facilities for University groups

MOON WAH
文華茶樓

BE INVOLVED
Work for Office Overload
When you need us,
We need you

office overload
JOURNAL INTERNET INC.

BRAMPTON 151 BLOOR ST W 524 6844 238-1111
CEDARBAVE 451-4290 830 0297
SCARBOROUGH 421-1420 LONG BRANCH 251 2251
DOW MILLS 489 6862
WILLOWDALE 489 2880 WESTON/REXDALE 243 8409
DOWNSVIEW 781 8125 390 BAY ST W (LEGAL) 368 9234

Letters to "Write On" should be typed, double-spaced on a 64-character line, and signed. Contributions may be edited for space reasons. Letters are published according to space available, immediacy of topic, and relevancy. Mail letters to The Varsity, 91 St. George Street, Toronto 181 by campus or regular delivery or bring your letter to The Varsity editorial offices.

Supress racism: journalist

By LIZ MORRISON

Racism as an ideology should be "isolated and deprived of the right to express itself," said French journalist Guy Sitbon at the Teach-in on Racism Friday afternoon.

"Discussion implies respect for both points of view," he added, "but to discuss with a magician or a sorcerer is not to discuss at all."

Toronto lawyer Charles Roach also took this point of view. He explained that slander is not allowed and that the racist slanders "a large class of people."

All four speakers at the afternoon session emphasized that the struggle against the capitalist ruling class is the struggle against racism.

Sitbon spoke of the "super-exploitation" of the North African worker in France, and how the ruling class relates to the Arabs in terms of production.

Not only did France extract raw materials from North Africa for nothing but now the North African worker in France is underpaid, underprotected and regarded as being "evil and deviant from the ruling class."

Fear of the foreigner, Sitbon maintained, is the easiest ideology to introduce.

Roach looked at what he called the unstated assumptions behind Canada's immigration policy. The immigration laws, he pointed out, are the means of controlling the labor market, in effect, guaranteeing jobs for white Canadians.

Reasons for a discriminatory immigration policy were protectionist and linked with the fact that Canada and the US have a unified economy which necessitates a common labor barricade.

"The Americans led the world in setting up a restrictive immigration policy," Roach told the audience.

Because we are part of the British tradition which does not openly spout racist policies, Roach explained, Canadian immigration laws are more covertly and hypocritically discriminatory.

Unstated racist assumptions lie behind measures such as restricting immigration on the grounds of the introduction of communicable diseases and criminal elements.

The other technique used is that of "programming Canadians to be xenophobes" by denying cultural expression of ethnic minorities.

Canadians who do not have contact with these different cultures become "ignorantly fearful."

Bill Schabas of the U of T history department argued for a communist perspective. He attacked academic racism pointing out that this was another manifestation of the ruling class backing racism.

Racist attitudes often discriminated against the use of certain languages whereas under a communist system the cultural interest of all groups were protected, said Schabas.

"The international working class is always active in fighting racism", he concluded.

Toronto physician Jerry Green talked about "Medicine and Racism." He claimed that there was not only racism but sexism and elitism in medicine, and this reflected the capitalist system.

Many doctors, because they hold ruling class values, are prejudiced against the poor and non-white. He gave examples of discrimination in the area of workers' compensation and research experiments.

Birth control experiments are often carried out in non-white areas without the knowledge and consent of the people involved with the aim of increasing the affluence of white societies.

Higher maternal and infant mortality rates among non-whites is often a result of "atrocious" medical care. Green told the audience that the nature of the capitalist system was designed for exploitation.

"Medicine is racist," he said, "when the attitude to the patients results in their getting poorer health treatment... and profits are valued above human beings."

The Varsity—Phil Morrison

Toronto lawyer Charles Roach said racist assumptions underly immigration laws.

"Since 1905, the Flower of Belle - Historiography"

The University of Toronto Historical Society invites membership applicants for 1974-75. The Club provides an intellectual forum for the presentation and discussion of papers on a wide variety of topics of both an academic and non-academic nature. Membership is open to all students at the University of Toronto except those enrolled in the School of Graduate Studies.

Write (enclosing a brief curriculum vitae) or call:
Ian Morrison, 200 Montrose Ave., Toronto
534-8224

CAREERS in JEWISH LIFE

Monday, March 18 - 'JEWISH STUDIES'

5 PM PROF. FRANK TALMAGE:

DEPT. OF NEAR EASTERN STUDIES, UNI. OF TORONTO
'JEWISH STUDIES IN NORTH AMERICA'

7:30 PM MRS. R. KATCHEN:

LIBRARIAN, ROBERTS LIBRARY, U of T
'LIBRARIANSHIP & JEWISH STUDIES'

8:30 PM PROF. A. AVICHAI:

DEPT. OF HISTORY, UNIV. OF ROCHESTER
'JEWISH STUDIES IN ISRAEL'

Tuesday, March 19 - 'JEWISH EDUCATION
& the RABBINATE'

5 PM DR. JOSEPH I. COHEN:

CONSULTANT, AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR JEWISH EDUCATION
'JEWISH EDUCATION AS A CAREER'

7:30 PM RABBI S. STAUBER:

RABBI OF BNAI TORAH CONGREGATION
'CRISIS & OPPORTUNITY FOR THE RABBI IN NORTH AMERICA'

8:30 PM RABBI M. BERGLAS:

RABBI OF SHAARET TEFILLAH CONGREGATION
'MOTIVATION FOR THE RABBINATE: A PERSONAL ACCOUNT'

Wednesday, March 20 - 'SOCIAL WORK'

4 PM PROF. SOL GREEN:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, YESHIVA UNIV.
'WHAT'S JEWISH ABOUT SOCIAL WORK?'

5 PM MR. JEROME DIAMOND:

DIRECTOR, JEWISH FAMILY & CHILD SERVICES
'THE FIELD: EMPLOYMENT, SALARIES, MOBILITY'

7 PM PROF. BEN SCHLESINGER:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TOR
'PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL WORK
IN NORTH AMERICA'

8 PM PROF. BEN SHAPIRO:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TORONTO
'SOCIAL WORK OPPORTUNITIES IN ISRAEL'

at Hillel - 186 ST. GEORGE

SUPPERS WILL BE SERVED EACH DAY FOR PARTICIPANTS WITHOUT CHARGE. CALL THE OFFICE
TO RESERVE - 923-8881

ART FILMS

"MAGRITTE"

AND

"GERMANY: DADA"

TODAY AT 1 P.M. AND 7 P.M.

IN THE DEBATES ROOM, HART HOUSE

CASINO NIGHT

SAT. MARCH 16 8:30 P.M.

Black Jack, Roulette Wheel, Crown &
Anchor, Over & Under, etc. Beer,
Refreshments, Fun.
Will it be your lucky night?

Admission Price: $1.00
Proceeds for Israel

HILLEL - 186 ST. GEORGE

Lecture:
*Why a diaspora Jew
can't be critical of Israel*
Speaker:
Gershon Hundert

PHD CANDIDATE IN JEWISH HISTORY AT COLUMBIA
MEMBER OF BREIRA - FORUM ON DIASPORA - ISRAEL
RELATIONS MEMBER OF NEW YORK CHAVURA.

Sunday, March 17 at 8:00
Hillel House: 186 St. George

come
HONKY TONK
with
VINCE TROY
Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!!
HOUSE OF LANCASTER
147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0815

Finally exposed to public view is Terry Ruddy whose picture was lost last week by incompetent Varsity editors. Ruddy is running for Governing Council in Constituency II.

HOW ABOUT BECOMING A MCGILL MBA?

Exciting things are happening in McGill's Faculty of Management. Want to know more? Come and meet Professor M. Goldberg on TUESDAY, MARCH 12th, 1974, 2:00 - 5:00 p.m. in the PLACEMENT CENTRE.

RONNIE HAWKINS

IS AT LOUNGE
Hades

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.
OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 8:30 P.M.

XEROX
EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY COPIES

7¢
EACH

1st thru 5th
copies per original

5¢
EACH

6th thru 10th
copies per original

2¢
EACH

11th and additional copies of the
same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes, Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work) 20%
• FREE collating

ALSO AVAILABLE

- CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
- REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-6:00 PM

NOTE:
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

Concept of race attacked

By TIM GALLAGHER

A variety of speakers from all backgrounds delivered talks on racism and the university during the teach-in held at Convocation Hall on Friday.

Starting off the afternoon discussions, was Ashley Montagu, a renowned anthropologist and author of more than 40 books.

Montagu spoke on race, intelligence, and the intelligence testers and attacked the whole concept of race.

Although there are genetic factors in man's development, Montagu asserted: "All of us belong to the same population or group, to the same family... the family of humanity."

He added "humanity has evolved culturally," and not racially.

As for intelligence, Montagu said: "Economic equality has nothing to do with social equality or psychological equality."

Montagu stated "although everyone of us is intellectually unequal," it is impossible to attribute intelligence to "a person's skin color."

On medical care, Montagu said: "We need to make medicine a public service, not a privilege of man's economic position."

Tobias Schwarz, co-chairman on the committee against racism, an organization of more than 1,000 academics, spoke on academic racism and the fight against it.

He said racism "affects every single one of us."

He went on to say "six million Jews were killed by the Nazis... but so were 20 million Russians and untold numbers of others."

The rise of Nazism, he said "was facilitated by the so-called academic community... and the belief among the people that racism wasn't their problem."

Today, according to Schwarz, "this trend has undergone a tremendous upsurge... and is now a veritable plague in universities and in textbooks."

Arthur Jensen was cited as one theorist who feels "blacks are dumber than whites."

"Shades of a Nazi solution to economic problems are revealed by such theorists," according to Schwarz.

Besides this "outrage," Schwarz noted "enormous amounts of money are being spent to promote this pseudo-science."

Theorists like Jensen, Schwarz emphasized, are being "promoted on campuses in North America" and have a direct consequence for all of society.

"The black rebellion in Watts a sect. of Los Angeles has been blamed upon aggression centres in the brain and this has led to the development of programs of psycho-surgery," he said.

An audience member cited the importance of opposing the theories of people like Herrnstein and Jensen which claim blacks are inferior. He quoted an article from the Detroit Free Press which states between 100,000 and 200,000 people, mostly blacks, had been sterilized in the US.

After Schwarz finished, an audience member announced that Edward Banfield an urban affairs writer who says southern Italians are "amoral" was going to speak at U of T on this Tuesday and asked Schwarz how he would oppose Banfield.

"We should question the motives of such theorists," he said. As for Banfield he said there was "no question of Banfield's intentions... and he should not be debated but shut up altogether."

Chargex Accepted * Student Discount

SOFT LENSES
AVAILABLE

GLASSES
large selection of imported frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.

354 Yonge St.

364-2607

CUT BACK SAC

For a reorganized central student government

MICHEL CHAMBERLAND president

CAROL BONHOFF vice-president

JIM MAGLEAN vice-president

SAC ELECTION MARCH 13, 14

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

CLAUDE BISSELL PROFESSORSHIP
OF CANADIAN-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

RICHARD E. CAVES

A LECTURE AND TWO SEMINARS ON -
"COMPETITION IN THE OPEN ECONOMY"

COMPETITION IN THE OPEN ECONOMY:
A GENERAL VIEW

Thursday, March 14, at 8:00 p.m.
Cody Hall, Faculty of Nursing,
50 St. George Street

SEMINARS: Competition and Policy in Postwar Japan
Market Structure and Public Policy in Canada

Tuesday, March 19, at 4:10 p.m.
Thursday, March 21, at 4:10 p.m.
Upper Library, Massey College

Members of the University and Public are cordially invited

Elm Flame Burger and Steak NOW OPEN

TRY OUR DELICIOUS
100% BEEF BURGERS
Assorted Sandwiches, sea foods and much more
Come and try our breakfast specials from 7-11 a.m.
ALSO FAST TAKE OUT SERVICE
338 HURON ST. (AT HARBOR)
967-1498

TERMPAPERS

Quality, Originality, Security
$2.75 per page
Catalog. Available $2.00
Mon.-Fri. 12 noon-8 p.m.;
Sat. 12 noon-5 p.m.
ESSAY SERVICES
57 Spadina Avenue,
Suite 105
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Telephone: (416)366-6549

YEHUDI MENUHIN

in concert for
CBC Radio

MacMillan
Theatre

Edward Johnson Building

Friday, Mar. 29
8:30 p.m.

Tickets:
MacMillan Theatre
Box Office

The Toronto Island faces eviction

Photography by Brian Pel

land Community n this summer

It might have been just another winter for the residents of the Toronto Islands.

However, Metro's Christmas present of eviction notices for next August has led the tightly-knit community to rally round for the last stand.

Ironically, while Metro politicians screamed to get rid of the "squatters," one yacht club stands to reap a killing in the land deal.

The Queen City Yacht Club on Algonquin Island is slated to more than double its land holdings on that island once the residents are evicted.

The extra land will be taken from land now used for residential properties by the islanders on Algonquin Island.

Meanwhile, the kids on the islands are busy being kids and the boys down at the firehall are still part of the local color—virtually a page out of history when everybody in town knew everybody else on a first-name basis.

Islanders are now waging the biggest struggle in the 150 years the white man has lived on the land.

OFS: less lobbying, more organizing needed

By BOB BETTSON

The Ontario Federation of Students/Fédération des Étudiants de l'Ontario (OFS/FEO), now in its third year, is attempting to establish itself as a potent force on the student scene. In a referendum this Wednesday and Thursday at the University of Toronto it will ask students for a $1.10 increase to the $0.40 they already pay. The $1.50 fee, if approved, will come from a direct levy of over 23,000 U of T undergraduates.

However, OFS/FEO needs to clarify its political direction. This academic year it has served as a low-profile research and lobbying organization. The work has largely involved briefs and position papers designed for presentation to the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

OFS/FEO's "low profile" contrasts sharply with its well-publicized but unsuccessful and ineffective fees withholding campaign of 1972-1973. Although the withholding campaign was OFS/FEO's largest mobilization effort to date it ended in failure because it tried to reverse a policy which had already been adopted by the provincial government.

However, research co-ordinator Paul Axelrod readily admits OFS has more credibility with the government than with the students it is supposed to represent.

Therefore OFS/FEO is trying to consolidate its position with a series of referenda on campuses this spring and next fall asking for a fee increase. Students at Western, Ryerson and St. Patrick's College (Ottawa) have already indicated their support this spring for an increased OFS/FEO fee. However, Carleton University recently voted down the proposal.

The new proposal, intended to increase OFS/FEO's organizing capability as well as its lobbying and publicity functions will increase the staff to 10 from its present three. Four regional fieldworkers, a press liaison officer, three research people and a general secretary will complement the present staff—executive co-ordinator, research co-ordinator and field co-ordinator.

OFS/FEO formed on the history of past student unions

Students' Administrative Council (SAC) executive assistant Art Moses, an OFS/FEO observer for the past two years, believes the organization must not look at the proposed fees as a panacea. "It (OFS/FEO) should avoid a large bureaucracy. The danger is that employees will not spend enough time talking to and organizing students on the campuses."

Moses, a former Canadian University Press bureau chief says PFS/FEO's press relations and publicity endeavours have been poor. He sees the hiring of a press co-ordinator to give daily and campus press a co-ordinated and coherent view of OFS/FEO activities as a necessity to increase student support.

Most observers who spoke to the Varsity have a common feeling OFS/FEO has not enough grass roots support among student governments on the various campuses. It has had little publicity or effectiveness other than during the fees strike and this has partially resulted from the organization's lobbying-research status. OFS/FEO has perceived its main task to be that of gaining favor with the provincial government through established channels, instead of communicating with its over 100,000 student members.

Formed in 1972, OFS/FEO was born amid the chaos of the successful U of T occupations of Simcoe Hall over open stack access to the Robarts Library.

Former SAC president Bob Spencer (1971-72) recalls that the OFS/FEO founding conference was successful, but much of its deliberations were interrupted by the library occupation events and the subsequent police action to end it.

Spencer, now executive assistant at the Students Union of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute (SURPI), was instrumental in the creation of the newest provincial federation of students. He also sat on the committee which first replaced the now defunct Ontario Union of Students (OUS) and, a committee that later took over during the transitional period between the death of the Canadian Union of Students (CUS) and the founding of OFS/FEO.

Axelrod, with OUS before its demise, said it, like its national counterpart CUS, was out of touch with students in the province. (OUS collapsed in 1971 after a gradual decline.) Founded during the radical late sixties, OUS was still involved organize to prevent government actions detrimental to their interests.

OFS/FEO's first year: fees withholding

OFS/FEO's first year was, in a word, difficult. The first tasks of any new organization are streamlining structural proposals, formulating a constitution, establishing contacts and mobilizing a base of support, but OFS/FEO was confronted with two immediate issues it had to take action on.

Not only was there a $100 tuition fee increase around the time the organization was founded, but the Commission in confrontation politics after they were no longer fashionable. Axelrod added he thought there was not a great chasm; "there was always a radical minority." However, he did concede there had been a movement towards a more conciliatory political stance.

OFS research co-ordinator Paul Axelrod thinks OFS is at crossroads.

In contrast to OUS, OFS was founded to provide lobbying and research functions as well as to co-ordinate political work. Spencer says the founders took a more moderate political position in 1972, believing it should be more a representative organization than an agent for radical political action.

The structure was more in tune with the more moderate mood on almost all campuses, with member councils having to approve all OFS/FEO policy decisions before they became OFS/FEO policy. An executive was also created to supervise the ongoing business of the organization and prevent the OUS dilemma, where the organization's workers had grown increasingly out-of-touch with the membership.

In a recent paper analyzing the history of provincial organizations Axelrod said: "because the level of political awareness and concern tends to be higher among those active in political organizations than among those who are not, OUS found itself in an agonizing contradiction—the more political it appeared, the more it was alienated from the student body."

However, Spencer and Axelrod both agree the student councils continued to feel the need for a central student organization in Ontario. They set up, therefore, a council of Ontario Student Presidents to replace OUS for an interim period. Meanwhile, Spencer and other members would try to bring back some proposals for a new organization.

Education is primarily the responsibility of the provincial government and with the financial vulnerability of students in the face of tuition increases and grant cutbacks, students are in the position of any other interest group—they have to on Post Secondary Education in Ontario had just issued a draft report proposing further increases.

These were formidable tasks for a new organization, and OFS/FEO quickly hired Craig Heron, a veteran student union organizer from U of T as general co-ordinator. The organization then began to gear up for an active and challenging first year faced with a large number of problems.

OFS/FEO then counted almost 80 per cent of the universities in Ontario as members plus some community colleges, funded by a $0.25 per capita student fee from member student councils. The levy provided the organization with only a small office and three workers, thereby beginning its work on a low level of support.

The organization placed strong emphasis on member student councils as vehicles for support, but unfortunately response to OFS/FEO met with different results on different campuses.

U of T turned out to be a surprise for the organization. OFS/FEO received strong support from an unexpected corner in newly-elected conservative SAC president Eric Miglin, who had just defeated a liberal administration under Bob Spencer. Miglin supported the fees strike OFS/FEO was developing and successfully urged students to withhold their second term fee installments. The U of T October (1972) referendum was an unparalleled success for this campus, with the largest percentage student turnout in the university's history for a referendum—55 per cent—over 75 per cent of those who voted favored a fees strike.

Results were similar on other campuses; however some barely conducted any campaign. Queen's a campus with a conservative student body, supported the fees strike overwhelmingly. Other student councils were not as well organized and some campuses did not even participate in the October referendum, and, as a result, many avoided the fees withholding campaign.

OFS/FEO was stuck with only the "clout" of a partial fees strike and its tactic put little pressure on the provincial government in the end, since the universities were responsible for collecting the fees and they, not the government, suffered.

Next came the biggest fiasco of the organization's first year—the ill-conceived "mass" demonstration at Queen's Park. Despite a majority vote at an OFS conference, the U of T, and Queen's did not participate in what was billed as a "mass" show of support to give momentum to the upcoming fees withholding.

Toronto's Miglin split with the majority and persuaded U of T's SAC to pull out of the demonstration. Queen's soon followed. However, some U of T college councils notably Victoria, supported the demonstration which only drew 500 supporters, many of the bused in.

The demonstration's failure revealed some of the inadequacies of the central organization. Subject to the whims of student councils, notorious for their unreliability, OFS/FEO could not pursue any province-wide strategy and tactics. To do so would be to run the high risk of failure. If three campuses the size of Western, U of T, and York pulled out any effective action would be killed. Even the executive was hamstrung since its decisions had to be taken back to the individual councils.

This was evident during the January, 1973, OFS/FEO executive meeting which called for all campuses to hold a one day moratorium on classes in protest against educational cutbacks by the Davis government. The decision was made Saturday, announced in the press, and revoked two days later when some campuses refused to participate. The organization seemed to be paralyzed.

Although the fees withholding campaign had little success, per se, a rash of occupations abruptly broke out. Two occupations occurred at Western, and at York's two campuses because attempts were made by the administrations to withhold Ontario Student Award Plan (OSAP) cheques until fees were paid. In both cases the administrations backed down, embarrassed because the occupations gained broad support and significant media coverage. Furthermore, the Ontario government helped diffuse the issue by making a statement that students would have to pay their fees eventually, but they could get their cheques beforehand.

Two related demonstrations were held to protest the cutbacks—one at Trent, where students closed down the university, and another at Brock, where a 13-day sit-in occurred.

At Brock 15 professors were threatened with the loss of their jobs and a similar situation was anticipated at Trent. Both student unions were upset when OFS failed to provide needed support. However, the new organization had already over-extended itself and its inaction was understandable. Brock was so incensed at the lack of reinforcement from OFS/FEO that the student council almost left the federation.

The fees strike finally ended in February, 1973, again aided by the U of T SAC, which, voting against its executive (including Miglin), called off the fees strike on February 9, before any other campus had withdrawn. Later in the month the others abandoned their protests and by the end it was realized nothing was achieved except an awareness that students could be mobilized.

Fees strike and individual action with no mass base

Axelrod blamed failure on the fact the fees strike was an individualized tactic, not a mass action. It was essentially a defensive strategy based on reversing, not preventing, a policy. However, some lessons were learned and some progress resulted. First, OFS became known as a viable force. Organization on some campuses was astonishingly successful. It proved that if the councils were well-organized, students could carry out a large-scale campaign such as a fees strike. It also gained public attention and showed the provincial government that students would be unwilling to accept further indiscriminate increases in tuition or cuts in grants.

OFS/FEO's weakness, however, was not only found in the campus student councils but also internally. The Brock

Just after the founding of OFS, the Davis government announced a $100 fee increase. This near occupation was the result. OFS followed with a fees strike.

The Varsity—David Lloyd

and Trent student councils had reason to complain. OFS had concentrated its resources on what proved to be an unsuccessful tactic and ignored other forms to fight against the cutbacks.

Axelrod blames the result on a lack of a concrete, institutionalized central organization with a carefully planned strategy designed to achieve change. Heron notes the need for an increased staff from the (then only) two workers who had to cope with the need for the immense load of the fees strike.

The gradual building of a forceful and more progressive movement is what many OFS/FEO people believe will ensure the continued existence of OFS/FEO. Axelrod analyses the need for an increased amount of research and lobbying to buttress any action that OFS/FEO plans.

"The government must be confronted on its own terms," he said. The OFS/FEO policy would evolve in this way as closer to the campus, and would help build a large following. After this, more activist tactics could be used after liberal tactics fail, as most OFS theoreticians realize they must.

An analysis has been built up of where power lies in the government. Contacts have also been made since the fees strike. Axelrod sees this as one way OFS/FEO has increased its credibility with the government.

However, he admits this credibility must be translated to students and that is where the most controversy exists over the future of OFS/FEO.

More moderate tactics

At the end of his term as OFS/FEO executive co-ordinator Craig Heron said in his report that the future of the organization lay in study sessions, moratoria and other informational tactics rather than confrontation and demonstrations. This conclusion came despite Heron's experiences as one of the leaders of the successful occupation over the library at U of T.

Heron was, however, seeing the issue in terms of results. He concluded the government would never back down and would always get media support against student activism. He also thought that a priority for OFS/FEO would be to make alliances with other groups such as teachers and high school students in general actions against the cutbacks.

This last step, however, has not been taken. Heron's other recommendations for increased research and a province-wide newspaper have been carried out in part.

A speaker's bureau and reprint services have also not appeared.

However, has the OFS/FEO made much progress since the fees strike? The answer is: not very much. Nevertheless, there are possibilities for the future if the right people get involved and start setting political priorities and moving ahead at a more rapid pace.

OFS claims it is partially responsible for the commitment of the government not to raise fees next year, as well as favorable changes in QSAP, but OFS/FEO's effect cannot be gauged. The organization has constantly lobbied the government and the Committee on University Affairs (CUA), but little can be concretely stated about the effects of its actions.

SAC president Bob Anderson is in favor of the fee increase for OFS. He believes OFS has fulfilled its primary goal of acting in the students' interest at the provincial level, and blames the fees strike failure on the non-co-operation of some campuses.

Anderson is satisfied with what he considers to be "solid research" that OFS has done so far this year. (Some of the research has been his own.)

The organization has worked on student services, orientations, course evaluations and the Committee on University Affairs brief. Anderson said OFS/FEO field co-ordinator Ben McDonald had helped student unions at Queen's and Carleton with restructuring.

"Where OFS has fallen down is not getting policies across to the students," he said. "OFS is only as good as its member organizations. It must draw its strength from the campuses."

U of T's chief delegate to OFS/FEO, Heather Ridout, is not as pleased with the overall direction of OFS/FEO. Though she supports the increase to $1.50 she is also critical of the lack of political direction. "OFS should get out and organize students around issues."

Ridout said the present OFS direction is still inadequate; the organization spends too much time lobbying and doing research and not enough time organizing. Ridout feels that to succeed OFS/FEO must not only have mass action but also mobilize the average student in issues affecting his/her daily life.

However, she feels a province-wide student organization is absolutely necessary and the fee increase could allow OFS/FEO to improve its services and the regional field co-ordinators could spend their time organizing on campuses.

Axelrod, on the other hand, feels there is a middle road between an activist

The Varsity—Chris Newell

Former SAC presidents Eric Miglin (left) and Bob Spencer ponder OFS decision.

position and a lobbying and research function. "It all depends on the commitment and organizing effort people are prepared to spend." He said better preparation is necessary for any future action comparable in scale to the fees strike.

OFS/FEO's potential

OFS/FEO clearly has the potential for becoming a solid established student organization, representing student interests and organizing on large issues. However, strategy is difficult to agree upon. The organization can slowly consolidate research and lobby with some added work on services and co-ordination, or immediately shift to a more activist position and get out and organize a province-wide campaign against further cutbacks before students are once again hit with increases.

Heron stated OFS/FEO must shed its defensive, reactive stance and go on the offensive, preventing detrimental government actions. This same analysis was offered by a group of left-wing students who met at the height of the fees strike to try and put forward a left-wing alternative to OFS/FEO. However, they realized it couldn't be done without student council co-operation and funding. Many of these people are now trying to achieve changes within OFS.

One way for OFS to increase its credibility among students is to start with some concrete achievements. Besides research and lobbying the organization has been notably absent in the 1973-74 academic year.

One sign of things to come is a student pub association organized by OFS/FEO which is trying to make sure the government does not turn over all university pub licences to university administrations.

OFS/FEO could also get into political issues such as housing and day care which directly relate to municipal and provincial government policy decisions. The cost of living is something that directly affects students and means their limited incomes have to stretch even further. Many analysts feel OFS could do a great deal toward politicizing these issues and mobilizing students to become a more progressive force. Its main weakness now is an inability to organize and make its presence felt among students on the campuses.

Axelrod said the present OFS campaign for increased fees was successful so far. If people learn what OFS is doing, he said, they are usually favorable. "The main problem is people don't have information."

Spencer feels OFS has perennially been "underfunded", and could accomplish more next year. It has made small gains, he said, but is limited by the constraints of decentralized decision-making. He added the Davis government has been "more sensitive" since the fees strike.

The increased number of fieldworkers and the press liaison officer as well as research staff should increase OFS/FEO services, visibility and organizing capability according to present field co-ordinator Ben McDonald. He feels the regional fieldworkers will be able to help student unions organize around issues on their own campus as well as increasing the visibility of OFS on individual campuses. The fieldworkers could co-ordinate any province-wide actions and also regional issues such as particular concerns of Ontario Universities.

In the face of a strong, well organized government and corporate elite students have little chance to gain anything if they continue in the direction OFS is going this year. The task is to politicize them and mobilize their efforts around issues that affect them. If OFS/FEO can do this it will probably be successful in the future. If not, it could go down hill, becoming a service and lobbying group trapped by liberal politics and a limiting organizational structure.

The choice is there. To quote Axelrod, "OFS is at the crossroads, we are on the verge of the best of times or the worst of times." What will happen is the choice of student councils and students who are working with OFS/FEO.

There is an alternative—a progressive student union which will fight militantly for students' interests and organize opposition to government attacks on the student position, as well as leading the way toward positive reforms.

Streaking strikes Scarborough

Streaking came to Scarborough College Thursday night when two unidentified male students raced nude through the college pub and cafeteria.

Bemused witnesses reported that the two students apparently streaked along college hallways and entered the pub where about 100 patrons were quietly drinking while the band performed a sound check.

"We saw them alright, but nobody got very excited," said pub employee Chris Waddell. "They really weren't anything to shout about."

Earlier Thursday, Waddell had devoted substantial portions of his three-hour program on Radio Scarborough to a discussion of why no streaking had taken place at the college.

Waddell, a student council vice-

Senior faculty in the fine art department refuse to recognize Canadian art or Canadian-national identity, a Toronto art critic hargled last week.

Barry Lord, author of a new history of painting in Canada called Towards a People's Art, told a Hart House audience the "fine art faculty president, planted his tongue firmly in cheek while announcing plans to form an official streaking society at the College. "This place could do with some excitement."

have consistently refused to establish courses in Canadian painting and sculpture."

"Are we really in a country at all when the most prestigious university doesn't even have a one-semester course in our art?"

Lord said the fine art faculty 'spit on Canadian art at every opportunity' and are in effect perpetuating a colonial mentality "by apeing European art as decreed by the imperial centre."

"You might think that the faculty would make a pretence about teaching Canadian art, but the last time a course was offered they assigned a newly arrived Dutchman who had to read a general textbook just to stay ahead of the students."

Lord is to teach a one-semester course in Canadian art next year at Scarborough College.

He attacked a current exhibit at the Sigmund Samuel Canadian Gallery as "a patronizing attempt to treat people's art as a packaged ghetto."

"The power of patronage usually dictates the style and subject matter of most painting, but fortunately more Canadian artists are beginning to rediscover working people in their art," Lord concluded.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LITERARY and ATHLETIC SOCIETY ELECTIONS

Nominations now open for the following positions:

President	6 Second Year Reps
Vice President	6 Third Year Reps
Treasurer	3 Fourth Year Reps
Literary Director
Men's Athletic Director	5 S.A.C. Reps
Women's Athletic Direc.

Any University College student is eligible to run. Nomination forms available at LIT office in Junior Common Room of University College.

Nominations close Monday March 18 at 5:00 p.m.

ELECTIONS WILL BE HELD WED. MARCH 27

GOVERNING COUNCIL ELECTION

Ballots have been mailed to the eligible voters for this year's Governing Council election of new staff and student members.

Any eligible voter who has received an incorrect ballot, or no ballot due to an error in records may contact the Office of the Governing Council at 928-2160 in order to obtain the correct ballot.

Completed ballots should be returned by CANADA POST, CAMPUS MAIL or personal delivery to the Office of the Governing Council, Room 106, Simcoe Hall prior to 12:00 noon on March 13th, 1974, to be valid. Also, for the convenience of voters who may wish to deposit their ballots on campus, ballot boxes are placed in the following locations:

Erindale College - Library
Scarborough College - Library

The above locations will be open until March 13th, 1974, at 12:00 noon. Both locations are open during regular library hours.

Enquiries regarding the election may be directed to the Office of the Governing Council at 928-2160.

Canadian art said ignored

NOON HOUR CONCERT

KATIE KETCHUN,

PIANO

Playing

BACH, BEETHOVEN
& BRAHMS

Tues., Mar. 12 at 1 p.m.

IN THE MUSIC ROOM,
HART HOUSE

unclassified

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING?
Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674.

EXAMINERS WANTED - Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T", Toronto M6B 4A3.

LOST: WOMAN'S GLASSES in turquoise case, early Feb. on campus. Reward. Phone 961-2975.

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4. 757-0621.

RUGBY PLAYERS, experienced or novice, needed to join Canucks in T & D League, second place finishers last season. Contact Paul at 928-4917, nights 769-5700.

PLAN AHEAD - read this week's menus for the Gallery Club, Hart House.

REMEMBER: RESERVE THE WHOLE EVENING, Tuesday, March 26, for a visit to Hart House for EQUINOX. It's going to be a spectacular event.

ACTRESS(ES) wanted for "Primal" Theatre in Weston, Potential O.F.Y. funding. Phone Joe Dworzynski 244-7003.

ESSAY TYPIST - CHEAP! - Will type essays quickly for 40¢ a page. Contact: Andrea Grant, office - 499-2922, home - 461-3613.

BICYCLE - Raleigh - 10 speed woman's touring model, bronze green. Only ridden one summer. New $139. Sell $100. Laurie 924-3994.

WANTED - Silver Dollars - before 1967 paying $2.00 each, fifty cent pieces before 1967 paying $1.00 each. All silver before 1967 - 150¢. Mr. Smith 922-5687 or 633-9322.

ENGLISH SPECIALIST familiar with current academic requirements is needed for the preparation of authoritative review material, related critical analysis and precise commentaries. Please respond outlining qualifications and previous writing experience, if any, to: Jeffrey Cole, P.O. Box 585, King City, Ont.

WANTED: STUDENT TO BE "AT HOME" 3:30 - 5:30 p.m. 3-4 days/week near campus to supply snacks and stability for after-school return of 2 busy youngsters (aged 6 and 9). Pleasant surroundings for reading and studying. Occasional meal included if willing to stay through 1 or 2 evenings. $1.00/hr. Call Lydia Burton, 920-0797 evenings.

LOST WOMAN'S GOLD-COLOURED WATCH on Wednesday in Mechanical Bldg. or on King's Circle (Sig. Sam side) on the way to U.C. If found, please call: 789-1489.

QUEBEC SKI TOUR March 17-22 $79. Five days of skiing at Mt. St. Anne. All transportation and excellent accommodation included. For information write Canadian Ski Tours, 25 Taylorwood Dr., Islington or phone Gord Allan 247-2339.

TIRED OF THE CITY? want a weekend or summer retreat? 1 br. available in shared furnished 5 br. farmhouse on 100 acre farm overlooking Rice Lake, near Peterborough. Sept. 1974 - August 1975. $75/month. Call Ron 967-4624 - 928-8788.

WAITRESSES OR WAITERS WANTED fully licensed dining lounge - must have tidy appearance. Part time only (12:00 noon to 2:30 p.m. or 6:00 to 10:00 p.m.) Monday to Friday. Call 466-2023 for appointment.

TO SUBLET: large mostly furnished six room apartment Avenue Rd. & Bloor. Available around May 1st until Sept. 1st. $345./mo. or $110./mo./person. Parking included. 921-6907

TARRAGON THEATRE PRESENTS... BRITZKRIEG by Brian Wade about Eva & Hitler or Hitler and Eva - Wed.-Sun. 8:45 p.m. Sun. Matinee 2:45 at Poor Alex Theatre, Brunswick and Bloor, 920-8373 until Mar. 16.

ROOM AVAILABLE IN STUDENT HOUSE. Quiet, share bath, kitchen, cooking. 20 minutes from campus by T.T.C. Through summer and next year it desired. Phone 537-2775.

CHEAP HOUSING - two rooms in 5 room flat for $80 a month each. Available immediately. A couple or two women preferred. Close to campus. Call Bob nights 534-7012.

GAY U of T STUDENTS seeking to start co-op house for fall semester - 74/75 - contact Michael at 465-1403 alt. 6:00 p.m. / If no reply, call again.

WHY FREEZE? Use furs from $10., new from $99. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets. Muskies, Racoon, Rabbit etc. EXCELLENT SELECTION. Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGDER FURS. 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077. Open Thurs. - Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

Psychics help U of T archaeologist in research

By ANDREW FALUDY

The U of T supervisor of archaeological studies believes it is possible to receive knowledge about archaeological artifacts and sites from psychics who know nothing about the field.

Addressing the annual meeting of the Canadian Archaeological Association (CAA) at Whitehorse, Yukon, on Thursday, anthropology professor J. N. Emerson revealed the results of his most recent experiments in what he calls "intuitive archaeology: a psychic approach."

The experiment began a year ago when Emerson was presented with a black carved argillite stone by a man from British Columbia.

Emerson gave the stone to a psychic, George, who immediately pronounced it to be a work carved by a black person from Port au Prince.

Emerson was shocked by this. "I was convinced that George was patently wrong; for it seemed to me as an archaeologist that the material was British Columbian black argillite."

Following this Emerson evolved the idea of a "psychic team" to carry out a comparative study of this artifact.

The study took him a year and during that time he accumulated a mass of tape recordings and hundreds of pages of transcribed text.

As new members were added to the "team" they confirmed George's original statement. Although the psychics differed on minor details, they agreed on three salient points.

The points were: 1) The carver was from Africa. 2) He was brought to the New World as a slave and 3) he came to British Columbia.

The climax of Emerson's experiment came when the findings of the psychics were corroborated by Allen Tyyska, a graduate anthropologist and cataloger of African Art specimens at the Royal Ontario Museum.

Tyyska felt the art styles manifest to him by the carving were to be found in the Gold Coast area of West Africa.

Emerson says he is now convinced that intuitive or psychic knowledge "does stand as a viable alternative to knowledge obtained by more traditional methods of science."

"By utilizing a psychic team, and by cross-analysis of their independent statements which reveal an amazing degree of correspondence and concurrence, I am convinced that we have been able to abstract intuitive truth about man's past," Emerson said in a lecture to the annual meeting.

Emerson sees the possibility of the institution of psychic anthropology to supplement more traditional methods of research.

He told the conference in Whitehorse on Thursday:

"I do not wish to convey the idea that I am so enamored of the psychic or psychic team approach that I am prepared to ignore the findings and resources of traditional science."

Rather, I consider that progress will only be made by a melding and an integration of the two — intuition and science."

Emerson's ideas on a psychic approach have evolved over a period of two years.

At last year's conference of the CAA he presented a detailed paper on his work with one of the psychics, George.

It was Emerson's work with George which largely sparked off the idea of the "psychic team" study of the argillite rock.

Emerson argues learning, mind-reading and mental telepathy are not involved. According to him, George has a minimum of formal education and can not be mind-reading because his statements often contain new knowledge or clash with Emerson's expectations.

The strongest argument against mental telepathy of the usual kind is the fact that the bulk of George's statements relate to the past — up to 6,000 years ago.

City feet need Roots.

Portage Root. Water-proof boot with kid glove lining.
Kangaroo, Coco
$43.50

1052 Yonge Street
Opposite St. Lawrence Library, Toronto

Yukon Root. Available in choice of Kangaroo, Black, Coco. $34.00

STARTING A NEW SERIES...

MONDAY-NIGHT-AT-THE-MOVIES- AT-HILLEL

1ST IN THE SERIES:

"BEFORE WINTER COMES"

STARRING
DAVID NIVEN
ANNA KARINA
& TOPOL

MONDAY, MARCH 11, 8:00 P.M.

AT HILLEL HOUSE, 186 ST. GEORGE
FREE ADMISSION

Around Again

Used Records:

rock, jazz, folk, classics

and

Books:

literature, philosophy,

"religion", sci.fi.

and

Some other interesting things

18 Baldwin St.
(north of Dundas
west of University)

SAC PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS MARCH 13-14, 1974

9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The following tickets have been nominated:

Peter Baumann
D. William Paterson
Laura Conn

J.R. Tennyson
921-2827

Michel Chamberland
Carol Bonhoff
James Maclean

Robert Deans
621-1918

Seymour Kanowitch
Tim Buckley
Fred Stewart

Gord Barnes
921-2698

President
Vice-President
Vice-President

Campaign Manager

Students will also be asked to vote on the following referendum question:

Do you support The University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council's continued membership in the Ontario Federation of Students at a student activity fee increase of $1.50?

ONTARIO FEDERATION OF STUDENTS

REFERENDUM MAR. 13 & 14

VOTE YES

WHAT HAS OFS/FEO DONE?

— Through direct pressure, OFS/FEO has secured from the government a commitment to freeze tuition fees for this year, and to reform the student awards program.

— Throughout Ontario OFS/FEO has helped to organize course unions, off-campus tenant associations, and has published a course unions organizing handbook.

— In co-operation with the Ontario Student Pub Association, OFS/FEO has attempted to protect the interests of students before the Liquor Licensing Board of Ontario.

— With limited resources (3 employees), OFS/FEO has produced high quality research on financing higher education, tenure, student housing, and the history of the student movement in Ontario.

WHO LISTENS ?

The Committee on University Affairs, and the Government of Ontario have solicited and received presentations from OFS/FEO on issues in post secondary education. As Ontario teachers have demonstrated, to reinforce our demands, students must unite.

WHY $1.50?

Though OFS/FEO has accomplished a good deal this year with a levy of 40¢ per student, its present resources are strained to the limit. To adequately serve the province in terms of fieldwork and research, and to publicize its activities and resources, OFS/FEO needs an expanded staff. At a time when the government is considering long-term plans to turn the financing of post secondary education back to the student, we need a strong provincial student voice.

VOTE YES BECAUSE:

1. All other major constituents in Ontario post secondary education — including university presidents, faculty and workers are well organized and financed. Clearly students must organize to articulate and defend their interests as well.
2. With four fieldworkers, OFS/FEO can, on a personal basis, maintain frequent and fruitful contact with students in all parts of the province. Information on course unions, student pubs, and student representation can be circulated more completely and more quickly than in the past.
3. With a liaison officer, OFS/FEO can circulate regular information on provincial decisions in post secondary education. As a scrutineer of provincial policies, OFS/FEO can respond decisively and in an informed manner to actions of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.
4. With three researchers, OFS/FEO can co-ordinate and disseminate information on educational issues and student services in Ontario. Furthermore, OFS/FEO can provide primary research in Ontario's 22 community colleges and serve the needs of Ontario's 15 universities.

DO YOU SUPPORT

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

STUDENTS' ADMINISTRATIVE

COUNCIL'S

CONTINUED MEMBERSHIP IN THE

ONTARIO FEDERATION OF STUDENTS

AT A STUDENT ACTIVITY FEE INCREASE

OF $1.50?

VOTE YES

Ringling in bad news

The St. Mike's A basketball team may be using an ineligible player, according to a story printed Friday in Balcony Square, the Scarborough College newspaper.

SMC guard Tom O'Connor, the story alleges, is not registered at St. Mike's but at St. Paul University in Ottawa and thus would seem to be ineligible to compete in the U of T intramural league.

Balcony Square editor Ian Hadden, a classmate of O'Connor at St. Augustine's Seminary, says that the player has a U of T library card and has paid "some type of athletic fee" but has never hidden the fact that he is not registered at St. Mike's this year.

O'Connor told the SMC coaches about the situation but they told him to play "since the use of ringers is fairly common in inter-faculty leagues," Hadden said yesterday.

If the allegation is proven true, SMC 'A' would have to default all games in which O'Connor played.

Toronto boxers rebuffed

The U of T boxers met a sound defeat last week at the hands of the Buffalo Boy's Town Boxing Club. Experience seemed to be the deciding factor (or lack thereof) in the case of the Toronto team).

Some of the Buffalo boxers, in fact, were New York State Golden Gloves champions in their respective weight classes. But the Toronto team did, however, salvage one spectacular win out of the ten scheduled bouts.

The results are as follows: Peter Smith (135 pounds) lost a three-round decision to Bob Wilson of Buffalo. Tom De Wolf (145 pounds) was defeated in three rounds by Larry Davis of Buffalo. Richard Wright (150 pounds) lost a close three-round decision to Tony Campbell of Buffalo.

The only Toronto win was scored by Tim Barbetta (155 pounds) by a TKO in the first round when he caught Billy Stevens of Buffalo with a hard left to the solar plexus followed by a right to the head.

Tim Smith (160 pounds) lost a second round TKO to hard-hitting Mike Capreotti of Winona Boxing Club. Dave Millar (165 pounds) was also defeated via the TKO route in the second round to Dennis Bennett from the Cattaraugus Indian Reservation.

Steve Wag (165 pounds) lost a three-round decision to Billy Abrams also from Cattaraugus.

Gord Hill (175 pounds) lost a close three-round decision to Joe Pavalonis of Buffalo.

Joe Pitushka (177 pounds) lost to Paul Drewniak (225 pounds) of Buffalo.

In the heavyweight division Joe Fadi-Alla was the victim of daylight robbery and Jim Brown of Buffalo in a three-round decision.

GIRLS

Synchronized Swimming
Club Practices

Tuesdays 7:00 p.m. - 9:00 p.m.
March 12, 1974

Benson Building Pool

All Welcome

Centre for the Study of Drama
HART HOUSE THEATRE

Merrill Denison's

MARSH HAY

Thur. March 21 to Sat. March 30 at 8:30
Box Office now open 10:00 to 5:00
928-8668

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE AND THE FACULTY OF MEDICINE PRESENT THE FIRST THREE LECTURES ON

MEDICAL-MORAL ISSUES:

MORAL VALUES IN HUMAN RESEARCH
by DR. H.K. BEECHER, HARVARD UNIVERSITY

MARCH 11 8:00 P.M.
MED SCI AUDITORIUM
ALL WELCOME ADMISSION FREE

HART HOUSE ELECTIONS WED., MARCH 13

POLLS OPEN: 9 A.M. - 5 P.M.
9 A.M. - 7 P.M. AT HART HOUSE

VOTE!

WOMEN'S STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

For all those people interested in and involved with courses or projects in Women's Studies.

Friday, March 15th., 1974

4 p.m.

Interdisciplinary Studies,
Second Floor
97 St. George Street.

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55%...

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer.
Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MARK II WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER 10 SPEED	149.00 85.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER 10 SPEED	149.00 85.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI QUICK RELEASE NO CHROME	159.00 101.00
YANQUEUR OLYMPIC QUICK RELEASE	169.00 110.00
YANQUEUR NO SAFETY LEVER WING NUT	149.00 85.00
LA PERLE WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	149.00 85.00
VOISCYCLE QUICK RELEASE SAFETY LEVER	159.00 101.00

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers Vainqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity Vainqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow.

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, dynamo electric lighting with generator, back carrier, padded seat, chrome chain guard, and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPT ON OF AMERICAN ARROW SI HAVE SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS
VISTA WING NUT W/ OR LADIES 5 SPEED	149.00 85.00
GILKINS LADIES FENDER CARRIER REFLECTION SPEED	99.00 62.00
TIGER LADIES SUNTOLR DERAILLEUR 10 SPEED	119.00 68.00
LA PERLE QUADRA TICOLOR DRNG BICYCLE	99.00 79.00
SAFARI OR CAPE FOLDING BICYCLE	79.00 55.50

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

- Open Mon.-Fri. 2 p.m.-6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-2 p.m.
- Brake cable and manufacturer's material defects. Warranty for three months on all brand names.
- Minimum service charge for assembling.
- We have a professional mechanic stand by to

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario

Phone: 749-6171

Your ChargeX card is accepted

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #38C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

sports

Lawrence Clarke
923-4053

Pro athletes use drugs to up performance

By PAUL HOCH

Organized team sport is really becoming the passive robot production of the assembly line, and increasingly of the now proletarianized white collar jobs as well. In Veblen's day, opiates like sports, betting, and religion may have been enough to provide the drugged workers for drugged production.

In our own time, as the legitimacy of the system has eroded further, as the gap between "democratic" mythology and authoritarian reality becomes more and more painful, the functioning of the system from one moment to another requires real drugs. And it requires them in great quantities.

Ramparts magazine has produced much evidence to support the contention that the world's leading drug dealer is the Central Intelligence Agency. In New York the Knapp Commission found much evidence that the leading drug dealers in New York, along with and in partnership with organized crime, were the members of the New York City Police Department.

Bernie Parrish, Dave Meggysy, Chip Oliver, and Jack Scott have produced much evidence in their books to prove that the biggest drug dealers in the sports world are none others than the team trainers.

"Greenies are pep pills - dextroamphetamine sulfate," writes Jim Bouton, "and a lot of baseball players couldn't function without them." Writes former Oakland linebacker, Chip Oliver. "If Pete Rozelle, the commissioner of the National Football League, put a lock on the pill bottle, half the players would fall asleep in the third quarter... many professional players couldn't have made a move without them."

At first they might just take them before a big game. Then it was before every game. Then they had to take them just to practise. "As the players get older," he says, "the forget about how to get energy naturally and start getting it from amphetamine pep pills they call rat turds." (Ibid., p. 65) After the game they are so high, they have to be tranquilized to get their eyeballs back in their heads-to-even get a night's sleep.

Ken Gray filed a $3.5 million lawsuit against the St. Louis Cardinals, their team physician, and their trainer charging he was administered "potent, illegal and dangerous drugs... so that he would perform more violently." The drugs were dextroamphetamine sulphate, chlorpromazine hydrochloride, and sodium pentobarbital.

Gray's suit alleges they were given to him "deceptively and without consent either expressed or implied," and as a result he sustained "injuries, nervousness, restlessness and sleeplessness, severe and persistent headache, and his general health and body integrity were diminished."

A similar $14 million medical suit was filed by defensive lineman Houston Ridge against the San Diego Chargers and recently settled out of court.

In June and July 1969 Bill Gilbert wrote a three-part special for Sports Illustrated exposing the incredibly widespread use of drugs in American sports. On October 20, 1970 a California State Legislative Subcommittee on Drug Abuse and Alcoholism held a special hearing on drug abuse in athletics. The chairman of the subcommittee pointed out that in our regulations against drug use in horse racing we do at least seem to be showing due regard for the health of the animals. "I believe it is incumbent upon us, at this hearing today," he said, "to do no less for human competitors." (Nevertheless, after pressure from various pro sport czars was applied, no further hearings or legislation were initiated.)

Mike Mohler, a football player at Berkeley, interviewed every player on the California team and found that 48 per cent of them used speed, and that 28 per cent admitted they had used anabolic steroids, the weight-producing drugs that have also been known to produce atrophy of the testicles, cancer of the prostate, and sterility.

Moher told Jack Scott he had reason to believe that such drug use was even more common at other big West Coast schools than at Berkeley.

Paul Lowe, the running back with the San Diego Chargers testified, "We had to take them (anabolic steroids) at lunch time. He (the trainer) would put them on a little saucer and prescribed for us to take them and if not he would suggest there might be a fine."

Amphetamines were also supplied in abundance. "The trainer of the Cardinals," remarked Dave Meggysy, "had what amounted to a drugstore down in his trailing room. The drug cabinets were open and could be used by any of the players... They extensively used cortisone, xylocaine, and novocaine to shoot injured ballplayers up before the game..."

This might be the only way they could keep playing, keep producing, but how many other injuries did it lead to along the way? Bernie Parrish admitted that his general practice was to dose himself with 70 milligrams of dexedrine before every game.

"I never played another game," wrote Parrish after he first learned of pep pills in college, "in my college or professional career without taking either Dexedrine or Benzedrine."

He and Ross Fichtner of the Browns had very serious reactions after mixing a muscle-relaxing drug and beer. Fichtner had convulsions and Parrish passed out (for 4 hours) while at the wheel of his car.

"The laws say that you cannot take such powerful drugs unless they are prescribed by a physician," he says. "Yet they were made available by our trainer, as was the case on most other professional teams." The latest joke making the rounds of professional sport is that it's not the players and coaches who win the championships, but pharmacists!

In these warlike times, the sportscasters usually refer to the platoon that covers kickoff and punts as the "bomb squad". The players, much more to the point, call it the "benny squad."

Jack Scott says that when he was covering the 1968 Olympics, the discussions among the US track and field men were not about whether it was right or healthy to take drugs, but which ones were most effective and which could you get away with.

At the 1960 Olympics, Danish cyclist Knud Jensen collapsed and died after his race. It was established that he had taken Ronicol, a blood-vessel dilating drug.

Scott says, "It is widely recognized in track and field circles that it is next to impossible to get to the top in most weight events and the decathlon without the use of these drugs since most of the top athletes are using them."

For example, anabolic steroids have been used to put twenty, thirty even sixty pounds of added plastic muscle on a jock's frame (these drugs were developed, after all, to fatten up prize cattle!).

But in many cases they have the embarrassing side effect of shrinking the testes. So the tendency seems to be toward the production of plastic Supermen with no balls. In the case of pep pills, what starts out as an added edge to help jocks win championships, produce more, becomes in the end a necessity just to get them to function at all.

There is nothing unique about this in North America. One medical study I saw estimated that the average North American consumes about a dozen pills per day. In many districts tranquilizers are even being given to tiny school-children, to keep them quiet and nicely functioning.

We are rapidly reaching the point where the whole society is patched together with drugs and could not function without them. In fact, that point may have already been passed. It's not surprising that the sports world finds itself in the same bag. But the NCAA and NFL issuing solemn warnings against drugs on their telecasts each week is like the Mafia issuing warnings against crime. The system and its victims cannot function without drugs, and pretty soon they will not be able to function with them.

SAC hopefuls finish campaign; voting today

By BOB GAUTHIER

The three tickets running for the Students' Administrative Council's top positions wound up their campaigns late last night in anticipation of the annual SAC elections, scheduled for today and tomorrow.

Although no candidates' forums to speak of were held on the St. George through on its initial plans for riding stables on the Scarborough campus.

Kanowitch stressed three main areas in his campaign talk: improvement in the quality of education, services, and maintaining the price of education at the lowest possible level.

Conscious that opposing slates were running against the present Students' Administrative Council on a campaign of cutting back SAC's co-ordinating function and reorganizing SAC, Kanowitch appealed to his audience to stick with a "central governing unit" to "unite and co-ordinate" students from the various colleges, through their college councils.

He feels that organization on virtually any program—be it services, or the quality of education and teaching—has a better chance of succeeding with "organization at the local level," while "co-ordination of the locally organized councils should be done by a central body."

Kanowitch says he wants to see a strong student council, one that can go out and organize students by speaking with them and assessing their needs. He pointed out the present SAC has gone to the students in every direct way over the discipline code, although he admitted mistakes had been made and more organizing and discussion might have been carried out.

Running mate Stewart said "One of the things I'd like to do if we're elected is help students know what's going on downtown." Stewart also wants to work as a liaison person between SAC and the Scarborough Council to underwrite various programs at the suburban college.

Bill Paterson spoke of students only briefly, saying he would "return" their money to them. Although he did not have any concrete ideas the Baumann-Paterson-Conn slate would be willing to talk with students and see what they wanted from SAC. From there they would formulate plans to help these students.

Although presidential running mate Peter Baumann attended the forum he declined the opportunity to speak offered him by SCSC executive assistant Paul Carson. Paterson spoke for the slate in saying both candidates at the forum preferred to Discipline—one of the hottest issues among students this year—was one topic discussed.

Bill Paterson indicated members of his slate had talked with President John Evans as late as last Friday, and Evans had told them that, "in his opinion (Evans), the non-academic code is not ever going to come back." The Baumann-Paterson-Conn slate had put forward a plank in their campaign of renegotiating the code over the summer; now Paterson said they had dropped any such plans based on Evans' information.

Kanowitch pointed out it was the action of this year's SAC that helped shelve the non-academic discipline code. Kanowitch was one of two SAC members who negotiated the code with the administration during the past few weeks. Kanowitch expressed dismay that the opposing slates would attack the present SAC and, indirectly, his slate, for "doing nothing for students."

Kanowitch said he supported the academic code, but not the non-academic code. He believes the academic code can protect the rights of students, although he would like to see further amendments in that section of the code. He feels the marking scheme, for one, shouldn't be changed in mid-stream unless students consent to the changes.

"We feel the majority of the students feel there's an overkill," he said. "The non-academic code is designed to maintain the present structures and not allow legitimate protest."

Ontario Federation of Students Federation des Etudiants de l'Ontario (OFS/FEO) field co-ordinator Ben McDonald also briefly addressed the audience.

McDonald urged support for the OFS/FEO fee increase, so that student councils could work more effectively with a federated provincial body that would represent students in the face of increased tuition costs and loan cutbacks.

The Baumann-Paterson-Conn slate supports OFS, but wants the fee to remain at the present $0.40 rather than the asked-for $1.50.

Carol Bonhoff said her ticket wanted to see an increase for OFS. "We support the increase as long as they are able to show us they can do

Carol Bonhoff Chamberland ticket.

Campus, at least one member from each of the three slates made an appearance at the forum held at Scarborough College Monday at noon in the Meeting Place.

Approximately 75 students gathered to hear Seymour Kanowitch (UC IV) and Fred Stewart (Scarborough) of the Kanowitch-Buckley-Stewart ticket, Bill Paterson (Eng III) of the Baumann-Paterson-Conn ticket, and Carol Bonhoff (Erin I) of the Chamberland-Bonhoff-Maclean slate.

Consistent with his campaign to date Kanowitch mixed political issues with a heavy dose of service programs in discussing his platform and the goals he aimed for if elected SAC president for the 1974-75 academic year.

He emphasized the gains that have already been made at Scarborough, and promised SAC would follow

Seymour Kanowitch

answer questions from the audience.

Carol Bonhoff of the Chamberland-Bonhoff-Maclean slate also only spoke briefly for her ticket. Although she was the only member of the ticket to attend she indicated that all three slate members were basically in agreement on the issues — cut back SAC and "return" money to students.

Ben McDonald, OFS representative.

Bill Paterson, Baumann ticket

something for us and put our money to work."

Kanowitch said that "when students face the provincial government they are fighting a very powerful organization." He feels OFS/FEO is hampered at the present time from doing an effective job.

He used the example of the 1972-73 campaign to protest the fees hike as one example of where OFS/FEO did not have enough money to co-ordinate a campaign.

Kanowitch believes the relation of OFS/FEO to SAC is somewhat similar as the relation of SAC to the local college councils.

Each integrates into the other and can effectively gauge what students really want to see on the local and provincial levels.

He emphasized, however, that strong student support was needed throughout the year for the integration of the three levels to work, and urged students to get involved on the "local council" and SAC levels.

Social work fac undecided on student parity demands

By MARILYN EMERSON

The Faculty of Social Work has not rejected student parity demands, but on the other hand it has not accepted the demand for parity either.

The faculty's position was released yesterday shortly before the student union meeting and came following a two-day boycott last week when student demands for parity had come to a head.

At yesterday's student union meeting students took the six-point faculty response and accepted one proposal while agreeing to negotiate a second.

Four other faculty proposals, all of which had come in response to the student demand for parity, were rejected by students after they realized the faculty had said neither yes nor no to parity.

Students will likely send their written response to faculty's position next week after meetings of both the student union negotiating committee and the student union body.

The faculty said in writing: "We are not now in a position to issue a definitive statement as to the degree or nature of . . . student participation and involvement in policy formulation and the implementation of that policy."

Nevertheless they say "it is with this frame of reference in mind" that we make our statements.

Student feeling negative

Although students received the faculty answer only one and a half hours before the student union meeting, general student feeling was negative toward faculty's two-page memorandum.

About 100 students attended yesterday's meeting, and in spite of alleged student dissent, the student union position received majority support.

In their memorandum faculty conceded to student request for student access to their own records.

Faculty stated: "We have initiated a process whereby each student will have access to his/her own docket by April 1st, 1974." Student accepted this settlement.

In previous meetings students and faculty had come to a satisfactory arrangement regarding the professional values classes. But the arrangement is limited to the 1973-74 term.

Hence faculty stated in their memorandum that "a work group will be established" for the purpose of further examination of this course for the future.

Students accepted the proposal of a work group but moved that "the work group, or task force, be a parity body, that relevant constituencies be invited to the core constituencies and that core constituencies decide whether to give other constituencies voting privileges."

Students further moved that the work groups go back to their respective constituencies for ratification on all decisions and that the decisions be made within two weeks.

Four demands rejected

Students rejected faculty's proposal on the remaining four student demands.

Students requested more course flexibility through a re-evaluation of course content and requirements and more independent study programs.

The faculty stated: "We are prepared to establish a work group with the student body and other concerned constituencies to undertake this re-examination."

Students voted to reject this proposal of a "work group" and continue negotiations on the original demand. "The proposal lacks reference to parity or implementation," said one student.

Students requested there be no admittance to the 1974-75 class until student parity on committees making admissions decisions is achieved.

Faculty stated "a committee on admissions" will be established, but added, "we have not yet resolved the question of the composition of this committee."

Parity in staffing demanded

Students requested no staff or field instructors are to be hired, fired, appointed, given tenure, or recommended for tenure, until there is student parity on all committees making these decisions.

The faculty stated "a standing committee on appointments, and a faculty review, renewal and promotion committee will be established."

"The teaching faculty is now considering which constituencies should be a part of these committees, and the extent of the powers and responsibilities of these committees."

Faculty acknowledged the need to examine the nature of appointment of field instructors but said "this matter will demand separate consideration."

Students demanded a parity faculty council be established to realize a more equitable distribution of power.

THE Varsity TORONTO

Vol. 94, No. 62
Wed., March 13, 1974

However, the faculty countered: "A faculty council as outlined in the University of Toronto Act must be established."

"We are not committed to any position on the powers, structure, membership, etc. of that council."

"We intend to establish a work group to facilitate this end and would welcome student participation on this work group."

On these last four issues students voted to reject faculty proposals and to put forward instead their original demands for further negotiation.

About 20 persons demonstrated by a show of hands a willingness to challenge the student union constitution on its quorum ruling.

Some students felt a quorum of 30 persons not enough to carry supportive action for student union. There are about 200 students in social work.

The quorum question is on the agenda for next student union meeting and could effect a change in the student union constitution.

It was felt by some that solving disagreement on these two issues would allow more student participation in student union activities.

The student union negotiating committee will begin meeting again on Sunday.

In order to allow ample time to discuss the issues, the next student union meeting will be Monday at 10 am—to go on all day if necessary.

Varsity humor!

Our mistake?

The Varsity wants to apologize for the top story on page one in Monday's paper, "SAC hopefuls break for votes".

We thought we were being humorous and we thought that came across in the article. However, SAC presidential candidate Michel Chamberland feels that people reading might have taken the article seriously. (How could they?)

Our purpose in writing the article in the first place was to arouse what we perceived to be an uncaring student body to the fact that an election was taking place. We also thought that portraying the candidates as fallible, human beings would help dispel the myth (if it exists) that politicians are supermen.

Maybe we failed, maybe not, but we hope we at least caught our readers' attention.

Oh, and by the way, in case you thought otherwise, as far as we know there are no criminals working on the Toke Oke, although sometimes we wonder if what appears in the paper isn't bordering on prison walls. Have a good election.

HERE AND NOW

TODAY all day

VUSAC elections. Nominations open until Friday, March 15. Please submit nominations to VUSAC office, Wymilwood, 150 Charles St. W.
UC Lit is accepting nominations for Exec. Year and SAC Rep positions. Nom forms can be picked in JCR of UC until March 18.

noon

The NDP is holding a meeting in the South Sitting Room. All members are welcome to today's meeting.

Open Meeting Committee to Examine the Status of non-academic Women. Dean's Conference Room. Medical Science Building. All interested members of the University Community invited to attend.

4 pm

Free Jewish University today in "Eile Weisel & his writings" at Hill House.

8:30 pm

Hillel's Koshar supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7 pm

INX 260, Women: Oppression and Liberation sponsors another lecture in its free series on Women. Charney Guettel will speak on Marxism and Feminism, based on her recently published book by the Canadian Women's Educational Press. Faculty of Education auditorium, Spadina and Bloor, 928-4928.

7:30 pm

Films at OISE: Two films by Fellini. Roma at 7:30 and "Eight and a Half" at 9:30; $1.25 at 7:30 or $1.00 at 9:30, 252 Bloor W.

8 pm

ABE, the biblical comedy of Abraham and Isaac, written by Randy Brown, directed by Leslie O'Dell, this week at the Glenn Morris Theatre.

Bernd Baldus speaking on "The Superstructure in Advanced Capitalist Society" at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Room 204. This is part of the lecture series sponsored by the Committee for a Marxist Institute.

The Gay Alliance Toward Equality (GATE) meets on the second floor of the Graduate Students' Union, 26 Bancroft St., on the St. George campus.

Dan Heap, Ward 6 alderman, will speak on "The Politics of Health and Housing in Metro Toronto." St. Basil's church, Bay and St. Joseph's streets.

Free Jewish University tonight in "Biblical Events & Personalities" at Hill House.

Free Jewish University tonight in "Yiddish" at Hill House.

8:30 pm

Free Jewish University tonight in "Jewish Cooking" at Hill House.

Double Bill: Dead Heat and Booms at UC Playhouse, 79a St. George. Admission Free. Phone 928-5307 for information.

THURSDAY 11 am

There will be Mesas Hispanicas in Room 123 Sussex Court, 21 Sussex Ave., on Mondays & Thursdays from 11 am to 2 pm. Come to eat lunch and practice your Spanish.

noon

Feel free to join us in the South Sitting Room of Hill House for our regular weekly Baha'i fireside. Sponsored by the U of T Baha'i Club.

See a 15th century satire on wives 'Medieval Women: Fifteen Joys of Marriage' and travel to the "Wonders of the East" where strange men and beasts inhabit the unknown. Media Centre, Room 202, 121 St. George Street. Also at 1 pm.

4 pm

Jewish Studies Course Union meets at 4 pm in Sid Smith Room 2129.

5 pm

Free Jewish University today in "How to be a Jew" at Hill House.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshar supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7 pm

The German Conversation Group, 3rd Floor, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

7:30 pm

Films at OISE: "The Godfather" with Marlon Brando, Al Pacino and James Caan at 7:30 and "One Eyed Jacks" with Brando at 10:30; $1.50 at 7:30 or $1.00 at 10:30, 252 Bloor West.

Free Jewish University tonight in Jewish

Here and Now announcements for events happening any time before next Wednesday at noon must be turned in to the Versality by tomorrow at 3pm for inclusion in Friday's paper, since The Versality is winding down for the year and will not be publishing Monday.

Handicrafts at Hill House.

Music in Kuyiyattam—the traditional theatre of India. Lecture with taped music. Sidney Smith, Room 2117.

8 pm

Abu, the biblical comedy of Abraham and Isaac, written by Randy Brown, directed by Leslie O'Dell. This week at the Glenn Morris Theatre.

New College presents a Salute to James Cagney. William Wellman's "The Public Enemy" and Raoul Walsh's "White Heat" will be shown in room 1017, Wilson Hall at 8 pm. The festival continues on Friday and Saturday. Admission is 50¢ per evening, or one dollar for all three.

Free Jewish University tonight in "Chassidism" at Hill House.

Free Jewish University tonight in "Jewish Holidays" at Hill House.

8:30 pm

Double Bill: Dead Heat and Booms at UC Playhouse, 79a St. George. Admission Free.

9 pm

Free Jewish University tonight in "The Genius of Rashi" at Hill House.

Profs protest bombs

About 215 U of T and York University faculty have signed a petition protesting the continuing use, testing manufacture and stockpiling of nuclear weapons.

The petition is a spinoff from a summer conference in Nagasaki, Japan, which called for prohibition of all nuclear weapons. Nagasaki was one of two Japanese cities the US bombed with atomic weapon during World War II.

The petition singles out the US as a prime offender in the nuclear arms race and says the US "considered the use of these weapons again in the Korean and Indochinese wars."

The petition calls for "continued pressures on the Canadian government for strong and active opposition to nuclear weapons testing," and asks Ottawa to increase its activity in the international sphere to get a comprehensive nuclear disarmament agreement.

Discover the freedom of

CONTACT LENSES

BRADDOCK

OPTICAL

170 St. George St. 925-8720
2517 Bloor St. W. 233-7611
Century Plaza 282-2030
Bayview Village Centre 222-5791

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE
280 BLOOR ST. WEST 962-2020

Roots would like your next walk to class to be a part of your education.

We'd like you to learn a little about your feet—why they work as they do, and why they don't always work as they should. Did you know, for example, that if instead of banging your soles about on campus concrete, you were to go strolling barefoot on a beach, two things would result. First, your grades would drop. Secondly, your heel would make the deepest part of your footprint. This is because nature intended your heel to be the lowest part of your body. So in Roots your heel sits in the lowest part of the shoe. You immediately stand straighter. And when you walk, you use leg muscles you probably haven't used for years. All of this takes the load off other parts of your body, parts which all too often get overworked from incorrect posture.

1052 Yonge Street
(Opposite Rosedale Subway Station)

If you're wondering whether all this can happen in good-looking well-made footwear, try on a pair for yourself. One look should persuade you that Roots is much more than a beautiful idea. It's also a very attractive shoe.

ART GALLERY

GROUP SHOW — VOTE FOR THE PAINTING YOU WOULD LIKE TO SEE ADDED TO THE PERMANENT COLLECTION
GALLERY HOURS: MONDAY, 11 A.M. - 9 P.M.
TUESDAY TO SATURDAY, 11 A.M. - 5 P.M.
SUNDAY, 2 - 5 P.M.

TABLE TENNIS CLUB

LAST PLAY NIGHT

TONIGHT

FENCING ROOM, 7 P.M.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

HART HOUSE CHORUS WITH THE NEW CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

SUN. MAR. 17

GREAT HALL, 8 P.M.

TICKETS FREE FROM THE HALL PORTER

HART HOUSE ELECTIONS TODAY!

EDITOR WANTED

Applications for editor-in-chief of Excalibur for the 1974-75 academic year are now being accepted.

Applicants will be screened by the current Excalibur staff. The candidate of their choice is then presented to the Board of Publications.

The position is full-time, and salary commensurate with qualifications and experience. Some experience with a professional paper is desirable.

Apply in writing enclosing a resume of experience in relevant fields, including clippings to

The Business Manager
Excalibur, York University
4700 Keele Street
Downsview, Ontario, M3J 1P3

Closing date - 5 p.m. Friday March 15, 1974

SUMMER SESSION AT TRENT UNIVERSITY OFFERS YOU

...an attractive combination of small group teaching in a vacationland setting.

Small-group teaching is a feature of summer session at Trent that you may wish to explore further. It is geared carefully to the needs of the individual and offered on a 1,500-acre campus complete with a river and incorporating a 250-acre wildlife sanctuary. Some 50 courses in 17 disciplines are offered in the 1974 summer session at Trent University, including five evening courses. Evening courses begin May 20, day session begins July 2; both conclude August 9, with an examination week to follow.

For 1974, summer courses are offered in: Anthropology (5), Biology (6), Chemistry (1), Classical Studies (1), Economics (2), English Literature (6), French Studies (2), Geography (3), German (2), History (3), Mathematics (3), Native Studies (3), Philosophy (2), Politics (2), Psychology (4), Environmental Problems (1), Sociology (6), Spanish (1). Seminars and tutorials are used in most courses to complement lectures and provide for individual participation.

One field course in Anthropology will be offered at Midland during the summer, on archaeological field methods and techniques. The deadline for applications for daytime or evening summer courses is May 1, 1974. Your inquiries will be welcomed by Paul Scott, Part-time Studies Office, Trent University, Peterborough, Ontario, K9J 7B8.

Banfield lecture provokes scuffling incident

A third-year York University student says she will lay a common assault charge against a U of T professor as a result of a scuffling incident which followed yesterday afternoon's lecture by urbanologist Edward Banfield.

After the lecture by the controversial American professor in UC's West Hall, several professors formed a wedge in an attempt to allow Banfield to leave the room filled with heckling students.

Students tried to question Banfield unsuccessfully, and U of T History professor Robert Bothwell started yelling "morons" at the students.

Pushing and shoving broke out and Teresa Hibbert claims she was hit by a U of T professor.

Banfield, a former advisor to US president Richard Nixon, has been accused by Students for a Democratic Society of publicizing racist theories.

He has written several books, one called The Unheavenly City, on the problems of the "lower classes" in slum areas of American cities.

He gave two lectures yesterday for packed audiences. The meetings were punctuated with frequent heckling and abuse from students who were opposed to Banfield's alleged "racist" theories.

The first lecture took almost 20 minutes to convene as chairman Peter Silcox told the students to keep quiet and let Banfield speak. Silcox was not listened to.

Finally Banfield agreed to answer questions instead of giving a lecture.

"What I have written is not racist," he maintained.

Banfield told the crowd which included Arts and Science dean Bob Greene, vice-president Jill Conway, Mrs. John Evans, professor Allan Bloom and others present, that he has not received as hostile a reception elsewhere in his travels.

In response to a question on his attitudes toward Italians and blacks, Banfield said he was not trying to write books which are racist.

"My books are the least racist possible," he said.

He added his principal argument is not that color is the main problem. "Class is the main problem, the same patterns of class behavior have been observed."

Different class structure

Banfield's definition of class is different. A wealthy person can be lower class if he is not intelligent and a lower class person can be upper class if he has drive and intelligence.

He said he had no connection with those who use genetics to explain differences in IQ scores between races. He prefers using differences in acceptance of delayed gratification and "time horizons" to explain differences between racial and cultural groups.

He denied he advised Nixon, saying "it depends what you mean by advised." A student pointed out he chaired a Nixon model cities task force and an urban housing task force.

Temper flared yesterday at a lecture by Edward Banfield, (standing, centre), accused of publicizing "racist" theories. At left is political science prof. Allan Bloom, arguing with students.

In reply to a question about a statement in The Unheavenly City on the alleged promiscuity of blacks he said it was based on studies.

He denied an assertion the gap is rising in living standards between black and white Americans. He said black incomes had risen quite a lot since 1945. Earlier this year the New York Times published statistics saying the gap is increasing.

He stated he thought there would be no gap in five or ten years if blacks continued at the present rate of progress.

Conway preferred Marx

Banfield defended his statements about the alleged limitations of the "lower class" saying they were not racist because there are more white lower class than blacks.

When asked to comment on Banfield's theories of class Conway said she preferred a "Marxist analysis of class." But she said she "always liked to hear from other viewpoints."

Student governor Howard Levitt phoned The Varsity last night with a message from Conway repeating her quotes. This was relayed to him at a meeting. Conway did not say why she did not phone the paper herself. She was unavailable for comment to when phoned.

Banfield's afternoon lecture was largely theoretical ignoring his urban studies and ideas on class and discussing social science and policy making.

In a long rambling address punctuated by heckling, Banfield basically said he did not think social scientists were influential in making policy decisions in the US.

The only interesting part of the speech was the rather long tirade against considering social science. Otherwise Banfield skirted the question of racist theories.

He was criticized by history teaching assistant John Philpott, after the speech in the afternoon, for avoiding discussion of his books and theories.

Banfield said social science was at its weakest in influencing a broad and fundamental issues such as urban problems.

'Insensitive' library administration criticized

By KATHERINE ROWCLIFFE

Dissatisfaction with the administration of U of T libraries is finally surfacing.

"We have reached the point where our demoralization and disillusionment is almost complete" say reference department librarians in a brief submitted March 4 in response to questions raised at a meeting with chief librarian R.H. Blackburn on February 19.

The brief accuses the library administration of being "increasingly hierarchical, rigid and insensitive" despite some recent trends in the university towards a more participatory system.

The lack of objectives and priorities for the entire library is another criticism in the librarians' brief.

In an interview, Blackburn said library objectives had been discussed in 1970 and he went on to say

"there are always implied objectives."

Messages distorted

At present, the brief says, "there are not effective methods of communication either horizontally or vertically."

All formal communication passes through a hierarchy which distorts, dissipates or ignores the original message.

Library users are, according to the brief, in a worse position, having no position in the structure.

The secrecy with which the senior administration operates is also criticized in the brief.

The brief is the culmination of a series of events subsequent to the resignation of reference department head Anne Woodsworth.

She resigned after failing in an attempt to have her salary raised to equal that of a male peer.

"Length of employment" was the reason given to Woodsworth for the salary differential, although she had two years more experience professional experience and a more advanced degree than did her male counterpart.

The other librarians in the department responded to her resignation with a letter to Blackburn on February 19, criticizing the lack of objectives and the hierarchical, expensive and inefficient system of management. The librarians' brief was written in answer to questions raised at the February 19 meeting.

Woodsworth's resignation was to be effective August 30, but she says the date was "unilaterally moved" to February 20. She was transferred to another job in the university.

She is the second head of the reference department to be abruptly transferred in the last three years.

Librarians are not covered by individually or collectively negotiated contracts and Woodsworth said some have had their jobs threatened as a result of their formal complaints.

Recommendations in the librarians' brief include the establishment of two library-wide committees to "investigate and recommend solutions."

One committee would consider objectives and priorities and the other would consider professional development.

20 years on the job

The brief also recommends the position of chief librarian be a "contractual five-year appointment following the example of other senior appointments in the university."

Blackburn has held the position for 20 years.

A system of evaluation is recommended for the purpose of planning and administration.

The same day he received the brief, Blackburn established two ad hoc committees to examine issues raised in it.

One committee, dealing specifically with objectives, will answer to Blackburn.

The other committee which will deal with issues outside the library jurisdiction, such as search committee, will be chaired by vice provost Peter Meincke and is to answer to university president John Evans.

Meincke says he does not want a destructive atmosphere to be created and hopes there will be positive results.

Members of the two committees were still being chosen yesterday but they hope to meet sometime this week.

The committees must move quickly if it wishes early solutions because Blackburn leaves for a year's sabbatical in August.

Blackburn stressed he was not frightened with change and cited the growth of the library from four departments to 10 as evidence of change.

Mr. Justice Dennis O'Leary is this week considering his decision on two court actions relating to lead pollution in Toronto. Meanwhile, children play hockey in the shadow of a plant which has been accused of spewing lead. See story page 15.

OSAP confused by U of T error

The Ontario Student Awards Plan office threatened to recalculate the grants of several U of T students who participated in last year's fees strike.

The charges were based on a mistake by U of T in neglecting to forward the information—that they had paid their fees—to the government, thus resulting in the threats.

U of T student Awards director Gerald Phillips admitted there had been a mix up but said it had been cleared up.

Last year more than 6,000 students at U of T refused to pay their second term fees in a fees strike called by the Ontario Federation of Students to protest reductions in student aid and a $100 fee increase.

The OSAP cheques were released by U of T with the provision the fees be paid eventually. Almost all fees were paid said Phillips.

Although this happened, Phillips said he was not aware of any students on OSAP this year who have not received their cheques as a result of the fees strike. The students threatened are not on OSAP this year.

He admitted there was a mix up in his department and shouldered the blame himself, not blaming any worker.

SAC president Bob Anderson called the incident "unfortunate" but did not believe it was deliberate. He blamed it on incompetence.

"It reflects badly on the U of T administration...but then there is a real problem in the administration. There have sometimes been delays in grants and payment in the past, but not this."

The refusal of York and Western administrations to release the OSAP cheques was met with several occupations last year. But the government defused the issue with a statement saying the cheques should be released.

THE varsity

TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors

Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Slotnick
Tom Walkom
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

Yesterday's fracas resulted in two casualties. Are they both well? Anyway, helping tonite were Gary Wieland, Gene Allen, Betsy Swill, 'Century' Bettson, celebrating his centennial, Andrew Faludy, Bodurub McGrath, Marilyn Emerson, David Simmonds, and Kathy Rowcliffe

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Daisons Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

One big happy family

C. Malim Harding

- chairman and chief executive officer, Harding Carpets Ltd.,
- director: Union Gas Ltd., Confederation Life Insurance Co., The Toronto-Dominion Bank.

Pauline M. McGibbon

- IMB Canada Ltd.,
- Imasco Ltd.,
- husband: D.W. McGibbon;
 - treasurer, Imperial Oil Ltd.,
 - vice-chairman and treasurer, board of regents, Victoria College,

Harry J. Riva

- barrister and solicitor, Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington,
- secretary, Astral Communications Ltd.,

Peter C. Newman

- editor Maclean's Magazine,
- director: Maclean-Hunter Ltd., The Macmillan Co. of Canada Ltd.,

Sydney Hermant

- president, Imperial Optical Co. Ltd.,
- director: Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, North American Life Assurance Co., Peoples Jewellers Ltd.,

C. Mackenzie King

- director: Canadian Glazed Papers Ltd., Harvey Woods Ltd.,

John R. Evans

- director: Dominion Foundries and Steel Ltd.,

William B. Harris

- president, Harris and Partners Securities Ltd.,
- president, Harris and Partners, Ltd.,
- director: The Mercantile and General Reassurance Co., Storrington Investment Co. Ltd.,

W.J.D. Lewis

- president, Canadian operations of The Prudential Insurance Co. of America,
- president, Prudential Growth Fund Canada Ltd.,
- director, Can Crown Trust Co.,

Hon. Daniel Lang (Senator)

- counsel, Lang, Michener, Cranston, Farquharson, and Wright,
- director: P.L. Robertson Manufacturing Co. Ltd., Procor Ltd.,

W.O. Twaits

- chairman, Imperial Oil Ltd.,
- vice-president and director, Royal Bank of Canada,
- member of: The American Petroleum Institute, The Chemical Institute of Canada, The International Advisory Council of Stanford Research Institute, The Conference Board in Canada, National Advisory Committee on Petroleum, Canadian-American Committee,

Gordon N. Fisher

- vice-president and managing director, Southam Press Ltd.,
- director: Southam Printing Ltd., Southam Business Publications Ltd., Gazette Printing Co. (Ltd.), National Business Publications Ltd., Southstar Publications Publishers Ltd., Sun Publishing Co., Ltd., Selkirk Holdings Ltd., CKOY Ltd., Wijdosr Star Ltd.,

Keith Hendrick

- vice-president, sales, Noranda Mines Ltd.,
- president, Noranda Sales Corporation Ltd.,
- director: Brunswick Mining and Smelter Corp. Ltd., Canadian Copper Refiners Ltd., Canpotex Ltd., Central Canada Potash Co. Ltd., Empresa Fluorspar Mines Ltd., Noranda Sales Corp. of Canada Ltd., Rudolf Wolff and Co. Ltd. (London, Neg.), St. Lawrence Fertilizer Ltd., Zinc Institute, Inc., Lead Industries Assoc., International Lead Zinc Research Organization, Inc., The Silver Institute, Inc.,

John A. Tory

- partner, Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington,
- vice-president and director, Scottish and York Holdings Ltd.,
- director: Abitibi Paper Co., Ltd., H.W. Bacon Ltd., Canadian South African Gold Fund Ltd., Richard DeBoo Ltd., Rogers Radio-Broadcasting Ltd., Rogers Cable Communications Ltd., The Royal Bank of Canada, Scottish and York Insurance Co. Ltd., Starson Investments Ltd., Slater, Walker of Canada Ltd., Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada Ltd., Johnson Newspapers Inc (US), Thomson Newspapers Ltd., The Thomson Organisation Ltd. (UK), Victoria Insurance Co. of Canada,

Tory 'community' reps are businessmen

Members of the committee to review the University of Toronto Act, 1971, split at last week's meeting over the question of whether to discuss parity.

Caught with their proverbial pants down were Governing Council "streakers" Gwen Russell, John Kelly, and Bill Dunphy. All three opposed any discussion of parity at this time.

However, voting for a discussion were Jim Martin, Howard Levitt, Graham Cotter, and Harry Riva.

So the committee has decided to devote its next two sessions—Thursday, March 21, and Thursday, April 4, to discussion of "composition", as the unofficial minutes discretely recorded it.

Of course, what is at stake here is the whole question of student-faculty parity on the Governing Council. Students were dealt a short hand in the legislature gamble in 1971 when then-universities minister John White backed down under threats from conservative U of T faculty members and decided parity wasn't going to carry the day.

However, the Ontario Tories did toss a sop to the well-organized students who pleaded their case before the Legislature. The "Big Blue machine" promised the Act would be reviewed in two years and, possibly, some changes would be made.

We're not really so gullible to believe the government is serious.

The committee to review the U of T Act is, after all, not even a parity body—only three of its 15 members are students.

Most of the "government appointees" on the Governing Council (16 out of 50 members) are, needless to say, involved in the business world, as the chart above shows. (All facts were taken from the latest Directory of Directors, compiled by the Financial Post. The book, however, lists only the largest corporations in the country.)

These people obviously do not represent the "community outside the university" as one might well expect them to, but instead the business community only (with the exception of the one token labour representative, Lynn Williams of the Steelworkers).

If the Governing Council is to gain any credibility it must do two things: grant students what they honestly deserve, parity with the teaching faculty, and remove some of the businessmen from the council and substitute some real "community" people.

At the present time the council is a joke. It cannot and should not be taken seriously.

(See the centrespread and page nine for more horrible stories.)

op-ed

Articles submitted to the "opposite the editorial" page should be typed, double-spaced on a 64-character line, and signed. As with letters, contributions may be edited for space reasons; four type-written, double-spaced pages is the maximum length recommended. Op-ed pieces are published according to space availability, immediacy of topic, and relevancy. Mail op-ed pieces to The Varsity, 91 St. George St., Toronto 181, by campus or regular delivery, or bring them to The Varsity editorial offices.

Opinions expressed on the op-ed page represent the opinions of the writer only, and not the views of The Varsity collective.

Slaughter of baby seals begins again

This month once again the seal hunters will arrive on the coastal front of Labrador. When they depart they will leave behind them thousands of carcasses and the ice red with blood.

The seals pay a heavy price to put a $4,000 seal-skin coat around the shoulders of a woman far away. They also die to feed ranch-bred mink and to supply oils for margarine.

The initial outcry against the seal hunt was primarily based on the fact that baby seals were being killed.

Thus it was that in 1970, Fisheries Minister Jack Davis promised that no more baby seals (white-coats) would be killed. Prime Minister Trudeau at that time announced "those who protest the killing won't be shown the same pictures of baby seals with their big blue or brown eyes."

Public opinion against seal slaughter

However, harp seals shed their white coats at 21 days and are then called "beaters." Using this little known fact the Canadian government was able to proclaim that only "beaters" were being killed and that the killing of baby seals was banned. Most people would hardly agree that a 21-day-old seal was not a baby.

International and Canadian opinion had been aroused to such an extent that by 1967, the Department of Fisheries had issued more stringent killing regulations and had five official observers at the hunt.

Dr. Elizabeth Simpson also attended that hunt as an independent observer. She is a veterinarian who believes that an unfractured skull indicates that the skinning is commenced before the seal is dead.

It was now prohibited by the federal government to skin seals until they were dead.

The government's representatives at that hunt noted, among other things, that of the carcasses they observed just under 10 per cent did not have fractured skulls, that seals, and other animals, are sometimes technically alive at the commencement of the seal hunt by humane officials should be a continuing project.

Canadians are not the only sealers involved in the hunt. A treaty, referred to as a "Gentlemen's Agreement" by the Minister of Fisheries, was signed between the Norwegian and Canadian government in Oslo in 1971, without reference to Parliament. This treaty allowed the Norwegian sealing fleet to enter Canada's newly proclaimed 12-mile fishing zone for the purpose of continuing to take seals.

The front quota in 1972 was 120,000 harp seals. This quota was split 50-50 between the two countries.

Canadians use a regulation club to bludgeon the animals, while the Norwegians are armed with murderous "hakapik", a metal hook which is driven into the seal's brain, if the aim is accurate.

Arguments used to maintain seal hunt

Even Canadian sealers view the Norwegians' killing methods with horror. Melvin Vineham, 36, of Twillingate, who has gone to the hunt for the past 13 years had this to say, "... we don't barbarize the seals like they do. They kill everything in sight, even the bitches."

There are several arguments used for maintaining the seal hunt. One is the notion that the harp seals would destroy the commercial fishing industry. The best scientific evidence available says that seals feed heavily on capelin, a non-commercial fish. When they breed, mate and moult they eat little or nothing. In their summer water they also subsist on non-commercial fish. If, as is being claimed by some this year, there is a shortage of cod, it is because man has overfished this animal himself.

The other argument used is that the hunters' must have the hunt to earn their living. However, it has been estimated that the individual sealer makes between $750 and $1,200 at his bloody employment which lasts a mere six weeks. This salary is already far below the average Canadian average.

The Canadian government should take the suggestion of Brian Davies of The International Fund for Animal Welfare, and direct some of the hundreds of thousands of dollars Canada is presently spending on policing the hunt, research on harp seals, and combating an "international black eye" to these men. Additionally, these men and their families deserve a more stable type of employment. Surely, the government should be setting up year-round job opportunities.

The corporations that were established in the late 1940's for the purpose of exploiting the Canadian seal herds are: in Norway - the G.C. Rieber Co. of Bergen, and in Canada, The Karl Karlsen Co. Ltd. of Halifax and its associate,

Christensen Canadian Enterprises Ltd. of Montreal. These are the people who are getting rich on the suffering of our baby seals! They are being aided by women throughout the world who insist on wearing the skins of murdered animals on their backs. (Real people wear fake furs.)

Most animal welfare groups have warned that despite government denials, the harp seal is on the way to extinction. The World Wildlife Fund now agrees that this is probable. In 1967 even the Minister of Fisheries issued a statement to the effect that on the Labrador Front "there is scientific evidence that over-exploitation is occurring." Now that the hunt has been stopped in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the pressure on the Front seals is even stronger.

No quota on hooded seal

There is no quota on the Hooded Seal (the other seal in the area). The Hooded seal is rare and much larger than the Harp seal. Its pelt is particularly sought by the Norwegian sealers. This animal commonly defends her offspring to the death and has almost disappeared at this time from the Gulf of St. Lawrence region.

Brian Davies of the International Fund for Animal Welfare has been attempting for many years to publicize the plight of our seals and to stop the hunt. The massive response to his campaign to stop the seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence has now been successful.

Currently, attempts are being made to have the harp seal breeding ice included in the boundaries of a proposed Magdalen Islands National Park.

Sign a petition

If you oppose the slaughter of Canadian baby seals either draw up a petition or send signatures to The International Fund for Animal Welfare, PO Box 1011, Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada.

Furthermore it has been proposed that rather than killing the seals on the coastal front, tourists visit them there. This idea is already being tested by the IFAW.

Prime Minister Trudeau said, "Kids who blow their minds on drugs are missing a much better and cheaper thing - a trip into the Arctic or the outback. It's habit-forming, a habit that can't easily be kicked. It's wild!", when addressing the National Press Club in Canberra, Australia in 1970.

Mr. Trudeau has the power to create The Magdalen Island National Park as a sanctuary for breeding seals, and to ban sealing. Perhaps he will take his own advice.

In closing this quote from Brian Davies book, Savage Luxury seems fitting: "I live in a society where almost any torturing of animals is 'go' if some human makes money from it. Our animal, anti-cruelty laws only recognize suffering as criminal in the most exceptional circumstances. If someone makes a dollar, pain becomes necessary and even morally acceptable."

This year the seal hunt is to be carried on only in the more remote area of the Labrador coastal front. There is little doubt the battle to end this senseless annual slaughter can be successful in the coastal front area as well.

Marlene Lakin
Kathy Sims

Editorial error corrected

I would like to correct an inaccuracy that appeared in your election editorial of March 10.

In it, you stated that I was "at one time asked to run for an engineering society position but turned it down because I didn't think I was experienced enough." I have never been asked to run for any position in the Eng. Soc. and could not do so if I was asked, as I am not in Engineering and never have been.

Jim Maclean

(Ed. Jim Maclean is correct. We erred in saying he was in engineering and had turned down a position with the engineering society because of "inexperience." We should have said Bill Paterson of the Baumann slate turned down an engineering society position because he did not feel he had enough experience for the job. This information was obtained from a letter Paterson wrote to the engineering society.

We wish to apologize for the statement.

However, we have checked over the rest of the editorial thoroughly and we stand by our opinions and the facts which, we feel, support them.)

SMC player not a 'ringer'

The Varsity article of March 11, on Tom O'Connor of the SMC basketball team was aptly titled "Bad News", for that is just what this piece was. On the authority of Ian Hadden of the Scarborough Balcony Square, it alleged that O'Connor has played illegally for SMC and that the SMC coach had condoned the use of "ringers." Before addressing these charges, one wishes to know what kind of journalism permits "borrowing" material from other publications, misleading "editing", the masking of slanderous remarks as the "interpretations" of others and the publication of unsigned articles. Readers of the Varsity are accustomed to its penchant for the sensational and one can imagine the relish with which some seek to associate scandal with the church. Nonetheless, one wishes to know why relevant information, available in the Balcony Square article, was omitted.

The two articles aside, some facts deserve attention. O'Connor is presently a full time student at the Toronto School of Theology, which is affiliated with U of T and SMC. Furthermore, as a graduate of SMC he is eligible for inter-fac athletics as are the many students who play for their old colleges despite the fact that they presently attend OCE, Toronto Teachers College, OISE or graduate faculties. To omit such information simply misrepresents the facts. The fictitious remark attributed through Mr. Hadden to the SMC coach is as reprehensible as it is unfounded. The problem does not lie with the alleged issue, but with the article that takes such liberty in presenting it.

The attitude manifested by this article is unfortunate not only for the individuals involved but also for the athletic groups in question. At U of T and elsewhere in Canada, there exists a generous and informal attitude towards university athletics which contrasts sharply with the professionalism that prevails in the US. As an American and as a graduate student who participates in interfac athletics, I regret this affair. It indicates, beyond journalistic irresponsibility, a small-mindedness that does not represent or become Canadian university students.

John Kirby
Institute of Christian Thought
St. Michael's College

Marxists act like Nazis

Much attention is being given to the confrontation that occurred between the Revolutionary Marxist Group and the Campus Alternative group February 4. An intelligent, objective view of such activities was expressed in the Toronto Sun on February 11 which I feel might be of interest to those concerned with the protection of our basic freedoms in Canada.

McKenzie Porter's column outlined how a handful of militant Marxists on university campuses have successfully prevented the program "Under Attack" from filming.

The battle ground was Trent University and Brock University, where something calling itself the "Revolutionary Marxist Group" decided an American White supremacist lawyer was a "fascist" and therefore could not be grilled by students. What RMG considers to be fascist is denied freedom of speech.

These Marxist then decided "Under Attack" is also fascist, and thus not allowed to film at these universities.

To anyone — except possibly an academic or intellectual — these Marxists are reminiscent of Nazis in their methods of intimidating those whose views they disagree with (They also consider the "Sun" to be fascist).

They represent a tiny minority. And yet they have defiled democracy which won't stand up.

What we find discouraging is how easy the media, university students and administrations are to intimidate. Fear of someone getting hurt persuaded "Under Attack" to comply with the outrageous demands, while a similar fear seemed to infect the Trent University administration. In our society Marxists have a right to express ideas. There is also the right to disagree. What shouldn't be tolerated is pipsqueak tyranny.

How could "Under Attack" lower itself to let this group decide who should or shouldn't be on its show? For shame.

These ideologues are so contemptuous of the principle of free speech that they won't dare expose themselves on "Under Attack" to defend their ideas. In other words, a white racist from the US south has more courage than a Marxist revolutionary in Canada!

RMG has been active at U of T too, preventing political groups they oppose from distributing literature.

Are Canadian students really prepared to abandon principles so casually, and to surrender rights that in another time men and women died to attain or defend? Apparently so.

I would also like to mention that Mary Tate, a spokesman for the RMG, has taken a very shaky stand in her March 4 article on fascism. She concludes, "The Revolutionary Marxist Groups organized around the slogan No Platform for Fascists. By this we mean that the Fascist organizations must be prevented from organizing and advocating their reactionary ideology. It is not against 'free speech' that we fight."

This is obviously contradictory. Individuals were prevented from expressing their views by threats of violence and harm. We can therefore conclude that the quoted statement of Miss Tate is completely false and that the RMG is, in reality, opposing freedom of speech.

Dave Decker
Freedom Leadership Foundation

Canadian art not ignored

Re: "Canadian art said ignored," March 11, 1974, Varsity.

Contrary to what Mr. Lord says, the fine art department does in fact recognize Canadian art and Canadian national identity. The fine art studio conducts regular visits to the National Art Gallery and to local galleries to see and appreciate Canadian works of art. Artists and critics are both invited and visited on a regular basis.

It is rather ironic that Barry Lord, the critic, was invited, with the chairman's approval, to be a guest lecturer in the studio on Wednesday, February 13, 1974. In the four hours he was there, he could have taken the time to enquire about the Canadian content in our department or even to listen to the brief summary I made of the studio's approach to creative Canadian work.

I am a Canadian artist—painting, exhibiting, and teaching in Canada; and as far as I am concerned it is difficult to get closer to the roots of what Mr. Lord considers Canadian art.

David Rifat,
assistant professor

Print Varg on computer paper

J. Richard Swenson (see February 22 Write on "Fewer Varsities will save trees") exhibits a peculiar kind of ambidexterity. As his right hand was producing his letter concerning the Varsity's poor ecological and journalistic practices (an odd combination of criticism) his left hand was no doubt picking away at some card-punch keyboards. I mean, doesn't it make you ill just to think about all those trees that are destroyed just so J. R. Swenson — and the Dept. of Computer Science — can punch holes in thousands of cards in order to obtain reams and reams of computer print out? When I go to a computer terminal, I am immediately struck by the sight of an enormous mass of discarded cards and print out paper strewn about the floor and overflowing from gigantic waste bins. Surely, I say to myself, there is enough combustible material here to fuel a power plant and provide enough electricity for the operation of a computer.

Computer freaks assure me that they collect so much print out they don't know what to do with the stuff. Some write letters home on it.

Others wrap dead fish in it. Varsities, some say, are also useful in this respect. This is not the only thing the Varsity and the Dept. of Computer Science have in common.

However, I must needs make a further comment on Mr. Swenson's journalistic criticism. Granted, computer science and journalism are similar in some respects (Mr. Swenson, after all, wrote a letter). Mr. Swenson's analysis of the Varsity's publication practice is in error though, and contrary to the best practice of our highly esteemed daily newspapers. These publish six, seven times a week, yet Mr. Swenson would have the Varsity publish only twice a week. The Varsity must publish more often, not less, if it is to develop the professionalism and depth of thought evident in our national publications.

Keeping these points in mind, I propose the following plan which would allow the Varsity to publish 5 days a week, yet alleviate Mr. Swenson's concern over the plight of trees.

The plan is simply this: the Varsity should publish on used computer print out. The advantages of this scheme are many. All trees formerly used to make Varsities would be saved. Mr. J. Richard Swenson would not be sad any longer. Interdisciplinary studies would be enhanced by the connection between Computer Science and Journalism, which could ultimately lead to a cross-appointment of professors between Computer Science and the English dept. The Varsity could publish on the highest quality paper, from which the ink would not rub off.

I hope all concerned will accept these suggestions as graciously as they are offered.

Hugh A. Wilkinson
Innis III

Don't put quotas on foreign profs

It is often mentioned by friends of mine at U of T that there is a strong and growing dissatisfaction in Canadian academic circles concerning the inordinately large percentage of Canadian faculty which were schooled in the United States. One wonders if this issue emanates more from the desire of Canadian students to be taught exclusively by nationals, or from the desire of Canadian scholars for some unique form of academic security. Certainly there have been no published studies discerning whether or not Canadian or American PHD's are any less qualified to instruct on either side of the border, allowing the question of "quotas" to smack of intellectual fascism.

Cases in which an American professor is teaching Canadian government or foreign policy is an understandable objection, but where is the quota line to be drawn? Should they be set for all those merely schooled in the US, or must they also be US citizens? What of US citizens schooled in Canada, or any nationality educated anywhere? Is the instruction of social psychology given by an "all-Canadian" professor inherently superior to instruction given by one who is not? It is quickly apparent that the answers evoked are easily as difficult as the questions asked.

The placement of artificial barriers and restrictions in a field fundamentally free of them, is in the least defeating its own avowed purpose. Should academic freedoms become sacrificial lambs to the rising wave of nationalist sentiment, Canadians would find themselves in the peculiar bind of censoring the very undercurrent on which the "wave" is based: knowledge.

Hundreds of institutions throughout the United States and world employ Canadian scholars, just as Canada has embraced learned men regardless of their previous condition of nationality. It would be a sad day for all should it be mutually agreed to trade everyone back.

John Koluhalmé
Canadian citizen
Eastern Michigan University

Superior Optical

Prescription
Eyeglasses
Frame styles
to compliment today's youthful fashions
in metal and shell

236 BLOOR ST. W.
(AT VARSITY STA)
PHONE 922-2116

"This land is our land"

Native land claims

Speakers
James O'Reilly,
lawyer for the James Bay Indians
James Wab-Shes,
President of the Indian Brotherhood
of the Northwest Territories
Tegak Curley,
President of the Inuit Tapscott
of Canada
Flora MacDonald,
Progressive Conservative critic for
Ind. Affairs

Seminar 74 Trinity College

Saturday, March 16
8:30 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.
Concert Hall, Edward Johnson Building
Tickets
Call Office of Convocation
Trinity College, 922-2651

come
HONKY TONK
with
VINCE TROY
Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!
HOUSE OF LANCASTER
147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0615

Question of parity to be reopened

The question of student parity on Governing Council is to come up again next week following the last meeting of the sub-committee to review the U of T Act.

By a 4-3 vote the committee passed the motion that the act "should include in its review (of the Act) a discussion of the composition of the Governing Council as set out in Section 2(2) of the Act."

Under the 1971 provincial act, U of T's covering Council must contain 16 lay and 12 faculty members, along with eight alumni and six administrators, but only eight students.

The committee agreed to devote two sessions to the discussion of the composition of the Governing Council starting March 2.

The vote came as a surprise even to student members of the committee who are a minority on the subcommittee, and just how far the consideration of student parity will go in the two meetings is unclear.

Any subcommittee recommendation must to the executive committee of Governing Council, then on to the council itself, and then on the Queen's Park where Bill Davis' Tory majority has the final say.

Even if the subcommittee recommends parity between faculty and students on Governing Council, the recommendation could be dropped at any step in the process, and students have no parity in the process.

The subcommittee itself is the vestige of a token concession to students made 20 months ago when the U of T Act was passed just before the last provincial election in 1971.

At that time students thought they had convinced then Minister of Universities John White that parity with faculty was to be Governing Council's composition. The proposal would have meant the total student-faculty seats combined on council would be a minority.

However, even after conceding students made a good case, White caved in to faculty opposition to parity. At one point during the summer some faculty were muttering about closing the university down if parity arrived.

When White brought down the present act later that summer, he provided the act should be reviewed in two years with an eye to possible amendments in the hopes of placating student forces.

However, the act provides the review must be done by Governing Council, which, of course, is a non-parity body.

Canadian OISE director wanted by province

The provincial government wants the next director of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education (OISE) to be a Canadian despite OISE's advertising in the US and Britain for a new director.

In a letter to R.W.B. Jackson, OISE director, Education Minister Thomas Wells says it is "the strong wish of the government of Ontario" the next director be Canadian.

Wells continued: "We believe that the institute can best continue to serve Ontario under the direction of a person who knows and understands education in this province and this country."

During the 1972-73 academic years, OISE's staff was 56 per cent Canadian, 32 per cent American, and 4.5 per cent British, according to figures released in December by the legislature's select committee on economic and cultural nationalism.

The committee said the corresponding figures for the previous year were 53.4 per cent Canadian, 33.8 per cent American and three per cent British.

With a stroke of diplomacy, Wells told Jackson in the letter:

"I trust that the primary intent of these advertisements (in the US and UK) was to communicate with Canadians now residing in the United States and other countries."

Most Chilean refugees barred

MONTREAL (CUPI) — More than half the people who applied to come to Canada as a result of the Chilean coup have been turned down, the head of the Latin American division of the Canadian External Affairs Department has disclosed.

Speaking March 7 at a McGill political science class, Mr. Carpentier said that of 12,000 applicants, 1,126 have been accepted as immigrants to Canada, 2,370 are being processed, 2,000 have been withdrawn by the applicants and 7,000 were rejected.

"Selecting and processing immigrants is not easy," said Carpentier, "and being confronted with people who are politically to the far left is traumatic for the immigration and security officials."

Carpentier said the evacuation of refugees to other countries from the numerous UN camps in Chile is proceeding very slowly.

He visited Santiago at the end of last year and saw a camp 10 miles outside Santiago. His visit received bad publicity in the junta controlled press, he said and he found that the oral interviews which are part of Canadian immigration procedure were difficult to conduct in the presence of police.

Most of those accepted as immigrants to Canada are professional or white collar workers. Carpentier acknowledged that "the question of unskilled workers is difficult. Often those people are more deserving than those who are admitted."

Carpentier defended Canada's recognition of the military junta.

Delaying recognition would have antagonized the junta, Carpentier said, and the Canadian embassy in Santiago would not have been able to obtain safe conducts for 55 people who received refuge there in December. He said also that non-recognition would have set a "bad precedent" and that "the recognition may be questionable but at least it was consistent".

CAREERS in JEWISH LIFE

Monday, March 18 - 'JEWISH STUDIES'

5 PM PROF. FRANK TALMAGE:

DEPT. OF NEAR EASTERN STUDIES UNIV. OF TORONTO
"JEWISH STUDIES IN NORTH AMERICA"

7:30 PM MRS. R. KATCHEN:

LIBRARIAN, ROBARTS LIBRARY, U of T
"LIBRARIANSHIP & JEWISH STUDIES"

8:30 PM PROF. A. AVICHAJ:

DEPT. OF HISTORY, UNIV. OF ROCHESTER
"JEWISH STUDIES IN ISRAEL"

Tuesday, March 19 - 'JEWISH EDUCATION & the RABBINATE'

5 PM DR. JOSEPH I. COHEN:

CONSULTANT, AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR JEWISH EDUCATION
"JEWISH EDUCATION AS A CAREER"

7:30 PM RABBI S. STAUBER:

RABBI OF BNAI TORAH CONGREGATION
"CRISIS & OPPORTUNITY FOR THE RABBI IN NORTH AMERICA"

8:30 PM RABBI M. BERGLAS:

RABBI OF SHAARET TEFILLAH CONGREGATION
"MOTIVATION FOR THE RABBINATE: A PERSONAL ACCOUNT"

Wednesday, March 20 - 'SOCIAL WORK'

4 PM PROF. SOL GREEN:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, YESHIVA UNIV.
"WHAT'S JEWISH ABOUT SOCIAL WORK?"

5 PM MR. JEROME DIAMOND:

DIRECTOR, JEWISH FAMILY & CHILD SERVICES
"THE FIELD: EMPLOYMENT, SALARIES, MOBILITY"

7 PM PROF. BEN SCHLESINGER:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TOR.
"PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL WORK IN NORTH AMERICA"

8 PM PROF. BEN SHAPIRO:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TORONTO
"SOCIAL WORK OPPORTUNITIES IN ISRAEL"

at Hillel - 186 ST. GEORGE

SUPPERS WILL BE SERVED EACH DAY FOR PARTICIPANTS WITHOUT CHARGE. CALL THE OFFICE TO RESERVE - 922-8881.

Chargex Accepted • Student Discount

CONTACT LENSES
$79 complete with all fittings & service

GLASSES
large selection of imported frames

SOFT LENSES AVAILABLE

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.
354 Yonge St. 364-2607

Around Again

Used Records:

rock, jazz, folk, classics
and

Books:

literature, philosophy,
"religion", sci.fi.
and

Some other interesting things

18 Baldwin St.
(north of Dundas
west of University)

Wanted

Fieldworker for Arts and Science Student Union

Salary - $115 a week for 40 weeks

Starting Date August 15, 1974

QUALIFICATIONS - Must be willing to co-ordinate and organize political and educational work in arts and sciences at U of T. Would have to work with course unions, faculty Council reps., course evaluations and university issue such as staffing and discipline. Experience in organizing and/or campus politics an asset.

Send applications to

Bob Bettson
543 Palmerston Blvd.
Toronto, Ont.

or
Ellen Pomer
479 Duplex Ave.
Toronto, Ont.

Deadline Thursday March 21, 1974

Big Scoop blown - no U of T body-rub

By PAUL McGRATH
The University of Toronto engaged in the business of running a body-rub parlour?

No, couldn't be, we thought, but ever hopeful of catching the administration with their pants down, so to speak, the fearless Varsity dispatched a reporter to check into a little house at 713 Spadina Ave.

Owned by the university, the house recently has been repainted a vibrant yellow and sports a shingle that mysteriously announces the location of "Salon de Blue."

The house is one of the many which the university owns in the north-west campus, an area in limbo since any plans the university has for it have been held in abeyance until the government proves a little less parsimonious with building funds.

These houses are being administered by Crown Trust for the university, and it appeared the university had little knowledge of what was going on at that end of campus.

Business affairs' Neil Gregory, when contacted by The Varsity, expressed no knowledge of the existence of the parlour, but expressed interest. "Oh, is it a good one?" he asked.

With visions of toplessness, bottomlessness or even both, this reporter wandered up to the second floor of this eye-catching edifice, and was immediately suspicious of a sign that read "Manicures, Pedicure, and Facial Massage" with an arrow pointing to a thick door adorned with a knocker and a peep-hole.

After employing the former, and being perused through the latter the door opened and I explained I was doing a survey on student's sexual habits, a clever little ruse I had come up with 30 seconds earlier after deciding not to go through with the whole rub "business".

The girl was a little suspicious—due perhaps to my stutter and crimson face.

She escorted me to the front room to meet the manager, a friendly guy named Frank whose apparent purpose was to lounge in his undershirt, while simultaneously watching the Irish Rovers on the tube, the sound portion being performed by the Impressions on the record player.

As soon as I mentioned the word "sex" I was immediately stopped and informed that no sex went on in this place, that the girl who had greeted me at the door was two months away from being a Registered Masseuse.

The place gave only massages, pedicures, manicures. No extras.

Crestfallen at seeing this year's Big Scoop plunging down the drain, I proceeded to get a history of the place. Frank and the girls have been there for about three months after taking over a respectable 12-year business from a lady who had decided to marry late in life.

"It's a living," said Frank. "The lady had a good business, and we have kept most of her clientele."

According to Frank, the business has had no problems, they have been checked on fairly regularly by both the police and Crown Trust and neither have found anything shady about their operations.

Business affairs administrative assistant Randy Grimes assured us that before the business came, he checked with the Huron-Sussex Ratepayers Association to see about any objections, and that since then there have been no complaints about the business.

"Sure, we were a little leery," said Grimes, but mentioned any funny business would have been picked up by the family residing on the third floor.

While talking to the manager, three clients entered, two of whom left a trifle disgruntled upon discovering that they would see only a minimum of flesh in the place and that no "extras" were being offered.

BIG SCOOP BLOWN: This U of T-owned house, was SUPPOSED to house a body-rub parlor, but everything's legit. No extras.

"Sure, we could run a place like that," says Frank, "but we wouldn't be in business very long."

As I was preparing to leave, Frank asked me how my survey was going, a subject I had neglected during the conversation.

I mumbled something about the impossibility of a sex life due to medieval residence rules, and headed for the door.

Frank followed me and made an offer which can't be refused, a discount to any U of T students who would like to use the facilities.

SMC ELECTIONS MARCH 21-22

Students' Union
President-Vice President
1 Ticket to be Elected
St. Mikes' SAC REPS
(5 To Be Elected)

NOMINATIONS CLOSE
TODAY AT 6 PM

For more information and nomination forms, drop into the Students' Union office.

THE ULTIMATE EXPERIENCE

LIMITED ENGAGEMENT
STARTS FRIDAY
MARCH 15

daily: 2:30, 4:45,
7:00 and 9:15
Cinemalumiére
290 COLLEGE ST at SPADINA, 920-9817

CASINO NIGHT

SAT. MARCH 16 8:30 P.M.

Black Jack, Roulette Wheel, Crown &
Anchor, Over & Under, etc. Beer,
Refreshments, Fun.

Will it be your lucky night?

Admission Price: $1.00
Proceeds for Israel

HILLEL - 186 ST. GEORGE

RONNIE HAWKINS IS AT LOUNGE Hades

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.
OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 8:30 P.M.

OR DOWN THE ROAD
WITH ABRAHAM &
ISAAC • written by
Randy Brown • directed
by Leslie O'Dell ...

wed. mar. 13 to
fri. mar. 15
at 8 pm.
sat. mar. 16 at
8 pm & 9:45 pm.
FREE!

AT THE GLEN MORRIS 928-8705

Larry's
Hideaway Hotel
121 Carlton at Jarvis
THIS WEEK

FLAG
Mar. 11-16
NEXT BIG ATTRACTION
THE BRITISH
ARE HERE
Mar. 18-22

Remodelling and Alterations
- A Specialty -

STUDENT'S ELITE

Cleaners and Tailors
654 Spadina Ave.
922-4361

10% DISCOUNT
ON PRESENTATION
OF A.T.L. CARD
MEMBER OF INDEPENDENT
CLEANERS ASSOC.

Tory ministers give students the sting

By ART MOSES

After teasing student leaders with the possibility, Conservative University Affairs Minister John White caved in to faculty hostility, and refused to grant students equal representation with faculty on the new council which began governing U of T July, 1972.

It all happened July 1971, when the Ontario Legislatures' standing committee on human resources was studying the new U of T Act. The Act replaced the current Board of Governors and Senate, with a simple 50-member governing council.

John White's decision to give students only eight seats to the faculty's 12 came after much soul-searching and vote-conscious agony, and legislatively ended the student struggle for parity which began more than seven years ago.

The struggle had featured a series of reports, submissions, votes and personalities, but it ultimately boiled down to three days of frantic negotiations among government, student and faculty leaders in July. Significantly, this final phase happened while Queen's Park corridors were humming with excitement and political wrangling as politicians anticipated the October 1971 provincial election.

In June, Mr. White had introduced a draft U of T bill which set up a 42-member council — 6 students, 10 faculty, 14 government appointees, U of T alumni, 2 administrators, the U of T president, the chancellor, and two presidential appointees.

The Legislature approved the draft bill in principle with only the NDP opposed, but White said he wasn't necessarily bound by the proportions and promised the all-party committee on human resources could decide the final numbers and could grant parity if it wished. The committee has a Conservative majority.

Meanwhile, student leaders, particularly former Students' Administrative Council president Bob Spencer and former Association of Part-Time University Students president Joyce Denyer, were steadfastly lobbying White, trying move him to a parity position. They undoubtedly won White's respect and at the same time appeared to have been almost enamoured with the minister. They also effectively lobbied NDP and Liberal MPP's. The faculty seemed relatively quiet, certain the draft bill would pass unscathed.

The human resources committee did some preliminary work on the bill and found the student and faculty leaders' positions diametrically opposed.

Then, one evening, White came into the committee room and said, in effect, "gentlemen, perhaps we can work out a compromise whereby we will add four members to the council to be chosen from the entire student and faculty bodies on a one-man one-vote basis." These would be offset by adding two more government and two more alumni appointees, he said.

The conservative faculty leadership was agast.

Faculty react

Faculty Association president J.B. Conacher bitterly condemned White's

The committee to review the U of T Act (1971) has met six times since early December. The Act will be reviewed this summer in the Ontario Legislature, after all interested parties have had a chance to make their views known.

The committee will discuss parity during the next two sessions, March 21 (4 pm) and sometime in early April. As a guide to the question to date we are reprinting on this page and on the two pages that follow extracts from the Varsity and Hansard from the summer and fall of 1971.

suggestion, which the minister was careful not to introduce as a formal amendment. Conacher denounced the proposal as "overt parity" pointing out that students outnumber faculty about 20 to 1 and could easily overwhelm the faculty vote.

But almost all members of that legislature committee thought the suggestion was a good one, including those Conservatives who bothered to speak on it. Most notable was former Health Minister Matthew Diamond who angrily denounced the anti-parity faculty. He said he could understand why these professors would not trust their own students. I appeared that student leaders had finally out-lobbied and out-manipulated the faculty and administrators to win an amazing victory.

But it was not to be.

In desperation, the Faculty Association leadership mustered its forces. It called on conservative faculty to write, call or telegram White telling him his proposal would bring on the apocalypse, and urging him to withdraw the entire bill if he felt he couldn't pass it without parity. Suddenly the Board of Governors, long a sore point with most faculty, had become more appealing than the spectre of equal student-faculty representation on a new council.

And the prospect of professors having to campaign for student votes...aghhhhhhhhhh. You just can't do this to us, the faculty conservatives charged. It would "plunge the university into annual political turmoil," was the argument used by New College Principal Donald Ivey who proved to be the most influential faculty member in shaping John White's eventual decision.

The familiar anti-parity arguments were unleashed with renewed venom. Students are at university to learn from faculty members who already know. The university cannot be a democracy because the prime movers within it (the faculty) form an untouchable intellectual elite, was the somewhat exaggerated gist of the Conacher appeal.

But as the faculty onslaught became fiercer, new, never before attempted arguments were introduced. Parity will lead to an increase in cheating, in plagiarism, former Faculty Association President and old anti-parity leader John Rist wailed. Parity will increase the development of "mickey mouse courses", the classics professor claimed, although he was unable to fully explain what he meant to inquiring committee members.

Some faculty members made vague threats that faculty would obstruct the workings of the university if parity was granted. About two days after he had suggested the controversial 10-6-4 formula, White indicated he was changing his mind, giving the faculty attack new life.

Faculty leaders brought in the president of the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations from Laurentian University, Sudbury (Prof. Clarke) who charged that if White "imposed" parity on U of T it would be a blatant infringement on university autonomy and would amount to political interference in academic affairs.

White angrily rebuked Clarke, alleging that he was in effect saying that anything the government did which did not meet faculty approval would constitute interference in university autonomy. NDP and Liberal committee members said they were disgusted by what they considered childish, selfish display by the faculty to protect their own interests, unconcerned with the community and the rest of the university.

Faculty members divided

Several faculty members appeared either favoring parity or resenting the intransigence of their leaders. Physics professor Lynn Trainor, who after hours is chairman of the North York Board of Education, attacked Conacher's view of the university. St. Michael's College philosophy department chairman Larry Lynch defended parity. Other faculty and students asked the committee to accept White's 10-6-4-proposal.

But despite this support it was obvious most faculty activists strongly objected to the possibility of parity.

Former U of T president Claude Bissell who signed the CUG report in October 1969 calling for staff-student parity on most university governing bodies, changed his mind, and said that students have not demonstrated the responsibility to merit parity representation on the new governing body. Bissell has returned to teaching English. Another CUG commissioner, aerospace studies professor Bernard Etkin, took a similar position.

The U of T Board of Governors argued that if students had 6 seats to the faculty's 10 on the council, things would run smoothly, but if they each had 10 "it would be almost impossible to govern the university" during the "difficult" transitional period between old and new governing structures.

After about four days of this process, White told reporters that he was "reluctant to impose a solution" which would meet the overwhelming hostility of most faculty or students. If only he could find some middle ground, he agonized, although opposition legislators reminded him that the internal U of T community had been unable to resolve the question itself during the past three years.

Significant factors in the eventual outcome were editorials in the Toronto Star and Globe and Mail strongly opposed to parity. The Star said that parity would give students a veto over the university which the taxpayers are supporting. Students would have received 10 of 50 seats at the most if White's proposal had been accepted.

Lunch and parity

Take a stand, NDP leader Stephen Lewis demanded of White. Don't look to us for help, make up your own mind, Liberal education critic Tim Reid said.

No, replied White, we'll convene a committee of students, faculty and politicians to try once again, in private, to resolve this impasse. They met for lunch at the Westbury Hotel.

According to White, this ad hoc committee considered "all sorts of permutations and alternatives". But the meeting was essentially useless and merely gave the minister chance to weigh which unacceptable solution would go over best with the student leadership.

Emerging from the meeting, he told a reporter that although he personally was in favor of parity he did not believe "that the faculty, administration, board of governors, the community at large, or even the opposition parties" are prepared for equal staff-student representation in the highest councils of the U of T at this time.

Back in the committee on human resources White never introduced his 10-6-4 proposal as an amendment. Tim Reid proposed that students get parity gradually over five years but the Conservatives out-voted the opposition and rejected it. Curiously, Matthew Dymond wasn't there when the committee finally voted. Instead, many Conservative MPP's who hadn't attended many of the sittings showed up and voted against Reid's plan.

White had said the Conservatives would not be constrained by party discipline but when the vote happened the MPP's all split along opposition-government lines.

White's ultimate version introduced for final reading in the Legislature later in July, provided for 12 faculty and 8 students, adding two government and two alumni appointees for a 50-member council.

Both NDP and Liberal MPP's strongly condemned what they charged was White's backtracking amid faculty and press hostility.

Opposition members said that the Conservatives had been hypocritical in lowering the voting age one day (citing the "responsibility" of modern youth) and then saying on the next day that young people cannot have an equal voice in running their educational institution.

But the final vote taken in the early hours of July 23 again split on party lines, with the Conservative majority carrying the day easily. Ironically, Matthew Dymond was there during that division, casting his lot in with his party.

In a perhaps significant concession, White changed the date of the first review of the Act from five years after it comes into effect to two. Some optimistic student leaders hope by then public and faculty opinion will have changed enough to convince whoever is in White's shoes that parity's time has come.

Student leaders active around Legislative and cabinet circles in June and July emerged almost gleeful with their relationship with White. Their reaction almost seemed to reflect that they had won, when they had really lost.

Many critics of their approach charge student leaders have been hoodwinked by their proximity to power, whether it be at Simcoe Hall or Queen's Park, and tend to ignore the need to mobilize large numbers of students behind their positions for which they are negotiating.

In many ways John White knew U of T faculty are better organized than students and would make more trouble for him if their demands were not met, than the students would if they lost. In the short run he made a wise decision.

Before:

After:

faculty tories screw students

Hansard tells the truth:

The most revealing commentary on what happened the summer when the new University of Toronto Act was passed in the provincial legislature, is the debate that took place in the House itself. The following are direct excerpts from Hansard, Thursday, July 22, 1971. We begin just after the Minister of University Affairs has proposed that the structure of the top governing council include twelve staff and eight students.

Dramatis personae:

- John White, Minister of University Affairs
- Tim Reid, Liberal Education Critic
- Walter Pitman, NDP Education Critic
- Stephen Lewis, Leader of the NDP
- Pat Lawlor, NDP, Lakeshore
- William Davis — onlooker

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, may I say a word in connection with this amendment? I will say that we could spend eight or nine days debating the issue, as indeed we have already. I am not at all satisfied with the proportion of students and faculty which we, as a government, are now offering for the support of the House.

Hon. Mr. White: The Faculty, I think, were less adroit, less politic, less attractive perhaps; less expert in putting their case.

Mr. Pitman: And the students had less representation. Mr. Lewis: Sure, but they were more intransigent and they backed you down.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not blaming them either because my expectation is that some time from now the university community itself and the community at large will find it possible to make an alternation.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister gave in to blackmail. He gave in to threats. He gave in to threats to disrupt the university.

Hon. Mr. White: What threat did I give in to then? Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. T. Reid: The faculty members who threatened to disrupt the university.

Hon. Mr. White: The faculty members threatened to disrupt the university or rather some of them did, by implication, if they did not get their way.

The faculty members either asserted or implied that if parity were granted there would be a very strenuous move on the part of the faculty to —

Interruption by an hon. member.
Hon. Mr. White: — resist this change in turnover — Mr. Lewis: With the resulting disruption of the university.

Hon. Mr. White: — and the student leaders made it clear to us, without in any way, asserting or implying, that they would take the leadership in such a movement, that anything less than parity would be quite unacceptable —

Mr. Lewis: They gave the ministers a five-year period to introduce it and said that they would fight for it and they committed themselves to it.

Hon. Mr. White: — to students concerned about the issue. And so, in a manner of speaking, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Lewis: In a manner of speaking, the minister capitulated.

White a fraud

Hon. Mr. White: — we had similar threats from both sides, and if anybody thinks that I am going to knuckle under to either side, he is very much mistaken.

Mr. T. Reid: You are a fraud.

Mr. Lewis: Jim Conacher backed you into the wall.

An hon. member: Jim Conacher of all people!

Mr. Lewis: — with letters and threats.

Hon. Mr. White: You can question my judgement, but you cannot question my courage.

Mr. Lewis: What courage? On the contrary, I do not question your judgement, it is politically astute. It is your courage I question.

Hon. Mr. White: The editorials, which I am quick to say were unhelpful —

Mr. Lewis: Indeed.

Hon. Mr. White: — and ill-informed —

Mr. Lewis: How true.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Everyone will have a chance to make his contribution.

Hon. Mr. White: — nonetheless, they added to the impression which the majority of the members of the standing committee gained, that the community at large was not ready at this time to have students given an equal voice with faculty members.

Mr. Lewis: Come on. Come on. So the editorial policy of the Globe and Mail dictates your policy, does it?

Hon. Mr. White: There is another amendment which I will be offering to the Legislature a short time from now—namely, that the review be two years from the date of proclamation rather than five years. It seems to me that an opportunity will be given in the foreseeable future for students to make their case again to those who are members of the Legislature and those who are members of the legislative committee.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to divide my remarks, Mr. Chairman, into a number of categories. I think one must understand what has happened in that committee and what has happened at the University of Toronto, and I categorically deny the minister's interpretation that any student at the University of Toronto threatened in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make it clear that the attitude of many of the faculty members representing the association who made their views known to that committee, showed to me an attitude that distresses me immensely. Professor Conacher, arguing against the concept of students participating equally on that government council with teachers made a number of interesting statements and some of the more memorial ones were this —

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I did not say they threatened, I simply said they forecast difficulties if their point was not met. And the faculty association made a similar forecast.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, the minister made it quite clear that he is trying to make a so-called balanced argument, that some of the students are no worse or better than some of the faculty...

Professor Conacher said: "The university is one community but there are different roles for faculty and students." He said: "The difference is so obvious. Parity makes no sense because roles are so different," and then he said, "The faculty function is to conduct research and teaching." Then he mentioned that the students after all were only between the ages of 18 and 22.

The point of that comment, Mr. Chairman, is twofold: One, Professor Conacher, I think stated truly what he believes about the university; that his role within that university is first of all research and secondly teaching. And what the students have been telling us — particularly the graduate students — in their brief is that in their opinion the university must have, as its priority, the teaching function. People like John Deutsch at Queen's have been saying this for years, and Dr. Correy before him, that unless the universities return to their teaching function, the universities would not survive as learning institutions, let alone as a base for the intellectual pursuit of knowledge.

Professor Conacher also said, and I took extensive notes, Mr. Chairman, because these meetings were not recorded. He said "students are not prepared to participate in the functions of the university —

What I am trying to state, sir, is that many of the attitudes of the people to whom he finally caved in, are such that they are in effect against the teaching function of the university; that many of these people believe that their true role is research and that teaching comes second.

I simply remind the minister of that detailed brief from the graduates students in which they made it clear they were the ones who were primarily involved in the teaching of the university while the faculty members had opted out of it, and much more into research.

Professor Conacher made another statement; why he makes these statements I do not know, I believe he is sincere in making them. He says "the extremists want to use the university for social revolution, to overturn the university." He said "it is too dangerous to start with parity." If that is not a threat, sir, I do not know what is.

We heard from a Professor J. Rist, one of the outspoken advocates on the university campus for the minister's position here — an anti-party position — and Professor Rist set up his straw argument. He said that the students who will get elected to the governing council will try "to have the university become an ideologically committed university."

Ex-Tory bigwig John White fell before faculty blows.

Professor Rist, whom the minister listened to, made an argument strongly. He made an argument of the University of Toronto, discredit the activists at the time and he said that the students governing council will try to become an ideologically committed is the antithesis he felt of a

He implied, and this is what these remarks, he implied that that time with 10 teachers of totalling 50 persons, Mr. Chairman will have "a right to what is taught."

That is nonsense. Some of were making extreme argument could 10 students on a council "who teaches" and "what is taught" in what is taught, and the fact that the University of its original teaching function, teaches and what is taught.

Perhaps, sir, if the students seats, instead of 10 out of 50 validity in Professor Rist's Rist then went on and this is invidious in his remarks — parity to such things as "the standards," to the increase in and to "cheating by students."

To hear this coming from University of Toronto, a man in his own field, whatever it come before a committee of statements like that about the about the motivations of the movement at the University of the things that distressed the University Affairs is listening the students.

Mr. Chairman, if I speak what is that I know myself I can come with my subjective values. It to do, particularly if you are to see people who are trained in able to understand some arguments that have been presented found distressing. I think the coming much of their analysis.

I will leave the official association. I would like voice of the board of government there is the same anti-government attitude of the board of government may not have existed on the ago but it certainly exists. If governors entered the brief, Mr. Chairman, present the acting chairman, date

Again, in the type of argument implied — I call it implied students, vis-a-vis other membership constituency. In the brief, states:

W. B. Harris and pa

The members of the board are concerned that the proposal pertaining to That is the minister's proposal away from.

— will make it difficult properly administer that what well might be a transitional

Then it goes on to say in Some members of the consideration, that the the governing council should

That is the original bill —10-6 representation ratio on base that could cepted in good faith on endeavours were made

Mr. Chairman, the reason document close to being invited that if the minister had brought by, eventually parity, or perhaps that the board of governors is actually impossible properly to ty. What the board of government that, sir, was a similar phrase on that top governing council on all sides and honest endeavours it work.

the minister has obviously argument that I disagree with argument to discredit students to. He made an argument to the University of Toronto
students who will get elected to the try "to have the university committee university" which of a free university.

what I found so dangerous in that parity — 10 students at ers on the governing council, Chairman — will mean that ht to say who teaches and of these faculty members, ments, Mr. Chairman. How ouncil of 50 members, say it is taught"? They will par-and they will participate in y of Toronto must return to on, but they will not say who students had 25 out of the 50 of 50, there would be some s argument. But Professor is what I found particularly — to link teacher-student

"the lowering of academic in "Mickey Mouse courses," ents."

from an academic, at the an who no doubt is excellent that might be; for him to of the Legislature and make the capability of students, the leaders of the student y of Toronto, sir, was one of me. Yet the Minister of ng to this person and not to with some feeling on this it confuse my factual analysis

It is a very dangerous thing involved in politics. But to in the scientific method un-ne of the basic, logical presented by the students, I their emotions were overlytical ability.

ial voice of the faculty to turn to the official vornors, because, again
udent attitude in the at-ternors at this time. This that campus three years right now. The board of debate in a very short ented by W. B. Harris, del July 12.

ment made in the brief, he — discrediting of the members of the university
the board of governors

Prinners

board are gravely corporation of the ing to parity —
oposal which he backed

ally impossible to university during two- or three-year period.
one further sentence:
the board felt, after representation on et out in Bill 80 —

provide the compromised work if ac-
all sides and earnest
to make it work.

I found that particular iduous is the implication ht in his concept of par-parity or creeping parity elt it would become vir-administer the universiors did not attach on to that "parity could work"
if accepted in good faith ours were made to make

Why did not the board of governors also attach that proviso to their anti-parity statement when they attached it to their position of non-parity? Again the implication was that the faculty would make it virtually impossible to administer the university if the minister brought in his proposed amendment to achieve potential parity.

Some of the comments must be put on the record that were made in reply to the minister's opening remarks when the faculty members argued against the minister's grave proposal, called "10-6 plus 4." Professor Conacher said that the 10-6 was "the outside limit that faculty could contemplate." Professor Shiff said: "Parity will create confrontation." Professor Hanly said: The minister's proposed amendment will create two years of conflict." Professor Crispo said:
"You have asked us to go to the last mile."

I did not hear that from the students. What I heard from Bob Spencer was that the proposal to achieve parity in 1977, Mr. Chairman — not in 1971, but 1977 — would be something that he would go back and fight for. That was a position of not having parity now but eventually having it.

Mr. Chairman, a comment must be made, I think, about the relationship or the attitude of the administration toward the student leaders at the University of Toronto at the present time. Again, I suppose I am accepting what the minister is implying, that there are bad feelings on the University of Toronto campus and he has responded to that political fact. But I think it must be said those bad feelings are caused by a breakdown and not by the drive of students for parity which was alleged by so many people.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to a memo that the minister put out dated June 30, 1971, and it is a comment on student motions regarding The University of Toronto Act and says this:

Bill 80 in its form that went through first reading in this House proposes that the governing council of 42 include 10 elected by the teaching staff and six elected by the students.

He says this:

The 10 to six ratio is patterned on the 21 to 14 ratio adopted by the university-wide committee.

Well, sir, it was not, if my calculations are correct.
The 10 to 6 ratio is 60 per cent and the university-wide committee requested 66 per cent. So what the minister has done — and the use of the words "is patterned," is approximate I agree — but basically what he had done is to move to the university-wide committee's position now and he was never at it to start with, and I just state that very clearly.

All the minister has done now is to accept the university-wide committee's report, when he did not accept it in the first place at all.

Another comment, sir, is that it became clear to me, as I listened to the discussion by the faculty members and by the students and other interested people, that numerical parity on the top governing council of the University of Toronto in no way, under this bill, equals decision-making parity. I must say I became convinced more and more that if we were to have parity in decision-making on that top governing council, there would probably have to be more students and teachers on it.

I need not go into it in great detail, Mr. Chairman, but I think most sociologists could analyse the probable pattern of decision-making under the minister's Act and come to the conclusion that for a number of very good reasons the ability of the students to participate in that senior council will be much less effective than the ability of other people to do so, and one example will suffice in making this argument.

The fact that the students will be elected for one year only, whereas almost everybody else will be on that council for many many years — the original appointments are for three years and so forth — means that in the committees of the governing council the students are going to be at a severe disadvantage, as they will be in the governing council itself.

I submit to the minister that with eight students on that council elected for a year at a time, there will be a very high turnover of students on that council which will be a reflection of the democratic process on campus. Very few students will serve for two years and hardly any will ever be around for a three-year stint on that council as students. Whereas faculty members will be on that council for nine years because the minister has refused to — perhaps that word is too strong — the minister has not yet altered that section of the bill which reduces the length of time a member may serve concurrently from nine years down to six.
He made a commitment to look into that. I do not think he made a commitment to do it.

A gaggle of professors

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I rise far more in anger than in sorrow on this occasion. Having sat on dozens of committees of this House and heard innumerable delegations I have never experienced a group of men so intransigent, so little willing to bargain. A little rump of professors who came before us, prating in irate gaggle —

Mr. Lewis: A gaggle of professors

Mr. Lawlor: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: A rump of professors? Is that a new collective noun?

Mr. Lawlor: One might prefer the geese you know. It has been pointed out in the course of the debate that it was not simply a question of hearing, as we normally do in courtesy and quietude, the representations made by people from out there, but we were subjected to a lecturing session. We were subjected to being talked down to. The general air was one of contempt as I understood it. In any case they were quite clear in their representations — and let me say this is not all of them, thank heavens — that we were not competent, that we were not in this legislative elected body competent to make a judgement with respect to the internal affairs of the university.

An hon. member: He is right.

And that was the very curve of the argument. You see, it was aristocratic. It was paternalistic. It was looking down their nose — not just at the students but at the whole world, including the representatives of the Legislature of Ontario.

We were to be duncel to understand. We would never possibly grasp the esoteric meanderings of these professors.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That just proves that they did not know the hon. member very well.

Mr. Lawlor: Let me say, let me say, that they were not always professors, you know, and I want to mention one or two.

An old professor of mine, a man by the name of Larry Lynch, stood up for the students. He was one of the prime movers throughout the CUG report; a most sane and balanced individual. You would repose intrinsic faith in Lynch, as many people do. I said to myself, when I first saw him sitting in the audience:
"Whatever Lynch comes out for is probably right." He came out, and what did the other professors say? At the back of their hands, I heard one of them say: "He is soft on the students."

Lynch — about the greatest most balanced brain they have around the university. He should be listened to and not a paranoiac buch of men who are fearful of their own shadow, who do not live in the contemporary world, they live in their subjects. I suppose they all must be eighth century historians because that was the impression I got.

They do believe, and it came through very well, that they are a superior race of men; that we mere mortals ought to bow our heads and grovel before them. They do not seem to realize emergent to the modern world that they are no longer that kind of individual with prestige. What they must realize is that they are now civil servants like the rest of us and they are on the payroll. They are no longer to be coddled and cozened and confined as they were in the past.

Mr. T. Reid: They do not like to be called employees.

Mr. Lawlor: — as though the demand for representation and equality of position were a new thing in the world. Let me tell the House, and I mentioned it in committee, that in the University of Paris around the eleventh and twelfth centuries and in the University of Bologna the professors were hired by the students and fired by the students and they were given merit marks and they were put in a corner like the bad student to weep and suck their thumbs if he need.

An hon. member: They may have wept but they did not suck their thumbs.

Mr. Lawlor: By large, these men will go into a classroom any morning of the week and will tell their children, tell the students, about the entrepreneurs in our society, about people who have lived off a certain portion, by monopolistic practices or otherwise, of the wealth of the community and will point out the condition of people who are disenfranchised or, in sociology classes, describe the position of the large number of the poor. They will be incensed by this. They will point their finger and blame certain individuals as not being aware enough of it, or not being willing to make any alterations in it.

But when it came to their own backyard, when it came home, is it not amazing how each one of us capitalists simply because it happens to require a sacrifice of us perhaps or, at least, a certain loss of our prestige? It seems to me, in the last analysis, that the whole position of the recalcitrant professors, as I will call them — I cannot believe they represent the university community. If they do, then there is apes moi le delage.

Mr. Lawlor: And so if some of these professors wish to pack up their tents off the Observatory Hill over there and take another spot elsewhere, I do not think there will be any great loss, either with respect to the logic or the acumen, or the intelligence or the load of wisdom that they are supposed to have.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: If their demonstration before that committee displayed what they are capable of teaching their students, then Lord help the kids.

Small unions can learn from Artistic experience

By BOB BETTSON

Kent Rowley, president of the Canadian Textile and Chemical Union said yesterday there should be a public inquiry into the bitter three month Artistic Woodwork strike.

He called this especially necessary because of the new revelations of an "agent provocateur," Ron Masut, hired by management to spy on the unions.

Masut was an employee of the Wackenhut Security company, a multi-national detective agency. He was registered by the Ontario Provincial Police from July 3 to November 30 of last year.

Rowley charged Masut had been an active picket and one of the most hostile and aggressive to the police.

Former CCF MPP Bill Temple, 76, who was arrested at the Artistic, said this was a new element in strikebreaking, adding he was in favor of legislation to prevent it.

Rowley said the Artistic strike had not been a total victory for the union but a marginal victory. He admitted the union had made concessions including an open shop.

Rowley reiterated demands for the dropping of all charges for the 108 arrested and the reduction of penalties, saying the courts were handing out tough sentences even when police evidence was contradicted by eyewitnesses and films.

He protested the treatment given Masut. Six charges were dropped against him. In a letter to Attorney General Dalton Bailes, he said Sarel Van Zyl, the Artistic manager, should be charged for paying Masut to commit illegal acts.

Artistic has lessons

The three month strike is a significant one for all small unions to learn lessons from. Not only were there 108 arrests resulting from picket line violence but the Metro Toronto police showed they were clearly on the side of the company.

Artistic Woodwork is a small factory in the west end of Toronto, specializing in making picture frames. It employs about 120 workers, mainly immigrants, in what might be called a modern day "sweat shop."

The problems of the CTCU, a small independent Canadian union, are a microcosm of the problems the Canadian labor movement will face in organizing small factories owned by people who regard super profits as their right and unions as a four letter word.

The important issue at Artistic was not wages, though the 65 cent an hour increase the union agreed to accept a raise to a little more than $3.00 an hour, was by no means adequate. The main issue was the right to free collective bargaining and a fight against an arbitrary management rights clause.

This clause would have given management the right to "make, enforce or alter, from time to time rules to be observed by the employees." The company also refused to recognize seniority as a basis for layoffs.

Strike organizer Danny Drache stated the company wants "a whip hand." He called their demands "vicious" and punitive. U of T economics professor Mel Watkins, a frequent picket, said the workers were fighting for basic human dignity. He called Artistic a model of how immigrant workers are exploited in a small factories all over Toronto.

The fact that the Artistic strike was a battle for basic dignity and the right to organize was often forgotten by the media who publicized the strike only in terms of the picket line violence, neglecting the basic strike issues.

The disposal of the court cases arising from Artistic is still going on. Of 90 people tried so far, over 40 have been fined up to $400 despite contradictions with police testimony, the testimony of eyewitnesses and police and television video tapes, which were not admitted as evidence.

Company agents gets off

In many cases the judges have decided to accept the word of the police over the accused, usually students or workers, and have convicted people mainly for obstructing and assaulting police. However, the kid glove treatment has been given to security guard Ron Masut who was hired by Artistic to infiltrate the union.

In what has been described as a grave threat to the collective bargaining system, Masut was one of leaders of anti-police sentiment on the picket lines. He was arrested six times and at one time was a union martyr, refusing to abide by bail conditions prohibiting him from going near the plant. Masut has had four charges dropped. The police claim the officer is no longer with the force, therefore he couldn't testify. However, the same former officer testified later at another Artistic trial.

Many other lessons can be drawn from the long Artistic struggle. The most obvious is that the police act with the company as upholders of the state and private property as well as the right to break strikes. According to law picketers are allowed to converse with strikebreakers, but the Artistic scabs were wisked in by company drivers at speeds of up to thirty mph inside cars with all the windows rolled up.

There could be much written about the many episodes of police violence on the picket lines but an account of one crucial day on the line is enough to tell the story.

The scene was ripe with the potential for violence as about 100 police prepared to escort the scabs into the Densley Avenue Artistic plants on November 14 last year. There were over 300 picketers gathered and the mood was ugly.

Convoy of scabs

The scabs appeared in a convoy of eight cars and tried to enter the plant. The picketers formed a human wall and the police tried to break it up as the crowd surged on to the street. Police charged the picket line swinging and pushing people away. One picket was grabbed by two police and thrown against a garage door, then had his head repeatedly banged by police against the door as he was being kicked.

Another was pummeled until he was unconscious and the police refused to call an ambulance until they had finished carting off the picketers "for assaulting them." This scene was witnessed by a U of T professor who described the officers as "sneering and laughing" during the bloodbath. Even 76-year-old Temple was arrested for allegedly assaulting police. He was later acquitted and said he could hardly be guilty of assaulting a 200 lb. policeman when he could hardly handle his 13 year old granddaughter.

Video tapes and pictures as well as eyewitness accounts by Toronto aldermen brought city council into the fray as they criticized the police in severe terms. But the police commission was not listening. It is not citizen-controlled.

Aside from the police violence an interesting aspect of the strike is how the province's labor legislation was powerless to help the workers in their struggle.

The union made several attempts to charge the company with "bargaining in bad faith" before the Labor Relations Board of Ontario. These suits were lost as the courts refused to see the company's actions in refusing to renegotiate the

...continued
on page 13

An Important FRENCH COURSE UNION MEETING

Monday, March 18
3 p.m. UC 138

Topics:

1. staffing representation
2. plans for next year's union
3. course evaluations

It is IMPERATIVE all members attend.
New members most welcome.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
CLAUDE BISSELL, PROFESSORSHIP
OF CANADIAN-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

RICHARD E. CAVES
A LECTURE AND TWO SEMINARS ON -
"COMPETITION IN THE OPEN ECONOMY"

COMPETITION IN THE OPEN ECONOMY:
A GENERAL VIEW

Thursday, March 14, at 8:00 p.m.
Cody Hall, Faculty of Nursing,
50 St. George Street

SEMINARS: Competition and Policy in Postwar Japan
Market Structure and Public Policy in Canada

Tuesday, March 19, at 4:10 p.m.
Thursday, March 21, at 4:10 p.m.
Upper Library, Massey College

Members of the University and Public are cordially invited

SWAYAMBHUNATH STORE

GALLERY
ASTROLOGY CLASSES

469 Church Street

"THE MOST UNUSUAL AND PROVOCATIVE WORK OF SCIENCE-FICTION."

ADULT —Pal Collins, WCBS-TV

FANTASTICAL PLANET

Starts FRIDAY

March 15 cont. from 5:00
March 16 to 24 cont. from 1:30

cinecity
TORONTO 416-593-1334

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LITERARY and ATHLETIC SOCIETY ELECTIONS

Nominations now open for the following positions:

President	6 Second Year Reps
Vice President	6 Third Year Reps
Treasurer	3 Fourth Year Reps
Literary Director
Men's Athletic Director	5 S.A.C. Reps
Women's Athletic Direc.

Any University College student is eligible to run. Nomination forms available at LIT office in Junior Common Room of University College.

Nominations close Monday March 18 at 5:00 p.m.

ELECTIONS WILL BE HELD
WED. MARCH 27

XEROX
EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY
COPIES

7¢ EACH 5¢ EACH 2¢ EACH

1st thru 5th copies per original 6th thru 10th copies per original 11th and additional copies of the same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes. Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT (to students on student work) 20%
• FREE collating

ALSO AVAILABLE

• CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
• REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36"

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-5:00 PM

NOTE
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

...continued from page 12

management rights' clause as "bargaining in bad faith."

Contract concessions

Eventually however, after all the violence, the strike was settled. But it only came after the violence was intensified and the province intervened.

The mediation was not completely successful initially and the Davis government's labor minister Fern Guindon had egg of his face when, after declaring the strike was settled on November 23 last year the union announced there was no agreement and the strike was continuing.

Finally an agreement was concluded with both sides retreating somewhat. Management gave in and agreed to allow the union the right to grievances on the dismissal of eight workers arrested on the picket lines, pending disposal of the cases.

The union conceded an open shop. The management rights clause was stricken from the contract.

But there was no victorious feeling for the union. After a three month strike many of the workers had gone into other jobs. The union was almost broke and there were almost 110 cases waiting for the courts to dispose of.

Not only that but the workers who remained out had had to go through economic deprivation to gain small concessions which any reasonable employer would have agreed to months earlier. A defense committee was formed but later disbanded because of political disagreements between the union and many of those arrested who were not workers.

Only nine of the arrested were workers. The labor movement had not given the hoped for support. A picket line of 1,000 could have stopped the scabs but the Ontario Federation of Labour did not intervene except on an individual local basis, and remained cool to the CTCU, a member of the militant Canadian Council of Unions led by maverick unionist Kent Rowley. They recently led a steel plant in British Columbia out of the powerful United Steelworkers of America.

US unions ignore poor

This points out the contradictions involved in business unionism.

The international unions, run on American lines, are seemingly incapable of waging militant struggles or providing support for small unions. They seemingly are not interested in organizing the working poor and seem content to consolidate their strength in large manufacturing plants.

The leadership of the OFL was so hostile to the CCU they failed to provide support. The exceptions were Canadian Union of Public Employees, some locals and the renegade Douglas workers from the United Autoworkers. The Douglas executive was suspended by the company for involvement in the strike at Artistic.

Even during the OFL convention, the OFL was unresponsive although some of the more militant delegates went up to the picket line daily during the Toronto convention in November.

Another important element of the Artistic strike is how the persistence of a small group of supporters, mainly Wafflers, radical trade unionists and students, was able to sustain the union and help with picketing until the struggle got public attention. Otherwise the strike might have been broken.

The Artistic Woodwork management was clearly out to break the union. In spite of their protestations, they didn't want a settlement and only caved in after the pressure of public attention and the police violence at the picket line.

Significantly, public pressure seems to be mounting for a public inquiry into the dispute, fuelled by the large amount of conflicting testimony about the role of the police as well as the new revelations of Masut's role as a management provocateur.

Metro police chief Harold Adamson recently told a York university audience he would not object to a probe, a significant concession from his previous statements.

Undoubtedly the most important lesson of Artistic is the tight co-operation of police, the government and management to prevent the picket line from stopping strikebreaking. This points out the need for a massive campaign by unions and sympathizers to outlaw strikebreaking and provide protection of the jobs of workers who are arrested in picket line violence.

There is also a need for workers to be protected from arbitrary management rights clauses such as the one the Artistic management wanted. Labor legislation in Ontario is clearly inadequate to protect the workers' democratic rights to organize trade unions and carry on activities in support of their demands.

The police worked hand in glove with management and this points out the need for citizen control of the police.

The Metro Toronto police not only arrested many picketers for little reason and beat up others, they planned with management when the scabs would come in in the morning and signalled the drivers when to come.

They also used a boom mike and photographers when Artistic supporters picketed outside police headquarters as well as during the strike. One plain clothes man was observed during the police headquarters demonstration leaving through a book of pictures trying to identify who was there.

Small unions' problems

For small unions, winning a strike is almost as difficult as pulling teeth. They are hampered by poor finances, low pay already so strikers won't be able to live, little public interest, big union apathy and a lack of ability to apply massive pressure.

The Artistic management was able to displace exploited immigrant workers with non-unionized exploited immigrant workers. They promised them help with immigration. They continued to have about 40 employees who failed to join the union because they were friends of the owner.

The strike would have failed and the union would have been broken without the public attention that surrounded the picket line. Only by waging militant and well publicized and supported actions can small unions hope to win their struggles. The role of the strike supporters was crucial and this should be an effective tactic for future disputes. This way Artistic is the same as Dare and Texpack strikes where support from outside was a crucial.

Most support came from independent leftists, students, community groups and organized left groups, the Waffle being most prominent. The element of media publicity was critical in helping the Artistic strike. Most reports were fair and accurate, thus favoring the union. Surprisingly the reactionary editorial stance of the big three Toronto dailies did not color their news coverage. All three editorially supported the police and decried the role of the strike supporters.

But in the end a partial victory was won. Unfortunately the courts have wreaked hardship on many defendants convicted, sentencing them to heavy fines. The police have escaped scot free so far. The international unions have showed no realization of their negative role in the strike.

Immigrant workers are still for the most part unorganized and winning one small strike is only the beginning of a long and arduous organizing effort. But if the Artistic dispute had been lost it would have been a major setback for the CCU and the trade union movement in general, proving they were completely powerless in the face of united opposition of the police, the state and management. This did not happen. And hopefully there will be more militant struggles in the future raising the many issues Artistic Woodwork dramatized so well.

THE VARSITY The Undergraduate Newspaper Established 1880

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

The Varsity Board of Directors invites application for the position of the Board to be appointed by the fourteen incumbent Directors, for a two year term beginning July 1, 1974.

The Board represents the various estates in the university community and is responsible for the editorial integrity and the financial and business management of The Varsity.

Written applications should be addressed to Tony Usher, Chairman, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St., Toronto M5S 2E8. Applicants will be interviewed and a selection made at the Board's annual meeting on March 20.

Deadline for applications is 5 p.m., Friday, March 15, 1974.

SINBAD BATTLES THE CREATURES OF LEGEND!

in the miracle of Dynarama

The One-Eyed Centaur!

The Winged Griffin!

The Bronze Goddess!

The Mark Of All Evil!

The Flying Homunculus!

The Golden Voyage of Sinbad!

STARTS FRIDAY MARCH 15

FAIRLAWN

ELANE

ALBION 1

YONGE AT FAIRFAX - 431-2311

YONGE AT KENNEDY RD - 461-1111

ALBION VALLEY AT MIDLAND - 247-0667

SHERIDAN 2

DANFORTH

LAKESHORE

FINCH MILLS RD., N. OF, M. 30-422-6232

AT FARM - 461-1101

QUEEN NEAR TORONTO - 233-4011

ODEON - WESTON

RICHMOND HILL

WESTON RD. AT LAWRENCE - 224-1821

ODEON - 684-6221

DUFFERIN DRIVE-IN

BAY RIDGES DRIVE-IN

5 OF HWY 7 - 669-1605

HWY 21 OF LIVERPOOL - 282-3559

JEWISH STUDIES COURSE UNION is holding a very important meeting to discuss its future

at U of T.

Date: Thursday
March 14th, 1974
Time: 4:00 P. M.
Place: Sid Smith, Room 2129

Maritime Engineering

Today at 12:00 and 2:00 there will be a briefing for Engineers interested in a career in Maritime Engineering in the Canadian Forces. An engineering career in the Forces is a rewarding experience financially. In addition the many other benefits such as travel, medical benefits, a good career and a worthwhile job. See us at Room 220 in the Galbraith Building TODAY.

THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SAC Presents on Friday, March 15th

WINNER OF 2
ACADEMY AWARDS!

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR
- JOHN MILLS
BEST CINEMATOGRAPHY

★★★★★ A MASTERPIECE!
A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE!
Wanda Hale, New York Daily Mirror

David Lean's
Film of

Ryan's Daughter

ROBERT MITCHELL - TREVOR HOWARD
CHRISTOPHER JONES
JOHN MILLS - LEO MCKERN - SARAH MILES
MICRODOX AND SUPER PANASONIC NEGAS

at 7:00 & 10:00

Only 95¢

Med. Sci. Auditorium

French students occupy Mac dean's office

HAMILTON (CUP) — McMaster French students, in a move to back up their demands for parity on faculty committees, occupied the offices of Dean of Humanities Alwyn Berland on Monday.

The sit-in followed marches, demonstrations, picketing and boycotts of classes by the French Students Union (FSU). The union has the support of the sociology students, the McMaster Students Union, the Union of Graduate Students and the active participation of several student representatives on the university Senate.

Some French classes have been shut down completely and others forced to move, with what students showed up, to other rooms. At the beginning of the strike, French students held a meeting in a lecture hall forcing the professor and the 12 students who wanted the class to move to another area. There are 155 students registered in that class.

Dean Berland, who has had some experience with sit-ins in Saskatchewan, reacted to the entry into his offices by talking to the occupiers but repeatedly said they should have contacted him before taking action. He said they should call off the occupation until a mediator has made recommendations.

The 20 to 30 students in the office replied they had several times tried to contact him with no results. They also expressed their complete willingness to co-operate with the mediator but only as another facet of their campaign. They are not willing to agree to any delaying tactics on the part of the administration nor are they ready to put sole trust in a mediator whose complete recommendations would not be ready before the end of term.

In past years students have run into difficulties creating some kind of continuity of action from year to year, and consequently are not willing to call off or postpone their strike.

The students are fighting for parity at departmental meetings and on committees as a method of having a voice in hiring and firing of professors, course content, textbooks and teacher evaluation.

Students have indicated they are ready to stay in Berland's office indefinitely. One spokesman said, "If we don't get any results here we might just move over to the president's office."

The present occupation reflects discontent in the French department that has been brewing for the last ten years. Students are now boycotting classes, picketing and talking to other students as well as demonstrating in various areas of the campus including the main cafeterias, the French offices and the faculty club.

Some faculty members have called off classes in support of the students' demands while others have attempted to keep on teaching despite the chanting, clapping and shouting of the picketers.

The situation is not likely to be resolved very soon.

At a faculty meeting on March 10, the night before the strike began, a motion for student parity was put forward. One faculty member moved to table it however, and following a tied vote of nine-nine, the chairman cast the deciding vote and tabled the issue.

Only two of the votes belonged to students and, in the past faculty members have boycotted meetings to prevent a quorum being met and thus blocking student demands.

Following the inaction of the department, the FSU went on strike.

The FSU is also demanding contracts leading to at least the possibility of tenure for three Francophone professors whom the students feel to be more qualified than some of the tenured Anglophones.

At present there are no tenured Francophones in the McMaster French department. The students put part of the blame for the lack of French spoken in classes on this.

They are also carrying on a campaign to publicize the state of affairs in the department to high school students who may be taking French at university. The students hope to pressure the department to give them parity and "an education that is at least worth something" or face dwindling enrollment in the future.

The move by the student assembly to support the French students reflects the support the student body showed for the demands for parity. This support was evident in a referendum carried out last month when over 80 per cent of the students voted in favor of student parity on the senate, the board of governors and at the departmental level.

The university administrations has appointed Dr. C. B. Mueller, professor of surgery, to act as mediator. A meeting, between Mueller and three FSU student representatives was scheduled for March 12.

The FSU has so far collected $50 in donations for printing information leaflets and will appear before the student assembly on March 12 to ask for financial help from them.

McMaster sociology students have taken an active part in the occupation and work alongside French students on committees. The Sociology Student Union is meeting March 13 to plan strategy for their campaign to obtain parity on departmental committees.

They now have four representatives at departmental meetings but fear that the selection of a new sociology department head will be referred to a faculty committee where there is no student representation thus denying students any voice in the selection procedure.

McMaster administrators are so far giving occupiers the kid glove treatment aside from having the telephone in the office disconnected.

Les Prince, Dean of Students visited the office on Monday along with the head of the security police on campus and asked students if they needed anything and if they wanted the outside doors locked for the night.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE OF HART HOUSE requests the pleasure of your company
at

EQUINOX

TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1974
for a

SPECTACULAR SPRING EVENING

Comprising of an

Assortment of happenings, demonstrations, exhibitions and athletics (the list is endless); not to mention refreshments and entertainment.

Hart House Clubs (Archery to Yoga) and Committees (Art to Squash) are hard at work planning their programmes. Specifics are promised for next issue.

ADMISSION FREE

RESERVE TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 6:00 p.m. to after midnight for a visit to HART HOUSE

Looking for Office Work?

Temporary and Permanent

Call

The Personnel Centre

Ask For

Edith Geddes or Lynne Heaman

924-6274

PUBLIC AFFAIRS FORUM

LEAD POLLUTION INJUNCTIONS AND FREEDOM OF SPEECH

with

• GARY PERLY

Defendent in Canada Metal Injunction Case

• WALTER FOX

Lawyer

MEETING PLACE, SCARBOROUGH COLLEGE

Thursday March 14, noon

Sponsored by the Scarborough College
Students Council

Complete Educational Research Service

Temppapers Unlimited
of Toronto

752A Yonge Street
Toronto 5, Ontario
(416) 984-7328

Hours: 10:30 - 5:00 (Mon-Fri.)
10:30 - 4:00 (Sat.)

Interesting diamonds

Beautiful Ceylon gem, blue sapphire, and two diamonds engagement ring
14K white gold $325.00
Latest styling cluster marquise Burma gem blue sapphire and eight diamonds 14K white gold $225.00
An expert place to buy diamonds, to have a ring remodelled, or custom made to your personal specifications

D. E. (Jim) Mountacals -
Certified Diamond Appraiser

Interesting Jewellery
685 Yonge Street South of Bloor.
923-5744

THEATRE MICKITIES

PRESENTS:

4 ONE ACT PLAYS

Words on the Window Pane
by W. B. Yeats

The Stronger
by A. Strindberg

Traps
by James Stewart

The Sandbox
by E. Albee

In Upper Brennan Auditorium:

Saturday March 16-8:30 PM
Sunday March 17-8:30 PM
Monday March 18-3:00 PM

ADMISSION FREE

ST. PATRICK'S DAY PUB

Friday March 15 in Brennan Hall

Time 3:00 PM - 1:00 AM

(10 Whole hours)

Live Band

Admission: SMC Students — Others —

$0.25
$0.50

Decisions awaited in Canada Metals cases

The censorship battle by two lead smelting firms against two of Canada's media giants, the Globe and Mail and the CBC, hangs in limbo this week as Mr. Justice Dennis O'Leary considers his decision on two court actions.

The two court actions are at the core of a series of court moves by Canada Metals Co. Ltd. and Toronto Refiners and Smelters to shut off criticism and investigation into what the companies claim are unfounded allegations of lead pollution.

Awaiting O'Leary's decision is a motion by Canada Metals and Toronto Refiners to jail five CBC and Globe employees for contempt of court plus an appeal against the quashing of the January 29 injunction against the CBC, which forms the core of the censorship hearing.

The lead companies allege the five violated the injunction and should be jailed while the media folk have raised the banners of free speech in defence.

Injunction stops criticism

The now-famous injunction forbade the CBC from broadcasting certain criticism of the lead companies. That injunction's elimination is now being appealed and O'Leary is to decide whether the appeal may proceed.

Until that decision, another interim injunction remains in effect prohibiting the critical material from being published or broadcast.

These court actions alone are almost without precedent, being in effect prior restraint.

However, the lead companies have not stopped there. Treading into more sacred news media turf, they are also asking for the holiest of holiest from six reporters: their notes and files.

The lead companies want four Toronto Sun and two Globe reporters to cough up all out of the newspapers' files about what they know about the lead pollution situation.

The courts must now decide that issue.

In recent years in the United States, some of the largest freedom of the press court battles have been waged around the privacy of a reporter's notes and files.

While some reporters chuckle privately knowing their scrawl is incomprehensible to all but themselves, as an institution the press fights these attempts at virtually all costs because of the issue of independence of the press from outside interference.

$14 Million libel suit

A court case which has already started officially but will not likely get into gear for weeks if not months is the $14 million libel suit launched by the firms against the Globe and CBC stemming from the same circumstances as the contempt proceedings.

While tackling the CBC and Toronto's two morning dailies might seem enough to keep an entire law firm busy for months, the lead companies have not failed to neglect other critics who have surfaced.

Toronto activist Gary Perly had a motion for committal to jail for contempt dismissed after O'Leary ruled there was no proof in the court room Perly was responsible for a Canadian Liberation Movement leaflet criticizing Canada Metals.

While Perly won the contempt battle he stands to take a big loss financially as the court ruled Perly must pay court costs which may total up to $5,000.

Another organization which has been centre-stage at times during the last six months of Canada Metals' public scrutiny is the city of Toronto board of health.

Board checks on lead

The board reacted to strong and often vitriolic public criticism over its handling of the Canada Metals affair and began to delve deeply into lead readings in the blood of residents near the east-end lead plant.

For some board efforts, Canada Metals and Toronto Refiners have launched a court action against the board hoping to get a court order prohibiting the board from dealing with any matters pertaining to the companies as long as three board members continue sitting.

Ward II alderman and board chairman Anne Johnston, Ward 6 alderman Dan Heap and Sick Children's Hospital lead specialist Dr. David Parkinson are the target of this court action.

The lead firms have until April 1 to provide the court either an affidavit or evidence supporting their move to shut the board out of the lead action.

While the court actions by the lead firms against its critics have captured headlines for the past few weeks, the original issue seems all but forgotten: possible lead pollution in children and other area residents.

About 1,500 people near the Canada Metals plant at 721 Eastern Ave. have been tested for lead levels in their blood. A dozen have had to go to hospital for further tests or treatment.

Early in January, 11 workers in the plant were found to have lead levels in their blood in excess of 80 micrograms per 100 millilitres of blood and the plant briefly cut back its operations.

Medical experts consider any reading more than 50 requires treatment.

Canada Metals has stated that such facts do not prove their firm is a polluter.

BE INVOLVED

Work for Office Overload
When you need us,
We need you

office overload
AORATE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION

151 BLOOR ST. W. 324-8844
401-4280 ISLINGTON BLOOR 239-1111
401-1420 KEELE-FINCH 630-5297
401-1420 LONG BRANCH 351-3551
DANVILLE 845-8683
491-2880 WESTON/HESDALE 268-8409
761-6135 350 BAY ST. W. (LEGAL) 364-9524

BRAMPTON COARBRAVE SCARBOROUGH DON MILLS WILLOWDALE DOWNSVIEW

LUNCHEON NEWS

From under $1.00

Unique quick self-service snack bar hot and cold specialties

Now Appearing

BRASS TAX

A favorite drop in place for celebrity visitors. The Nick's the place to rub shoulders with the likes of KRIS KRISTOFFERSON, RITA COOLIDGE, GORDON LIGHTFOOT, JAN AND SYLVIA, FRANK ZAPPA, the great BOB DYLAN and more.

Always exciting entertainment!

- Supper
- Club
- Dance
- Floor
- in Toronto
- No Cover Charge

NICKELODEON

279 Yonge at Dundas Square

The CRASH

Homecoming with a tropical flavour. Authentic Caribbean and Canadian dishes.

11:30 — 2:30 businessmen's luncheon — full course meal for $1.95. Dinners till midnight.

405 Bloor St. E.
(at Sherbourne) 961-5156

SAC PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS TODAY & TOMORROW

9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The following tickets have been nominated:

Peter Baumann
D. William Paterson
Laura Conn

J.R. Tennyson
921-2827

Michel Chamberland
Carol Bonhoff
James Maclean

Robert Deans
621-1918

Seymour Kanowitch
Tim Buckley
Fred Stewart

Gord Barnes
921-2698

President
Vice-President
Vice-President

Campaign Manager

Students will also be asked to vote on the following referendum question:

Do you support The University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council's continued membership in the Ontario Federation of Students at a student activity fee increase of $1.50?

POLL LOCATIONS Include:

Engineering Architecture
Dentistry
Erindale College
Food Sciences
Forestry
Innis
Law Medicine

Music
New College
Nursing Education
Pharmacy
Physical & Health Education
Physical & Occupational Therapy
St. Michael's College
Scarborough College

Trinity College
University College
Victoria College
Robarts Library
Sigmund Samuel Library
Sid Smith Hall
Ramsay Wright
Lash Millar
McLennon Physics

Prof compares revolutions in Cuba and Mexico

The study of popular revolutions in Cuba and Mexico in the 1930's indicates movements of the national bourgeoisie can be "genuinely revolutionary," a U of T history professor said Monday.

Erindale history professor David Raby was speaking to the Latin American studies committee of the international studies program on "Cuba and Mexico two revolutions compared."

In Mexico, president Lazaro Cardenas came to power after the popular revolutions of the 1920's appeared over.

Timid gestures toward land reform and national ownership had resulted in a "political stalemate", with no one group the obvious choice to rule the country.

His accession in 1934 was at the whim of the ruling "mafia," and it therefore came as a surprise when he proposed popular reforms, and began to carry out several of his promises, in a term which lasted until 1940.

Cardenas, said Raby, was seen as a "national hero", and there was a wide belief Mexico was on the road to socialism.

In Cuba, for a brief period in 1933, a group composed mainly of students was able to run the country for four months, in which radical reforms were carried out.

Between 1902 and 1920, a time of heavy economic expansion due to the boom in the sugar industry, Cuba was nothing but a "neo-colony" of the US, said Raby.

During the Twenties, Cuba saw a "timid revival of nationalism," in which the national dictator remained a pawn in the hands of US banks.

During the early 1930's, in which Cuba was hit worse by the Depression than any other country, said Raby, US diplomats were able to negotiate a government more to their liking.

However, underground movements of the middle class were forming, and along with the help of a general strike in Havana, a coalition of junior officers and students was able to overthrow the US-backed regime.

The students then turned around and ordered the junior officers to leave, which they meekly did.

However, in early 1934, the student government was forced out of power by Fulgencio Batista, who was later to become dictator.

The 1933 revolution was a true "precursor" of Castro's 1959 revolution, said Raby.

Raby concluded "In a dependent country, where the old order has been undermined—and before the advent of industrialization—the weakness of national bourgeois power is assumed by a providential leader."

Into this political vacuum can move popular movements, most likely led by petty bourgeois elements and intellectuals.

Once these movements come to power, they can either move to the left, with working class support, or move to the path of retrenchment and reaction with pressure from capitalist sectors.

Only in 1959, under Castro, was the movement to become truly left wing, said Raby.

What is significant, he said, is the "extreme flexibility" of these movements, which makes it hard to predict what course they will take, and thus presents a "genuinely revolutionary situation."

Governments such as those of Cardenas in Mexico "could have gone either way," said Raby.

Nationalist movements, such as those in Cuba and Mexico in the 1930's "can in fact transcend the classic dilemma between bourgeois and proletarian politics."

Raby criticized the application of "sterile formulas" to the study of revolutions on the part of those who assume nationalist movements can not be revolutionary.

Erindale history prof David Raby speaking on Latin America.

Centre for the Study of Drama
HART HOUSE THEATRE

Merrill Denison's

MARSH HAY

Thur. March 21 to Sat. March 30 at 8:30
Box Office now open 10:00 to 6:00
928-8669

REAL YOGA MEDITATION!

Call Yoga Forum
of Canada
12 MacPherson Ave.

923-4439

$10 DISCOUNT TO STUDENTS

unclassified

TARRAGON THEATRE PRESENTS...
BLITZKRIEG by Brian Wade about Eva & Hitler or Hitler and Eva - Wed.-Sun. 8:45 p.m. Sun. Matinee 2:45 at Poor Alex Theatre, Brunswick and Bloor, 920-8373 until Mar 16

ENGLISH SPECIALIST familiar with current academic requirements is needed for the preparation of authoritative review material, related critical analysis and precise commentaries. Please respond outlining qualifications and previous writing experience, if any, to: Jeffrey Cole, P.O. Box 585, King City, Ont.

WANTED: STUDENT TO BE "AT HOME"
3:30 - 5:30 p.m. 3-4 days/week near campus to supply snacks and stability for after-school return of 2 busy youngsters (aged 6 and 9). Pleasant surroundings for reading and studying. Occasional meal included if willing to stay through 1 or 2 evenings $1.00/hr. Call Lydia Burton, 920-0797 evenings

WAITRESSES OR WAITERS WANTED
fully licensed dining lounge — must have tidy appearance. Part time only (12:00 noon to 2:30 p.m. or 6:00 to 10:00 p.m.) Monday to Friday. Call 466-2023 for appointment.

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING?
Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674
EXAMINERS WANTED - Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T" Toronto M6B 4A3

QUEBEC SKI TOUR March 17-22 $79 Five days of skiing at Mt. St. Anne. All transportation and excellent accommodation included. For information write Canadian Ski Tours, 25 Taylorwood Dr., Irlington or phone Gord Allan 247-2339

LOST: WOMAN'S GLASSES in turquoise case, early Feb. on campus. Reward Phone 961-2975

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Professor's wife. IBM electric with carbon ribbon. Campus pick-up/delivery. Have done dissertations, books, term papers, minor editing. Neat, accurate, prompt service. 267-8721

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4, 757-0621.

EUROPE: flights, car rentals, railpasses. Also bargain flights to Nassau this summer. Only $239. Two weeks, airfare, hotel etc. Call 782-5033.

REWARD: for the return of a black leather briefcase accidentally taken from the University Textbook store March 5. Notebooks desperately needed. Please contact Joanne Hunter 783-5672

GRADUATE MEDICAL STUDENT interested in doing research on damaged hair. Phone 535-5017 between 4:00 and 7:00 p.m.

ESCAPE THE BOREDOM OF INSTITUTIONAL FOOD... try the Gallery Club, Hart House

2 TICKETS TO LONDON one way before March 17. Not a chartered flight. Reasonable. 536-0919

FACTORY THEATRE LAB presents "SPACES" by Denise Hayes at Bathurst St. - United Church, 736 Bathurst St. (Lennox St. entrance) Tues-Sat. 9:00 p.m. Sun. 2:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. Reservations 921-5989 Runs to March 24

ESSAYS AND THESIS. We can solve your headaches. We'll type your essays & thesis and deliver to you promptly. The rates are very reasonable. Call day or night. 439-6412.

1968 CORVAIR MONZA; 4 door hardtop, 48,000 original miles, radio, in good condition, $450 or best offer. Phone 466-1255

WANTED-ONE COMPASSIONATE MAN, have interest in music, writing and pets - for one very lonely. Looking for someone I can really talk to. Ask for Little Rita, 485-4465 (weekdays)

NO RECOGNITION SUGGESTION CRIME COMMITTEE re new Asquith library, also contribute to Campus crime report, low down, internal, positive viewpoint for other students benefit. 783-3857

the Villager^{*} shoe shoppes

A REALLY GREAT SELECTION OF CREPE SOLES IN MANY SUPER COLORS. PRICES FROM $12.99

GREAT SHOES FOR THE AT MOST VILLAGER LOCATIONS

101 Bloor Street West
115 Yonge Street
253 Yonge Street
774 Yonge Street

Open Thursday and Friday Nights.
Master, Chargex and Credit Cards honored.
C.O.D. orders accepted.

1475 Yonge Street
Fairview Mall
Cedarbrae Shopping Plaza
Brampton Shoppers World
Mississauga Shopping Centre

Bramalea City Centre
Oshawa Shopping Centre
Georgian Mall (Barrie)
35 King St. W. (Cobourg)
202 Princess (Kingston)

"*Design and Word Trade Marks in Canada of the Villager Shoe Shoppes Ltd."

ATTENTION

NEW COLLEGE STUDENTS

N.C.S.C. 1974-75 ELECTIONS

Nominations open Tues. Mar. 12th — Close Fri. Mar. 15th

Positions: President
1st Vice President
2nd Vice President
Social Director & 4 Commissioners
Education Director & 4 Commissioners
Men's Athletic Director & 2 Commissioners
Men's Athletic Director & 2 Commissioners
Women's Athletic Director & 2 Commissioners
4 New College S.A.C. Reps.

Nomination forms available at Porters' Lodges in New College

An Election Forum for all candidates will be held on Tuesday Mar. 19th at 7:00 p.m. - Wilson Hall

Elections will take place on

Wed. Mar. 20th & Thurs. Mar. 21st

The Education Commission is sponsoring an ART and Photography Contest.

The Judging for both contests is Mar. 14th.

All entries will be displayed in the New College Music Room

Any student graduating from New College who wishes to be on a composite picture, please call, as soon as possible, the Toll Studios (933-9322) to book an appointment

The Social Commission will have its final dance on, Sat. Mar. 30,

New College Graduating Students will be admitted for half price.

The Co-Ed Ping Pong tournament will be held on Sat. March 16th. Anyone interested should sign lists in the college.

The Gnu Society will be Meeting Thurs. Mar. 14th from 3:30 to 4:40 p.m. in Wetmore Dining Hall

Everyone is welcome

FREE SHERRY

The New I Hockey Team is battling for the Inter-Faculty CHAMPIONSHIP.

BIGGEST GAME will be Wed. Mar. 15th. 7:00 p.m.

Varsity Arena

Let's support our Athletic Teams

New College T-Shirts are now on sale in front of the N.C.S.C. office

Buy now while the supply lasts, only $2.50 each

James Cagney will be seventy-five on July 17, 1974. This week New College will be showing a retrospective of five of his best known films

The films will be shown in Room 1017, New College, on Thursday, Mar. 14 (The Public Enemy and White Heat), Friday Mar. 15 (Angels with Dirty Faces and Mister Roberts) and Saturday Mar. 16 (One, Two, Three) at 8:00 p.m.

Admission will be fifty cents for each evening, or one dollar for all three. Tickets will be sold at the door.

The N.C.S.C. will be offering two, $100. scholarships this year.

The F.E.W. WETMORE HONOUR AWARD for a New College graduating student who has been outstanding in scholastic endeavour and in New College Activities

The NEW COLLEGE CENTENNIAL AWARD for a student in any year who is engaged in extra-curricular activities and who maintains a B average.

Details and forms available in New College Registrar's Office

Waterpolo playoffs adopt a new format

By MIKE MILNE

The waterpolo playoffs began last week with a new format. This was adopted from the successful change made by other sports in their playoffs, in which separate championships are held for each of the two divisions.

The top four finishers in each division played semi-final games in a single knockout last week. There were no surprises in the two first division games as PHE downed Eng I 15-5 and Knox defeated Vic 8-3.

In PHE's victory, Brankovsky scored five goals, followed by Phillips with three, and Ball and Zavemba adding two each. Butler and Singer scored a pair for the engineers.

Wilkin led the way for Knox, scoring four while Rockingham added two more. Palruple and Guinness completed the scoring. Sutton got two for Vic with 'Rubber Duckie' Parker netting the other.

In the second division, Eng II defaulted to Vic II. (We always have at least one default a week, even in the playoffs.)

In the other game, Meds and New tied 7-7 in double overtime. It was 5-5 after regular play and one period of overtime. Each team scored twice in the second overtime period and the game had to be rescheduled.

In the replay Saturday morning, Meds prevailed 8-4. Byron scored three for Meds; Russell had two, and Grundman, Stesco and Modell also scored. Jafine and Rudinsky scored two each for New.

The finals for each division begin tonight. They are both best-two-out-of-three series and both promise to be close contests.

Wrestlers excel

Toronto wrestlers made their bid for the Ontario senior and junior championships March 9 and 10.

Len Gang (105.5 lbs) placed second in the Ontario seniors held in Ottawa. Rob Moore (136.5 lbs) fought seven times in eight hours to place third in the juniors, while George Multimaki placed fifth.

Steve Tisberger (149.5 lbs) defeated nine opponents within 10 hours to place first in a field of 38. Roman Preobrazenski (220 lbs) fought three times to place second in his class.

Tisberger and Preobrazenski go to Regina for the Canadian Open March 16 and 17.

The final int b'ball standings

These are the final standings of the men's intermediate basketball league (read it and weep.) All teams (such as they were) played six games and had to win six points to gain entrance to the playoffs. If any team managed this incredible feat, we have put an asterisk beside their name.

Group A	pts
Knox A *	12
GMCC	1
Dev Hse	4
Eng Controls	4

Wye	12
Knox I *	12
Trin C	5
Arch *	6
Med C	2
Emman	2

Group B	pts
Med D *	10
Eng III *	10
Strachan's Folly	0
Eng IV	1
Medd 77	1
Eng Optimists *	10
For B	4
Eng Galderods	2
New Gammas *	8
Eng V *	8
Eng IV Grungies	3
Vic III *	10

Lecture:
Why a diaspora Jew
can't be critical of Israel

Speaker:
Gershon Hundert

PHD CANDIDATE IN JEWISH HISTORY AT COLUMBIA
MEMBER OF BREIRA - FORUM ON DIASPORA - ISRAEL
RELATIONS MEMBER OF NEW YORK CHAVURA.

Sunday, March 17 at 8:00
Miller House: 186 St. George

Pink
Whiskers
Boutique

Fashion is fun at Pink Whiskers.
924-1974.
1 Bedford Rd
(St. George subway - Bedford exit.)

HEADQUARTERS

FOR

UNIVERSITY of TORONTO

JACKETS

LEVI'S AND LEES

BLAZERS and CRESTS

CRESTED SWEATSHIRTS

Lynn-Gold Clothes Ltd.

401 YONGE ST. (at Gerrard) TORONTO 200, ONT.
PHONE 368-7729

HART HOUSE ELECTIONS

ART COMMITTEE

B.C. Barker	II Law
C. Berczi	III S.M.C.
C.A. Cranston	III New
J.O. Gibbons	Trin I
P.W. Johnson	IV Vic
J. Loth	II A.&S.
I.M. Niewolik	S.G.S.
C.L. Orobetz	II A.&S.
A. Rao	S.G.S.
M. Routledge	II U.C.
M.E. Webb	II Vic

LIBRARY COMMITTEE

J.S. Floras	I Meds
T.M. Hurka	III TRIN.
M.C. Murray	II Trin.
S.R. Perry	III Trin.
A. Shubert	III U.C.
A.E. Silversides	III U.C.
E.J. Waitzer	I Law
J. Watt	S.G.S.
M.S. Wolfish	III Inn

WED., MAR. 13

POLLS HART HOUSE MAP ROOM, 9 A.M. - 7 P.M.

POLLS: SIDNEY SMITH, ROBARTS LIBRARY, GALBRAITH BLDG. 9-5 P.M.

VOTE!

Erin and Eng are "A" and "B" champs

Women's intramural volleyball winds up

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

In the final standings of the women's volleyball interfaculty "A" league, Meds I and Erindale tied for first with eight points each. PHE I and PHE II followed with six points each.

In the "B" league, Eng I and Meds II both finished in a dead heat with six points each.

Both of the above leagues played on Tuesday nights in the Benson Building. There was also a Thursday night league with an "A" and "B" division.

In the Thursday "A" league, PHE IV finished first with eight points, followed by PHE VI and New I with six points each while Pharm I trailed with four points.

In the "B" division, SMC II, Forestry, Innis, New IV and Pots II all tied with six points each.

In the Tuesday "A" playoffs, Erin dumped PHE II 2-0 in the first round by scores of 15-8 and 15-5. In the other round, PHE I ousted Meds I 15-3 and 15-8.

In the Tuesday "A" semifinal, Erin then won the right to enter the "A" finals by defeating PHE I 15-5, 4-15 and 15-11.

In the Thursday "A" quarterfinals, PHE IV shunted Pharm II out of the playoffs, taking the first game easily 15-2 and then struggling to win the second 18-16.

After PHE VI defeated New I 15-8 and 15-6 to capture the other quarterfinal, they met PHE IV for the right to play Erin in the finals.

Here their luck ran out, however, as PHE IV won in straight games, 15-11 and 15-13. PHE IV and Erin met last Wednesday at 730 in the Erindale gym to decide the "A" league winner.

Erindale then won the championship, defeating PHE 15-8 and 15-10.

In the Tuesday "B" league, Eng I defeated Meds II to enter the finals against the Thursday "B" winners.

Since five teams ended up tied with six points each in this division, a mini-round robin was held, with matches being 15 minutes long with three games if necessary in a match.

The five teams competing in these hectic proceedings were SMC II, Forestry, Innis, New IV and Pots II.

After the smoke had cleared and New had been eliminated, Pots faced Forestry and Innis was matched against SMC.

Pots II knocked out the foresters 15-6 and 15-10 while SMC II put Innis to rest 15-11 and 15-10 to gain a semi-final berth.

After eliminating SMC II in the semi-final, Pots II played Eng I for the "B" league championship. The engineers lost the first game 15-9 but came back to win the next game 16-6. In the deciding game, Eng edged Pots 15-13 to capture the championship.

We gave American skiers the Blues

The Ski Blues competed last weekend as special guests in the championships of the New England intercollegiate ski conference. Constant training through the season paid off as the team managed to survive their most interesting meet of the year.

Fast performance on two flat tires and consistent driving on almost impassable roads got the racers to Mt. Cranmore, New Hampshire in time for two hours sleep before the first race.

In Friday's giant slalom the team finished ninth on the strength of Mike Bulger's ninth and Curtis Eastmore's nineteenth place finishes.

The results from Saturday's slalom can be summed up by a comment from an American racer "You guys sure look good and fast on the course...between falls."

Britt Roberts managed to stand up for two runs and finished eighth, but the rest of the team had problems. They later expressed their disappointment in not giving a more impressive showing to the Americans but look forward to future friendly international competition.

VARSITY ARENA

C.I.A.U.

CANADIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE NATIONAL HOCKEY CHAMPIONSHIP

FINAL

WATERLOO

VS

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS

Saturday March 16th at 2:00 p.m.

Tickets on sale now at Athletic Office and Varsity Arena.

PRICES:

General Admission $1.00

Reserved $2.00

WOMEN

Do you have
NLS or Award of Merit
or Instructors?

Do you want to make
some money next year?

Apply to lifeguard at the
Benson Building Pool
for the academic year 1974-75

Application forms are now available in
Room 226 or 230
of the Benson Building

An Offer You Can't Refuse

Lowest Discount Prices On...

- HIFI STEREO EQUIPMENT Pioneer Kenwood, Sony, Dual, Telefunken etc
- COLOUR TV Zenith, Admiral, RCA etc
- CAR-RADIOS AND TAPE PLAYER All makes, including Blaupunkt AM-FM and Stereo Models

LOOK AROUND FOR YOUR BEST DEAL... THEN ASK FOR OUR STILL LOWER PRICE

KROMER RADIO LTD. 920-6700

112 Harbord St. (1 Block West of Spadina) Close to U. of T.

GIVE US
MAKE AND MODEL...
WE DO SELL
FOR LESS!

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55%...

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer. Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

Classic European craftsmanship shows in the builders of professional championship racers Vanqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity. Vanqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MARK II 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51 QUICK RELEASE NO CHROME	159.00
VANQUEUR OLYMPIC QUICK RELEASE	169.00
VANQUEUR NO SAFETY LEVER WING NUT	149.00
LA PERLE WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	149.00
VOLKSCYCLE QUICK RELEASE SAFETY LEVER	159.00

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dynamo electric lighting with generator, back carrier, padded seat, chrome chain guard; and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
VOLKSCYCLE CHROME, QUICK RELEASE	159.00
VOLKSCYCLE WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	149.00
MODENA SAFETY LEVER CHROME QUICK RELEASE	159.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51 ALUMINUM FRAME, PHILLESS SAFETY LEVER QUICK RELEASE WITH CHROME FORK, CAMPANOLO DERAILLEUR 10 SPEED	169.00

- Open Mon.-Fri. 2 p.m.-6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-2 p.m.
- Brake cable and manufacturer's material defects. Warranty for three months on all brand names.
- Minimum service charge for assembling.
- We have a professional mechanic stand by to

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW 51 HAVE SHIMANO OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS
VISTA WING NUT MEN OR LADIES 10 SPEED	149.00
OX2000 LADIES FENDER, CARRIER REFLECTOR 10 SPEED	89.00
TIGER LADIES SURTOUR DEFAULTEUR 10 SPEED	119.00
LA PERLE AUTOMATIC FOLDING BICYCLE	89.00
SAFARI OR CAPRI FOLDING BICYCLE	79.00

- give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept charge.

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario

Phone: 749-6171

Your Charge card is accepted

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #36C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

sports

Lawrence Clarke
323-1495

Law prevails in fac hockey semi-finals

By DAVE STUART

In a lack-lustre affair Monday night, Law A eliminated PHE A from the division I semi-finals, defeating the jocks 3-2 on a last minute goal.

The lawyers won the two-game, total-goal series 8-7 and now advance to the finals against the winner of tonight's New-SMC series.

Early hustling by Law paid off at 1:02 of the opening stanza when Bauer slipped a shot by a surprised Sammut, the PHE netminder.

Instead of being spurred on by their quick goal, however, the lawyers went to sleep for the rest of the period. The jocks were snoring as well, though, and weren't able to capitalize on the law team's sluggishness.

A small spark of excitement occurred midway through the period when Law's Morrison got a clean-cut breakaway only to be foiled by Sammut.

On the return rush, PHE's Ackley tiptoed by the dozing Law defense but was tripped up by a sprawling Durno.

Ackley crashed into the goal-post and had to be helped from the ice. He wasn't hurt seriously, though, and later returned to finish the game.

Law scored again midway through the second period on a goal by Armstrong. He spotted a loophole in the jock defense and fired the puck past Sammut to give the barristers a 2-0 lead.

But within three minutes the jocks tied the score on goal by Croke and Ackley. PHE's two goals brought them to life and they dominated the balance of the period with fast breaks and crunching bodychecks.

Vic III scores a goal on SMC F in an intermediate hockey game that went into double overtime before Vic won 3-2.

The third period was played cautiously with close checking dominating the play. With the score knotted 2-2, Law weakened visibly under the relentless attack of the jocks. The lawyers lacked bench strength as they only dressed 11 players.

During the last four minutes of the period, PHE kept the pressure on Law goalie Durno who was called on to make several good saves.

With only 40 seconds remaining,

Law got possession and cleared it down the ice. PHE defenceman Bagg chased the puck but decided to tango with Sammut who had come out of the net to clear the puck.

In the confusion, Law's McDonald picked up the loose puck and tapped it into the net for the winning goal. It was a heart-breaking loss for PHE who had dominated the final stanza.

Tonight at 7 p.m., the second division New cinderellas carry a slim one goal margin into the deciding game against first division SMC A.

Look for the match to be a real barn-burner, as the winner gets to play Law in the interfac finals.

Division II

In the opening games of the two-game, total goal semifinals, both first place finishers won. Jr. Eng. (first in the "A" section) downed Fac Ed 3-2 while Pharm. E (first in the "B" section) downed Law II 3-2.

Jr. Eng got goals by Kolanko, Kennedy and Montgomery while Fac Ed's markers were scored by Pyleff and Nicholson. The two teams meet again tonight at 9 p.m.

Law II got two goals from Teolis but that wasn't enough as Hetherington, Walker and Ranko gave Pharm the victory and a one goal lead in their series. The teams will decide it tomorrow night at 7 p.m.

Int b'ball playoffs begin

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

The intermediate basketball playoffs began Monday night in Hart House with three games.

The first match was scheduled for 8 pm but never played. For some reason, Eng V never showed, giving Med D the right to contest Knox A in one of the quarter-finals.

In another preliminary game, Architecture poured on the power in the last nine minutes of their game with New Gammas to win 43-45. The victory gave Arch a quarter-final berth against the Eng Optimals.

New had 11 players while Arch only had five (and one in the stands who refused to don his playing garb despite several entreaties from his team-mates).

Nevertheless, the Gammas could only build up a shaky 12-8 lead by the 10 minute mark of the first half.

But with 7:38 left, Arch tied the score 18-18. The lead see-sawed back and forth and briefly settled at 22 all with less than two minutes in the half.

Then the Gammas began to commit fouls and Arch took full advantage of the free shots to grab a 27-22 halftime lead.

The score remained close in the second half with New battling back to tie it 29-29 with 13:45 remaining and it looked like the Gammas' superior bench strength would be the deciding factor.

But Arch's determined shooting and rebounding allowed them to pile up a commanding lead in the last nine minutes and they won the game walking away. (In the last half, Arch collared 12 offensive and 15 defensive rebounds as compared to only five offensive and 11 defensive rebounds by New.)

Sickle led the Arch scorers with 16 points, followed by Larocca (8), Catomeris (7), Beiro and Piletre, (six each).

Fonberg led the Gammas with sixteen with other points coming from Bucis (13), Causis, Johnson and Blum (four each).

Wycliffe looked self-assured in winning their quarter-final with Vic III 32-28 as they led all the way after the first minutes of the last half.

Vic III held the lead only once and that was 12-11 with three minutes left in the opening half.

Wycliffe took a 13-12 lead with five seconds left in the first half and never really lost it in the final half, although the game Vic team was never more than four points behind.

Both teams were evenly matched in shooting from the floor: Wycliffe shot nine for 32 while Vic was eight for 32. The difference was again in the rebounding as Vic could only capture five of the 20 rebounds around the Wycliffe net in the second half while Wycliffe got 14 of the 24 rebounds at the other end.

Scoring for Wycliffe were: Joyce and King (eight each), Williams (7), Symons (5). Vic scorers were Jerome (10), Johnson (2), Vinto (6), Hotrum (2), and Reed (2).

oops!

We apologize for any upset caused to the SMC A basketball team by the story we printed Monday concerning the alleged use of a 'ringer'.

As it turns out, the player in question was legitimately registered at a seminary affiliated with St. Mike's, and the intramural office, after an investigation, completely exonerated him.

Our writer, however, never said the player in question was a ringer. Rather, he said since his status was unclear, he was being used by SMC with the attitude of "play him anyway because everyone users ringers".

Next time, though, we'll check out a story of this nature before using it, especially one based on hearsay evidence.

Also, we apologize for any embarrassment we may have caused to those associated with the Blues' football team. When we used two posterized pictures of the Blues in action to illustrate a feature on the use of drugs by athletes, we did not mean to imply that the Blues themselves take drugs.

Two blunders in one issue. Not bad, eh, sports fans? We expect to be drafted by the New York Islanders any moment.

Players wait for rebound in playoff between Arch and New Gammas.

Kanowitch sweeps SAC election

By DICK BROWN

The Seymour Kanowitch slate rolled up an easy victory in the race for the SAC presidency which ended yesterday.

Kanowitch and his running mates, Tim Buckley and Fred Stewart, pulled more than 1,000 votes over their nearest rival.

Kanowitch and his running mates, nout in seven years with slightly more than 3,000 voting compared to about 3,400 last year. About 23,000 undergraduate students were eligible to vote.

The final count last night showed the Kanowitch slate with 1,744, the Michel Chamberland (Brute Farce Committee) slate with 693, and the Peter Baumann slate with 419. Abstentions totalled 230.

Baumann ran last in last year's elections while it was the first time out for Chamberland.

An increase in student fees to $1.50 for the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) passed with 58 per cent of the more than 3,000 votes cast.

Final tally for the OFS vote showed 1,758 yes votes, 1,114 no votes and 181 abstentions.

Kanowitch, currently SAC services commissioner and past cultural affairs commissioner, ran on a slate emphasizing student services, parity, the discipline code, university budget cuts and relationships with the suburban campuses.

He and his slate took all polls except POTS and Forestry.

Above the din of a celebration party in the SAC offices, Kanowitch said last night the low turnout was a combination of two factors.

First, he said, was the timing of the elections. In previous years the SAC elections have taken place in the midst of some pressing campus issue, but this time there were no burning issues, he said.

Secondly, he said there was a lot of complacency about the election. Kanowitch was favored to win, and he attributed part of the low turnout to that.

Despite the turnout, he said he considers the size of the winning margin to be a mandate.

Kanowitch said he hopes to bring in a new theme with his administration: "Get back to the students."

He said during his campaigning he found many students willing and even eager to talk about issues and he wants to get out of the tiny SAC office and "talk to as many people as we can."

"People seemed interested in issues so SAC must communicate with them."

Harping on his campaign theme of better student services, he said the results show the student is interested about the quality of services and the quality and price of education.

He added, however, that his slate was the only one talking issues so the campaign remained low-key due to a lack of debate.

The debate in the campaign was so low-key there was never even an all-candidates meeting on the St. George campus although the Kanowitch slate fared as well downtown as it did in Scarborough where an all-candidates debate was held.

First priority for the newly-elected is to get into the issues of his campaign: parity, university budgeting, and organizing students in departments and faculty to press for prevention of cutbacks.

However, should the university recall the Caput in the Banfield affair—as it has—that would take a high priority, Kanowitch said.

Ace candidate and now SAC president-elect Seymour Kanowitch took all but two polls in yesterday's election.

THE Varsity TORONTO

Vol. 94, No. 63

Fri. March 15, 1974

Council executive votes to convene Caput

By BOB GAUTHIER

An emergency session late yesterday afternoon of the executive committee of Governing Council decided to call on the existing disciplinary procedures—the Caput—to deal with an incident involving professor Edward Banfield and about 20 opponents Wednesday morning.

Visiting American urbanologist Banfield was prevented from speaking Wednesday by members of the Students for a Democratic Society and a few supporters.

An audience of about 200 spoke out against students who occupied the platform in the West Hall of University College where Banfield was scheduled to speak.

The three motions coming from the executive committee yesterday all dealt with the Banfield lecture incidents this week.

Conservative philosophy professor Chuck Hanley, seconded by alumnus rep Gus Abols, moved to recommend Evans call the Caput into effect.

The vote carried 6-3, with student governors Norma Grindal and Howard Levitt and administrative Governor Gwen Russell opposed.

The second motion that carried compelled the executive committee to instruct the administration, in consultation with various campus organizations, to develop a statement on the question of guarantees of the freedom of speech, etc.

The third motion referred the question of a mechanism to deal with violence to the Internal affairs committee.

At yesterday's executive meeting Evans reviewed the history of Banfield's invitation to the U of T campus and the events which occurred when Banfield sought to give a series of lectures.

Evans described the heckling and personal abuse thrown on Banfield and said he had not been permitted to speak on Wednesday.

Evans said the actions taken by the small number of people who opposed Banfield represented "a blatant disregard for freedom of speech."

He said there had been difficulties in preventing functions or assemblies over the past few years and the university has not developed mechanisms to deal with such approaches.

Evans said it was necessary to make explicit the guidelines acceptable to the university community to deal with these kinds of problems, and the university must call on the existing disciplinary procedures to deal with what happened.

Evans also wants to develop a policy on "preventive approaches."

Evans attacked

U of T Faculty Association president Bill Nelson lambasted Evans, saying he should have done everything that he did but sooner.

Nelson said Evans should have already established guidelines and the Caput should have been called into action.

He said the administration abdicated its responsibility by not making use of the powers available to it at the present time.

Nelson said: "The calling of police is not as objectionable as the breach of academic freedom," adding he welcomed Evans' statement "but it is infinitely late."

Prepare statements

Faculty of Arts and Science dean Bob Greene, although agreeing with the direction of Hanley's motion, said the American Studies Committee (the committee that invited Banfield to U of T) should have prepared statements and advertisements in advance, calling for rebuttals of Banfield's theories.

Greene said earlier in the week the first place he found out about the lecture series was in an SDS pamphlet denouncing Banfield.

The American Studies Committee did not publicize Banfield's visit until early this week.

However, student governing council candidate Howard Stein said yesterday political economy professor Pete Silcox had told many people that Banfield was coming to U of T.

Stein said Silcox had personally approached him to tell him about Banfield's visit and "goaded him on."

Last night Silcox said his diary records the fact that the first time he began mentioning Banfield's visit on February 27, was soon after he received a letter that Banfield had accepted the invitation.

Silcox was at first reluctant to talk over the phone but evaded the question of whether he goaded Stein. He said he was unaware that Stein was connected to the SDS.

SAC repudiates SDS action

The SAC executive met late Wednesday night and worked on a statement released to the Globe and Mail early Thursday morning.

The Globe and Mail statement of the SAC position was seriously distorted.

A leaflet on the SAC position on the Banfield incident was handed out to students on campus yesterday. The leaflet stated:

"The SAC executive believes the invitation issued to Prof. Edward Banfield to speak at the University of Toronto campus was both injudicious and unnecessarily provocative.

"The SAC executive wishes to affirm its belief in the right of free speech as well as the right to carry on complete and open criticism and debate at any function within the university.

"The SAC executive repudiates the actions undertaken by the Students for a Democratic Society Wednesday afternoon in physically preventing Prof. Banfield from speaking. Such actions are regarded as violations of the above principles."

At the emergency Governing Council executive committee meeting yesterday SAC president Bob Anderson said the "paramount importance is the right of individuals to speak on campus and of the members of the university to hear those whom they wish to hear, as well as the right of members of the community to engage them in debate and criticize views presented. "As such," Anderson continued, "we repudiate the actions of SDS in physically preventing Banfield from speaking on Wednesday afternoon."

"At the same time we must question the wisdom and motivations behind the American Studies Committee offering to Banfield an honorarium and prestigious speaking post on this campus, when his writings have been widely attacked by reputable scholars as justifying a lack of action in correcting gross social inequities.

"Nonetheless, the most important issue here is the right of the community to hear Banfield and form their own opinions.

"We are confident that the vast majority of students also oppose the tactics of the SDS in this matter."

No police needed

However, Anderson ruled out several approaches to take in resolving the problem.

He said campus police are inadequate and calling in Metro police would not have the desired effect.

He said the meeting would have been effectively destroyed had the police been called in.

The deterrent value is minimal since the SDS would have conducted a political trial which would have served their own ends and harassed university officials far more than it would have hurt them.

Anderson said if the discipline code had been in effect, this once again would have led to a political trial and harassment.

"Expulsion is not likely to phase them," Anderson said, "because of the SDS-CPIL ideology: they see their working class links as important, but even being in university is, in a sense, contradictory with their views."

Call mass meeting

Anderson suggested the only approach which would work would be to call a mass meeting of students to decide the issue.

He said the main goal of the SDS is to involve others—non-members—in pursuing the issue of racism. That was clear by their invitation to noted scholar Ashley Montagu as the keynote speaker in the teach-in on racism, he said.

Anderson also said, "those members of the executive committee familiar with discipline may recognize this model."

The Campbell Report recommends dealing with obstructive but non-violent demonstrations as follows: first, negotiations over the substantive issues, and second, if that fails, a determination of the support the group has, by referendum or a meeting.

If the support is limited, then the position of the demonstrators is undercut: if it's widespread then the issue cannot be resolved by an imposed solution, but only through further negotiations.

Anderson said the SAC was "prepared to continue meeting to discuss discipline, and we hope the Governing Council is also."

"I would point out that the faculty association (UTFA) withdrew from the past discipline meetings, saying discipline was a matter for discussion between students and the Governing Council. Any form of panic from them must now be evaluated in that context."

HERE AND NOW

FRIDAY

all day

The first issue of the university-wide creative writing journal, Writing at the University of Toronto, is available free from college registrars as long as copies last.

Greg Kelly will speak about the Canadian and Quebecois revolutions of 1837-1839, and what their significance was then and the lessons Canadians and Quebecois can learn from them today. There will be slides. Debates Room, Hart House. Sponsored by CLM.

1:15 pm

Muslim students may note that regular Friday congregational prayers are held in the South sitting room, 3rd. Floor, Hart House, University of Toronto.

3:30 pm

The Friday Afternoon Pub is running again today in the Junior Common Room of University College. Wine and Beer. Free popcorn.

4 pm

Women's Studies is sponsoring an Open House for all those Women interested in women's courses and projects on women, to get together and talk about what they are doing. Interdisciplinary Studies Building, 67 St. George Street. Second Floor. 928-4928.

4:30 pm

"Beware the Ides of March." Join us for Wine and Cheese to 7:30 pm. Pendarvis Lounge, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street. $50 a glass.

6:10 pm

Licht Bencham this week at Hill House. All welcome to attend.

7:00 pm

David Lean's Film of "Ryan's Daughter" is presented in the Med. Sci. Auditorium at 7:00 and 10:00 for only 95c. Winner of 2 academy awards. Next week "Silent" instead of "The Shoes of the Fisherman" on March 22nd.

7:30 pm

Christians Also Thank God It's Friday. (C.A.T.G.I.F.) Come and join us Newman Centre. Campus Crusade For Christ.

Greg Kelly will speak about the Canadian and Quebecois revolutions of 1837-1839, and what their significance was then and the lessons Canadians and Quebecois can learn from them today. There will be slides. Cumberland Room, ISC, 33 St. George. Sponsored by CLM.

Peter Bogdanovich's "Paper Moon" will be the next feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club. Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

8 pm

Abe, the biblical comedy of Abraham and Isaac, written by Randy Brown, directed by Leslie O'Dell, this week at the Glenn Morris Theatre.

Free French films "Remparts d'argile" (Bertucci) plus "L'Alsace" and "Midi Place Gutenberg." UC 105.

New College continues its salute to James Cagney. Michael Curtiz's "Angels with Dirty Faces" and John Ford's "Mister Roberts" will be shown in Room 1017, Wilson Hall. The festival continues on Saturday. Admission is 50c per evening, or one dollar for all three.

8:30 pm

Double Bill: Dead Heat and Booms at UC Playhouse, 79A St. George. Admission Free.

The Theatre Micklites present 4 One Act Plays: "The Words upon the Windowpane" by Yeats, "The Stronger" by Strindberg, "Sandbox" by Albee, and "Traps" by Stewart. Saturday and Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Upper Brennan Hall, SMC, Admission Free.

SATURDAY

9:00 am

"This land is our land," a seminar on native land claims in Canada, sponsored by Trinity College. In the Concert Hall of the Edward Johnson Building. Students - $4.00. Until 4 pm.

7:30 pm

Peter Bogdanovich's "Paper Moon" will be the next feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club. Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

8:00 pm

Abe, the biblical comedy of Abraham and Isaac, written by Randy Brown, directed by Leslie O'Dell, this week at the Glenn Morris Theatre.

New College concludes its salute to James Cagney with Billy Wilder's "One, Two, Three." The film will be shown in room 1017, Wilson Hall. Admission is 50c.

8:30 pm

Double Bill: Dead Heat and Booms at UC Playhouse, 79A St. George. Admission Free.

Hillel is presenting a Casino Night with games and lots of fun at Hill House. All welcome to attend and partake.

Gay Liberation Dance. Licensed: Holy Trinity Church (Yonge just south of Dundas). $1.50. Sponsored by Gay Alliance Toward Equality.

SUNDAY

10:00 am

Continue the Journey of Lent with the Newman Centre community. Theme for today: "A time for loving a time for hating." St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel (and Newman Centre) at 89 St. George St. Mass again at noon.

3:30 pm

Hillel's Grad Club is presenting a concert with two guest entertainers. All welcome to attend. Followed by a deli supper.

6 pm

The Muslim Students Association invites all to the regular Quranic Tafseer Session (Quranic Explanations), held in the Morning Room, International Students Centre, 33 St. George St. Lecture followed by discussion and refreshments.

7:15 pm

The next Sunday series feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be Monte Hellman's "Ride in the Whirlwind," starring Jack Nicholson. Admission by series ticket or $75 at the door. Also at 9:30 pm.

7:30 pm

Hillel Lecture Series is presenting a lecture, "Why a Diaspora Jew can't be critical of Israel," with guest Speaker Gershon Hundert at Hill House. All welcome to attend.

8:00 pm

The Wymilwood Concert Series presents A Musical Evening with a programme of quartets by Mozart, Ravel and Michael Pops. 8:00 pm in the Music Room at Wymilwood, 150 Charles Street West. Admission free. Refreshments after.

MONDAY

all day

Captain Beefheart and his Magic Band will be in concert on April 7th, at Convocation Hall, for two shows: at 7:00 & 10:00. Special U of T student discount available at SAC office.

New Riders of the Purple Sage will be in concert at Convocation Hall on April 18th at 6:30 & 10:00. Tickets are available at the SAC office at $5.00 per seat.

10 am

Great Reductions - Young Socialist Book and Record Sale, come and bargain with us for two weeks, Sid Smith Foyer.

There will be Messa Hispanicas in Room 123 Sussex Court, 21 Sussex Ave., from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Come to eat your lunch and practice your Spanish.

2 pm

An important French Course Union meeting. Starting representation, plans for next year's union, and course evaluations will be discussed. It is imperative all members attend—new members most welcome. UC 138.

The Theatre Micklites present 4 One Act Plays—"The Words upon the Windowpane" by Yeats, "The Stronger" by Strindberg, "Sandbox" by Albee, and "Traps" by Stewart. Saturday and Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Monday at 5:00 p.m. Upper Brennan Hall, SMC. Admission Free.

4:10 pm

A regular meeting of the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science will be held on Monday, March 18th 1974 at 4:10 p.m. in Room 3154 of the Medical Sciences Building.

4:45 pm

Department of Near Eastern Studies: Judaica Seminars. Professor E. Faickelheim will talk on "Encounters between Judaism and Western Philosophy." The Back Sitting Room, The Women's Union, University College.

5 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Prof. F. Talmage speaking on "Jewish Studies in North America" at Hill House.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshur Supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7:30 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Mrs. R. Katchen speaking on "Librarianship & Jewish Studies" at Hill House.

8 pm

St. Michael's College and the Faculty of Medicine present a lecture on "Minors and the age of consent for Medical Treatment" by Prof. H. Krewer. Faculty of Law, University of Western Ontario, Medical Sciences Auditorium. Admission free.

"Anabaptism: Neither Catholic nor Protestant." Lecture by Dr. Walter Klason, Professor of History at Conrad Grebel College, University of Waterloo, Wymilwood Music Room, Victoria College.

8:30 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Prof. A. Avichal speaking on "Jewish Studies in Israel" at Hill House.

TUESDAY

noon

"The Kingdom of Jesus and Civil Religion." Speaker: Dr. Frank Epp, President of Conrad Grebel College, University of Waterloo, South-Sitting Room, Third Floor, Hart House.

4 pm

Mr. Wilber Sutherland will speak at Scarborough College in room S309. His topic is: "Velikovsky: Scientific Heretic."

5 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Dr. Joseph I. Cohen speaking on "Jewish Education as a Career" at Hill House.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshur Supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5:00 pm today.

7 pm

Intermediate Conversational Hebrew at Hill House.

Hillel's Guitar Workshop for beginners only at Hill House.

7:15 pm

Estos, Latvians and Lithuanians: Baltic Seminar at Tartu College, Entertainment, lecture, refreshments. Come together for an evening of discussion, singing & dancing C.O.B.Y.

7:30 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Rabbi S. Stauber speaking on "Crisis & Opportunity for the Rabbi in North America," at Hill House.

8 pm

Advanced Guitar Workshop at Hill House.

Conversational Hebrew for beginners only at Hill House.

HART HOUSE

ART GALLERY

GROUP SHOW — VOTE FOR THE PAINTING YOU WOULD LIKE TO SEE ADDED TO THE PERMANENT COLLECTION
GALLERY HOURS: MONDAY: 11 A.M. - 9 P.M.
TUESDAY TO SATURDAY: 11 A.M. - 5 P.M.
SUNDAY: 2 - 5 P.M.

LUNCH HOUR EXERCISE CLASS

TODAY AT NOON

WRESTLING ROOM

ALL WELCOME

ART COMMITTEE - FILM SERIES

"EXPRESSIONISM" - "FAUWISM"
MON., MAR. 18
DEBATES ROOM. 1-2 PM AND 7-8 PM

HART HOUSE SQUASH CHAMPIONSHIP

GRADUATE, UNDERGRADUATE & CONSOLATION PLAY BEGINS

AT 5 PM ON TUES., MAR. 19

ALL WELCOME

NOON - HOUR CLASSICAL CONCERT

PENNY CLARKE, Flute

TUES., MAR. 19

MUSIC ROOM, 1 PM.

POETRY READING

TED BURNETT

MARK DALE

ROGER GREENWALD

TUES., MAR. 19

LIBRARY, 1 PM.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

THE HART HOUSE CHORUS WITH THE NEW CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

SUN., MAR. 17 - GREAT HALL, 8 PM.

TICKETS FREE FROM THE HALL PORTER

Chargex Accepted * Student Discount

CONTACT LENSES
$79 complete with all fittings & service

SOFT LENSES AVAILABLE

GLASSES large selection of imported frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.

354 Yonge St.

364-2607

SUMMER SESSION AT TRENT UNIVERSITY OFFERS YOU

...an attractive combination of small group teaching in a vacationland setting.

Small-group teaching is a feature of summer session at Trent that you may wish to explore further. It is geared carefully to the needs of the individual and offered on a 1,500-acre campus complete with a river and incorporating a 250-acre wildlife sanctuary. Some 50 courses in 17 disciplines are offered in the 1974 summer session at Trent University, including five evening courses. Evening courses begin May 20, day session begins July 2; both conclude August 9, with an examination week to follow.

For 1974, summer courses are offered in: Anthropology (5), Biology (6), Chemistry (1), Classical Studies (1), Economics (2), English Literature (6), French Studies (2), Geography (3), German (2), History (3), Mathematics (3), Native Studies (3), Philosophy (2), Politics (2), Psychology (4), Environmental Problems (1), Sociology (6), Spanish (1). Seminars and tutorials are used in most courses to complement lectures and provide for individual participation.

One field course in Anthropology will be offered at Midland during the summer, on archaeological field methods and techniques. The deadline for applications for daytime or evening summer courses is May 1, 1974. Your inquiries will be welcomed by Paul Scott, Part-time Studies Office, Trent University, Peterborough, Ontario. K9J 7B8.

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE

MUG N' BURGER

240 BLOOR ST. WEST (at Bedford Rd.)
NOW IS THE TIME TO TRY IT WITH THIS

SPECIAL OFFER

RETURN THIS AD AND GET

1 BIG BASKET OF GOLDEN FRENCH FRIES (A 35c VALUE) WITH THE PURCHASE OF 1 BANDIT BURGER OR 1 BANDIT CHEESE BURGER

ENJOY A LOW PRICED BEVERAGE WITH A LIGHT LUNCHEON OR JUST A RELAXING AFTERNOON

Open: 12 Noon to 6 P.M. Monday through Friday

COLOUR TELEVISION

SEE YOU SOON!

LICENSED UNDER L.C.B.O.

THIS SPECIAL OFFER EXPIRES

APRIL 19, 1974, BUT WE WILL STILL OFFER

EXCEPTIONAL VALUE ON OUR

REGULAR MENU

Campus centre plan far from settled

By KATHERINE ROWCLIFFE

Plans to improve the campus environment are still a step away from the setting of financial priorities.

A "comprehensive long-term plan for the improvement of the aesthetic quality of the campus grounds" is recommended in a progress report submitted at yesterday's external affairs committee meeting.

The report was prepared by the presidential advisory committee examining proposals contained in the 1971 "Campus as a Campus Center" report.

In an attempt to give the St. George campus a more collegiate atmosphere, the report recommends gateposts at Bloor and St. George Streets the burying of hydro wires, a reduced speed limit and the narrowing of St. George Street to two lanes south of Bloor Street.

St. Mike's president John Kelly criticised the last suggestion, explaining the project, which would cost at least $500,000 would make the university the laughing stock of the community.

Kelly also criticized proposed display cases on campus "to encourage campus and community awareness of the University and its facilities."

He said "pilfering and disturbances" were invited when buildings are opened to the public.

He also doubted the effectiveness of such displays.

The report also recommends the improvement of eating facilities on campus but Kelly reminded the committee of the financial distress of existing campus concessions.

The report also suggests the establishment of a variety of commercially operated service facilities such as a bank, drugstore and post office on campus.

The creation of "more interesting green space" and the improvement of pedestrian walkways is also recommended.

It is the hope of the report "making the campus livelier and more attractive might even ease security problems, which are becoming increasingly a serious."

The report will be sent to neighborhood rate payer's associations along with a covering letter from the external affairs committee stressing the preliminary and controversial nature of the report.

St. Mike's president Fr. John Kelly dreams of St. Patrick's day at external affairs yesterday

Housing crisis key to election

By MARGARET ROBERTSON

Ward 6 alderman Dan Heap said Wednesday night Toronto has a housing crisis of long standing and predicted the present city council will stand or fall on its housing decisions.

He said when the council adopted the "Living-Room Report" it accepted the obligation to supply decent housing for everybody.

This will mean, in part, playing the major role in co-ordinating the efforts of the housing problem, he added, because, although it is the level of government with the least power, it is the one closest to the people.

Commenting on the steps being taken by council Heap said while land-banking to provide low cost housing is a necessary investment for the future, it does not solve the immediate problem.

However, property developers are now coming to the aldermen earlier than before, "while their plans are still flexible," which allows requests to be made that 20-25 per cent of their planned units be tendered to Ontario Housing for low-income families.

Similarly, the downtown control by-law which restricts the height and size of buildings, as well as allowing council to decide whether the proposal will fit into the area planning, allows discussions to be held about the inclusion of family dwellings in the project.

"Without the by-law, the developers wouldn't even be talking to us," said Heap.

It was once assumed the centre of Toronto would become like Manhattan, but over the last few years thinking has undergone change and people are "no longer sure the Manhattan model is the very best," he said.

There is less money available for public housing per capita in Canada than in the US and UK. Heap said as a result only the poorest people get into public housing, which has led to a low morale in these projects not found in other countries.

Heap is in favor of rent control, but this decision is up to the provincial government.

In a passing reference to the recent rooming-house fire in which five people died, Heap said city council has "undertaken to do something" about rooming houses and in his opinion progress is being made.

Speaking of his activities on the board of health, Heap said when first approached by the Niagara Street residents, the board's medical officer felt the lead pollution problem fell within the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

However, the ministry of health refused to take action.

The residents reported the minister did not answer their letters, and, Heap added, the board of health found that its letters were not necessarily answered, either.

He said 5,000 blood tests have been taken in Toronto and air-testers have been installed to work around the clock in an effort to determine the scope of the problem.

Heap was speaking at the first of four Wednesday night lectures held by the St. Basil's Parish.

Council seat for Whelton

Bill Whelton and incumbent Arlene Dick have been elected to Governing Council in the part time undergraduate constituency I in balloting which concluded Wednesday.

Ballots from the other constituencies are being counted and results from other student, faculty and non-academic staff races are not likely to be known until late today at the earliest, possibly Monday.

Whelton is past president of the Association of Part-time Undergraduate Students (APUS) and has been a member of the general committee of the Faculty of Arts and Science.

At least two non-academic staff were not able to vote because their ballots were mailed to the wrong addresses.

Ruth Herman and Laurie

Buchanan, both employed in the anthropology department, had their ballots mailed to addresses from which they had moved last year.

Herman said both had notified the university's personnel department in November of their respective new addresses, but the ballots went the wrong way anyway last month.

The address snarl for addresses is so bad Buchanan's paycheque stub is still mailed to the old address.

Both received their ballots after being forwarded in the mail—they had put change of address forms in to the post office—but the ballots arrived too late for them to meet the Wednesday noon deadline for submitting completed ballots.

Nancy Simmonds, an administrative assistant to Governing Council co-ordinating the balloting procedure, said the cases were

"exceptions to the rule."

But she admitted "a lot" of staff did not get ballots in the mail and came to the Governing Council office to pick up ballots in person.

She said, however, this was not "extensive."

Staff it!

It was one week of a week on the old U of T homestead. The death of streaking, the ascension of Kanowitch, and the attack on Banfield which provoked president Evans to call the Caput.

Varsity staff should come to the regular meeting at one pm today to discuss these and other issues, including next week's staff elections.

SAC results: how the voters said it

	Baumann	Chamberland	Kanowitch	Abstain	OFS Yes	OFS No	Abstain
Victoria	134	77	148	34	169	107	12
Law	9	8	56	9	44	31	7
Music	3	6	10	11	9	12	0
Phys Ed	4	6	7	0	12	4	1
Sid Smith	83	115	291	18	321	179	24
Robarts	3	19	54	10	55	25	5
Sig Sam	13	20	45	5	50	31	2
New Physics	15	21	35	10	42	35	4
Food Sci	4	11	27	9	30	10	11
Trin	56	38	75	9	78	87	13
Meds	17	22	76	7	52	40	4
POTS	8	3	7	1	10	4	5
Dents	11	11	26	1	30	10	9
Forestry	16	26	18	11	27	39	3
New	10	23	90	12	76	55	3
Arch	2	2	15	1	4	0	0
Eng	37	115	126	6	108	148	26
Scar	13	10	199	2	140	65	19
Nursing	12	17	40	7	52	15	0
Pharmacy	0	0	1	0	0	1	0
SMC	0	36	36	10	54	24	4
FEUT	3	0	8	2	10	3	0
UC	16	13	69	12	75	28	3
Lash Miller	12	26	39	8	52	31	1
Ramsey Wright	5	11	35	6	43	11	2
SAC office	5	5	41	8	44	13	11
Innis	7	11	25	5	89	5	3
Erindale	19	37	138	0	128	73	0
Totals (at presstime)	419	693	1,744	230	1,758	1,114	181

THE Varsity TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors
Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Slotnick
Tom Walkom
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

What can you say about a newspaper that has the third largest morning masthead in Toronto? That it likes tap-dancing? That it eats yogurt? Anyway, thanks to Kathy Rowcliffe, Eleanor Simpson, Margaret Robertson, Heather Sanginis, Gilda Oran, Betsy Switt, Randy Robertson, Maurizio Caccarelli, and Janet Clarke

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Dalton Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

Faculty SDS mimics strong-arm tactics

The issue of freedom of speech reared its liberal head on campus this week.

Several members of the Students for a Democratic Society attempted to suppress talks given by American "urbanologist" Edward Banfield who has been accused of disseminating "racial theories." Most students will never know whether he does this because a small group of people took it upon themselves to prevent him from talking.

The Varsity cannot agree with the SDS tactics and strategy. It has proved to be counter-productive to the construction of a progressive student movement on campus and has only served to (incorrectly) give the left a bad name.

Banfield's first lecture was approached in the correct way strategically. He gave his talk and was then refuted intellectually by several opponents in the audience. "Neutral" students attending the lecture appeared to see through Banfield's theories when this tactic was used.

However, this wasn't enough for the SDS. They insisted that Banfield not be permitted to speak, and on the second day of his performance at U of T the SDS and their sympathizers blocked the stage in West Hall, University College.

Banfield should be exposed for his theories, but the SDS way is not the strategy to be used. We agree in principle that racist theoreticians should not be condoned but we find it impossible to believe that the SDS's thug-like tactics will convince anyone of the merit of their position.

Banfield can probably be intellectually destroyed without resorting to suppression of his views. The SDS is clearly out of line. It made more enemies than "converts" Wednesday, and it succeeded in bringing in the administration and faculty to investigate the whole affair through use of that illegitimate and outdated body, the CAPUT.

After Banfield had left University College Wednesday without being given a chance to speak, the largely student audience broke up into several groups arguing with members of the SDS.

About 25 students and professors went south to Simcoe Hall to protest the incident, with more people following, including some SDS supporters. However, the building entrance was sealed after the initial group had entered.

U of T President John Evans came out of the building to speak with students, and apologized for the proceedings. "I want to tell you how disturbed I am at the treatment of a guest of this university who was not allowed to present his views," Evans said. He added he would guarantee it would not happen again. "It is obvious all members of this university administration disapprove completely of the methods used."

Evans was next confronted by reactionary faculty members seeking to exploit the situation and increase their own power in the university. Students were used by faculty members as levers against the administration, and the faculty all-too-wittingly went along with it.

The actions of Professors Nelson, Bloom, Silcox and others are disgusting. Over-reacting as they have done many times before, these and other conservative faculty members began calling for "vigilante parties, and Evans' resignation", according to Bill Nelson, head of the faculty association.

Nelson told us yesterday Evans "had better shape up or ship out." His whole attitude presents this university with an interesting and at the same time unresolved problem. Is the purpose of the administration to protect the faculty members from students? Do faculty on this campus think they have the right to over-react in such a childish manner over the actions of a mere 20 or so individuals and then demand the president's resignation?

Evans handled the situation smoothly and coolly, while the faculty association's representatives only made themselves look extremely foolish.

The American Studies Committee

In bringing Banfield to speak at this university the American Studies Committee acted thoughtlessly and, we might as well say it, stupidly. Racism—an issue talked about on this campus since September—was not about to go away overnight and by bringing Banfield to speak at U of T a small clique of professors has caused a needless and provocative act. Even more disgusting is the fact that some of these professors used the same tactics Tuesday—violence—that they so vigorously attack students for. What hypocrisy!

President Evans spoke to students on the steps of Simcoe Hall Thursday, thereby proving the emperor does have clothes.

President Evans played a skillful mediator role Wednesday and Thursday and has, successfully we feel, diffused the issue for the present time, even if this has meant using the machinery of Caput, a body which is recognized by all "estates" of the university community to be unrepresentative of the university community and therefore illegitimate.

Unlike Bill Nelson we do not feel Evans acted too late. The SDS members—from all reports we have received—peacefully obstructed Banfield from speaking and it was faculty members, not students or the SDS who threw the punches.

Part of the small, but vocal support of certain campus political groups—principally the Revolutionary Marxist Group and the SDS—for the position of "No platform for fascists" rests with the belief that fascism is just around the corner in Canada. We think this is an over-reaction and demonstrates the paranoia of certain ideological positions. We do not perceive the conditions at the present time to be laying the groundwork for fascism, and we don't think our eyes are closed.

Through its actions—preventing Banfield to speak—the SDS has only forced students to head for the library or the bookstore to find out what Banfield's views are. So the SDS has not only enabled students to learn of Banfield through all the publicity that they mainly created, but also enabled Banfield to make money on the deal.

The faculty, for their part, have been somewhat successful in demonstrating to moderate students on this campus the "bozism" of certain political groups, the faculty has also succeeded in forcing student organizations to support the administration on this issue—it's either that or the discipline code they fear.

The Student's Administrative Council was sucked into believing the non-academic discipline code would be "taken off the shelf" and rammed through at the March 28 Governing Council meeting. All those weeks of negotiating come to naught. However, in all fairness to SAC although their statement gave away more than was necessary, there appeared to be little alternative to their actions Wednesday and Thursday.

The scene was like a giant poker game with each of the three partners in the constantly shifting alliance—faculty, students, and administration—keeping their cards close to their chests.

One thing is certain, however, everyone's a loser at the U of T.

Evans deplors Banfield incident

Professor Edward Banfield, invited to this university by the American Studies Committee for a series of lectures and seminars, was prevented from giving a lecture in the West Hall of University College yesterday afternoon. A group occupied the platform, threatened violence, and prevented Professor Banfield from speaking. I deplore what everyone in the university must view as a disgraceful infringement of the right of a member of the university or a guest to express possibly unpopular or controversial views and be assured of a fair hearing. Views can be contested rationally and reasonably, but preventing those views from being heard negates one of the essential functions and purposes of the University. I have written to Professor Banfield apologizing to him for the treatment he received as a guest in our community.

During the last five years there have been several occasions when differing opinions among groups on the campus have led to serious confrontation. Throughout this period the university has consistently attempted to provide every opportunity for the expression of such differences. Although on some occasions, one group or another has attempted to force its views upon others and prevent reasoned debate, the university has generally rejected recourse to force, even when there was significant provocation. This time the issue is clear. The right of free speech and assembly has been deliberately and purposefully attacked. It is necessary for the university to reassert its commitment to its principles and to develop effective measures to secure them.

These events highlight the major policy issues which remain to be debated and resolved in the matter of non-academic discipline and the mechanisms necessary and acceptable for maintaining order when one group on the campus acts in a way which clearly infringes the rights of others. At present the campus security forces are of a size adequate for maintaining the security of buildings, patrolling the campus, and dealing with incidents involving small numbers of people. Experience has demonstrated, however, that this force is not adequate in size for dealing with large crowds or major breaches of the peace. Nor indeed is it clear that the University community as a whole wishes to see this force expanded to a level which would permit it to assume wider police functions. Such an expansion would constitute a major departure from the traditional practice of the university in this respect.

Although the present force is not suited to coping with large crowds and cannot prevent a group of determined demonstrators from entering a building, there exists a strong feeling on the campus that Metropolitan Police should be called on the campus only as a last resort when serious danger to life or property exists. The powers which the Metropolitan Police assume when they come on the campus are clearly defined and result in their assumption of full authority to deal with any offence which has been committed. Thus in order to secure their assistance the university must surrender all control of disciplinary policy—a surrender which has in the past been resented by a majority of the university community.

Clearly the development of a situation on the campus where confrontation has changed to physical intimidation requires urgently that agreement be resolved on appropriate mechanisms to secure freedom of expression in the face of such threats. I shall raise these policy issues as a matter for immediate deliberation and action in the Governing Council. Meanwhile these discussions will be greatly facilitated if all groups in the University will give serious and sustained attention to clarifying and defining their views on the practical policy issues involved.

John Evans

Evans apologizes to Banfield

President Evans sent us a copy of his letter to Ed Banfield:

The University of Toronto regrets that your visit to us has been seriously marred by the disruption of your seminar and lecture. We firmly believe that freedom of expression of views, including views which may be unpopular, is a central function of the university.

The university does not attempt to endorse or promote the opinions of individual members of the university community or of visitors invited to the campus but we deplore the use of personal intimidation and harassment in an attempt to prevent you from presenting your views to members of the university.

May I say personally how much I regret the manner in which you have been prevented from speaking and the personal inconvenience which you have suffered.

John Evans

Banfield attack shows 'arrogance'

Believing that the organizers of the racism teach-in have exposed a serious issue, I went to hear Professor Banfield on Tuesday morning, grateful for a chance to hear him and frame my own judgment. However, because of the gross insensitivity and arrogance of a few, Professor Banfield was not only unable to deliver his prepared lecture but was heckled and harried during his replies to questions and comments. The habit of many so-called "radicals" to treat important questions as whores, objects of self-gratification to be taken up or dropped at whim, is disgusting and does little service to the society they profess to reform. What is Professor Banfield to take away from his experience here? That his research has aroused justifiable concern about the attitudes and policies it might spawn, or that a bunch of troublemakers welcomed his visit as an opportunity to make a little noise after a somewhat dull year?

Sociological, like nuclear, research has capacity for great good or evil. Its implications have to be explored clearly, carefully and honestly, and to be patiently introduced into the public consciousness. If those who disagree are encouraged into dogmatism rather than dialogue, the battle, once joined, will go to the side that can muster the most repression. Is this what we want?

In my view, what happened on Tuesday was "undue disruption". Students and faculty will have to agree on a remedy. Will we come up with one which respects both persons and opinions, or will we have to leave the field to the civil authorities? I hope it is the former.

Ed Barbeau
Department of Mathematics

SDS violates academic freedom

We the undersigned find that the actions of the students for a Democratic Society have been particularly abhorrent in that they contradict the principles of academic freedom that any university should enjoy.

We resent:

1. their process of selecting quotations from Dr. Banfield's writings, and distributing these quotations en masse as being fully representative of this man's theories.

2. that a small group of students, on March 13, physically prevented a guest scholar to this university from speaking and moreover, that the university administration remained complacent in the face of intellectual asphyxiation.

As members of an academic community we feel that this type of activity threatens our privilege of independent, critical evaluation. The disruptive actions of the Students for a Democratic Society have seriously endangered the rights of a democratic society of students. Furthermore, actions such as these often serve as fuel for certain reactionary and equally undemocratic elements within the university.

John Syrtash
Steven Scharbach
R. Brough

SDS democracy is 'hypocrisy'

With regard to Edward Banfield's appearance on, and subsequent early departure from the University of Toronto campus, I can only say the treatment accorded this man was a very sad commentary on the SDS and their following.

It is interesting to note that prior to Banfield's first session at University College this past Tuesday, the audience, which consisted of about 35 SDS followers and some 40 others listened patiently while one of the protesting group's top intellectuals (another sad commentary) outlined the racist elements in Banfield's writings. Not once was there any heckling or any attempt to prevent this self-proclaimed Banfield expert from speaking. When Banfield himself arrived however, he was in fact prevented from delivering a prepared lecture which he had come to Toronto to give, despite the fact he promised to answer the charges of racism after the lecture.

My concept of the university is a place where one goes to expand the horizons of his, or her knowledge through examining the many sides of given issues. The SDS destroyed that opportunity to learn for me and many other students this week—students, who, like myself, did not agree with Banfield, but wanted to hear him speak since no one can deny he is well known to be an expert in his field.

I have always felt that censorship of any kind on the part of government is wrong. The type of censorship the SDS and groups like it practice in preventing people such as Edward Banfield from speaking, not only makes the University of Toronto a less reputable academic institution, but insults the intelligence of its students, and reflects badly on the state of free speech in Canada.

I would suggest that the SDS might profit from choosing a new name for their bankrupt organization as soon as possible. Their concept of democracy is the greatest example of hypocrisy known to man.

John Tory
Trinity II

Letters to "Write On!" should be typed, double-spaced on a 64-character line, and signed. Contributions may be edited for space reasons. Letters are published according to space available, immediacy of topic, and relevancy. Mail letters to The Varsity, 91 St. George Street, Toronto 181 by campus or regular delivery or bring your letter to The Varsity editorial offices.

HART HOUSE ART GALLERY GROUP SHOW

On display in the Art Gallery are thirteen paintings selected by the Hart House Art Committee.

It is hoped to make a purchase from among these to add to the permanent collection on display at Hart House.

Come and choose the picture you would like to see the Art Committee buy.

GALLERY HOURS: MON., 11 AM - 9 PM
TUES. TO SAT., 11 AM - 5 PM
SUN., 2 - 5 PM

McAuley Stereo...

...the Off-Campus Coffee Shop

Enjoy a cup of coffee
for your between-lecture listening.

...we also deal in Stereo Components

McAuley Stereo

1057 Bay

(at St. Joseph)

966-3597

HILLEL Campus Residence

186 St. George Street

Now Accepting applications for the
1974-75 Academic Year

The residence is an integral part of the Hillel program. Residents are expected to join the internal leadership in the Hillel program and to be responsible for various other tasks. The residence has a capacity of eight members.

Preference will be given:

- 1) To students who have been active in Hillel and
- 2) To students who have had previous experience as members and organizers in Jewish Youth groups.

Submit applications in writing, indicating background, references and reasons for wanting to join the Residence to:

BEN MAYER, Director

BBHF

186 ST. GEORGE STREET
Toronto, Ontario
MSR 2N3

For further information without obligation to you, call any Citroën dealer or CITROËN (CANADA) LTD., 5445 Royalmont, Montreal, Quebec H3P 1J5. Tel. (514) 735-4481.

TV
CITROËN

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Prov _____

Male and female roles not innate

By HEATHER SANGUINS

Right-wing sexist anthropologists like Conrad Lorenz and Robert Ardrey are trying "to convince us paternalism and maternalism are innate," charged Charne Guettel, author of "Marxism and Feminism," Wednesday night.

Guettel stated "men and women act out different roles because they have been trained that way" by patriarchal society to serve its own ends, not through any pre-determined biological rightness.

Guettel decried the "contradictory assignment" given to women by society, that of mother and worker. Women are "trained first to be mothers, then sometime later are thrown into the work force, with many of their motherly qualities intact."

The speaker asserted the issues of the women's movement "arise from women becoming fully developed workers." This change put a dual edge on the oppression of women as they are now oppressed both in the home and in the work force.

Guettel stated the demands of the contemporary women's movement are full abortion and birth control on demand, free and universal daycare, and an end to discrimination against homosexuality and other cultural expressions of sexuality.

To ferment change women must plan their political strategy.

This organization can take any of several forms. The speaker said "mass action groups differ from political parties," but the "real unity for action is unity between mass action groups and political parties."

Guettel asserted if it were to be the sole method chosen by women "a political party simply makes us more effective gravediggers."

The speaker warned against the nature of women's organizations becoming typically feminine. She said women are conditioned to maternal "do good" activities. Until this point in the Women's Liberation Movement "Christian volunteerism was women's politics."

The speaker warned "if fascism succeeds there will be no working class to de-chauvinize."

Guettel believes the base of women-hatred in this society is the "terror of economic insecurity." Often for men "women and children are a millstone."

Women do not earn as much and children often arrive early when they interfere with a man's education and job advancement.

The speaker stated "part of the social organization to strengthen the family includes controlling sexual activity." The speaker believes the family is a trap which is necessary to control the workers in this "racist, sexist, national chauvinist society."

Guettel said Marxist psychology, unlike Freudian Psychoanalysis centers "not as much on infancy when physical needs begin," but on "late adolescence when people are being trained for jobs" in the work force.

Baldus talk bores

By ELEANOR SIMPSON

"They will go along with streaking but they won't go along with day care," was voted best line of the night by one observer at the lecture by Bernd Baldus of the U of T sociology department.

Titled "The Superstructure of the Advanced Capitalist State" and sponsored by the Committee for a Marxist Institute, Baldus' talk was an hour of tedium.

At least two of the approximately 200 listeners dozed off under the influence of Baldus' scintillating delivery.

The question period following was only slightly more inspiring, several commentators being more interested in voicing tedious Marxist rhetoric than investigating Baldus' ideas.

Actually the subject matter deserved better treatment.

The main theme was a discussion of the problems of ruling in a mature capitalist society.

After examining the prescriptive and personal aspect of rule and rulers in the feudal society, Baldus moved on to a consideration of the mechanisms available to the ruling class of capitalist society for controlling the people.

Baldus feels increasing use has been made of complimentary conditions, those in society not created specifically by the ruling class but adopted by them for their own ends.

The individual's personal adjustment to the problems created by society, an adjustment which he makes on his own with no help from the system, is also used by the ruling class, Baldus said.

Baldus' more interesting — or important — thesis was that the problems any individual has are redefined as a failure of that individual and not that of the system.

For example, poverty or the receipt of welfare has been personalized and because of this society — or the ruling class — assumes the "right to make a thorough investigation of poor peoples' personal lives to see exactly where they, not society, have fallen short."

An attempt to have Baldus discuss such "left-overs" from the prescriptive feudal system as inequities in the status of women failed as Baldus moved on to consider the increasing inability of capitalist society to deal with dissent.

Since this inability to cope with dissent finally, according to Baldus, spell doom for the feudal society, his listeners were left with the vague feeling that capitalism was on the way out too.

You don't blow an extraordinary idea on an ordinary shoe.

Sport Root in leather
(New Earth); suede
(Sahara) $33.00

Open Root in leather (New Earth, White); suede (Sahara, Blue) $23.50

By now you're probably aware that Roots are not like other kinds of footwear. The heel is lower to give you the natural kind of walk you'd get by going barefoot in sand. The arch is supported, so if you spend much time on your feet you'll now spend it in much greater comfort. The rocker sole helps spring you off on each footstep, so walking becomes a little less work than it ever was before. But a big part of Roots' success lies in not how

1052 Yonge Street
(Opposite Rosedale Subway Station)

they're made, but how well. Only the finest grade Canadian hides are selected. These are hand-crafted into Roots, simply because, for much of our production, the most efficient machine is still the human hand. This is why, of all the reasons we could give you for trying Roots, none would fit quite so well as the shoe itself.

unclassified

TARRAGON THEATRE PRESENTS...
BLITZKRIEG by Brian Wade about Eva & Hitler or Hitler and Eva - Wed.-Sun. 8:45 p.m. Sun. Matinee 2:45 at Poor Alex Theatre, Brunswick and Bloor, 920-8373 unit M18, 16.

ENGLISH SPECIALIST familiar with current academic requirements is needed for the preparation of authoritative review material, related critical analysis and precise commentaries. Please respond outlining qualifications and previous writing experience, if any, to: Jeffrey Cole, P.O. Box 585, King City, Ont.

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING?
Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674.

EXAMINERS WANTED - Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T", Toronto M6B 4A3.

QUEBEC SKI TOUR March 17-22/79 Five days of skiing at Mt. St. Anne. All transportation and excellent accommodation included. For information write Canadian Ski Tours, 25 Taylorwood Dr., Inlington or phone Gordon Allan 247-2339.

LOST: WOMAN'S GLASSES in turquoise case, early Feb. on campus. Reward. Phone 961-2975.

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglington), Suite 4 757-0621

REWARD: for the return of a black leather briefcase accidentally taken from the University Textbook store March 5. Notebooks desperately needed. Please contact Joanne Hunter 783-5672

2 TICKETS TO LONDON one way before March 17. Not a chartered flight. Reasonable 536-0919

FACTORY THEATRE LAB presents "SPACES" by Dennis Hayes at Bathurst St. - United Church, 736 Bathurst St. (Lennox St. entrance) Tues-Sat. 9:00 p.m. Sun. 2:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. Reservations 921-5989 Runs to March 24

ESSAYS AND THESIS. We can solve your headaches. We'll type your essays & thesis and deliver to you promptly. The rates are very reasonable. Call day or night. 439-6412

1966 CORVAIR MONZA; 4 door hardtop, 48,000 original miles, radio, in good condition, $450 or best offer. Phone 466-1255

ESSAY EDITOR. Do you want "A" on your essay? I can help you present your ideas more clearly, more relevantly. Just edited a PhD dissertation. Have M.A. in writing. Essays from $5. Call evgs. 932-9345.

HARPSICHORDS MADE using historic principles for reasonable prices. Several models available. George Haeh 920-8841.

WHY FREEZE? Used furs from $10., new from $99. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets, Muskrat, Raccoon, Rabbit etc., EXCELLENT SELECTION. Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGDER FURS 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077. Open Thurs., Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO - TORONTO'S SUMMER RUSSIAN WORKSHOP. (June 17 to August 9, 1974) offers an intensive Russian programme (for undergraduates and graduates). Three credit courses; five non-credit courses; language-oriented extra-curricular activities. Tuition fee $200. Bursaries available. Contact: Executive Director, Summer Russian Workshop, University of Toronto, 100 St. George, Room 5024 - Toronto M5S 1A1.

FURNISHED ROOM & BALCONY; share studios, congenial, well-furnished house; 25 min. TTC to Univ.; 1/2 blk. east of High Park; $80., Apr. 1, 532-9371.

TYPING OF THESES, ESSAYS in English, French, Spanish, German by professional secretary, IBM Selectric. 368-9001 days, 231-4919 evgs

T.G.I.F. GROUP THERAPY in the Gallery Club, Hart House 5 - 8 p.m.

THESIS BINDING expertly bound. Just 2 blocks from U of T. One day special service. Phone 535-4923, leave message. Campus Bindery, 181 Harbord St., Toronto to 4

A SMALL BRONZE PLAQUE inviting worshippers to pray for the house and its members has been removed from the Hart House Chapel. Anyone knowing the whereabouts of this plaque is asked to return it to the Chapel

LOST: GOLD FISH SHAPED BROACH on St. George St. between Women's Union & Roberts Reward Finder contact A. Clenser at 928-2289 or 924-8851.

Custom-made fade

Wrangler Fades
Remember the Wrangler

review

Ten Lost Years discovery of superb social history

Ten Lost Years: 1929-1939:
Memories of Canadians who survived the Depression;
Doubleday; $9.95

Barry Broadfoot's book consists almost entirely of excerpts from interviews he conducted with people who remember the Depression. The people speak for themselves: Broadfoot has edited them and organized them under various headings, added brief explanatory paragraphs, and included a number of pictures.

The approach is a success, without question. Ten Lost Years is a superb work, presenting a vivid and unforgettable picture of that unbelievable decade. For those who lived through that time, it will be a poignant reminder of their own experiences, as well as a source of deepened understanding of how others fared. For those of us who were born after the Depression, it is a magnificent piece of social history that brings to life a crucial period in our parents' past.

The Depression was not a time of universal poverty — rather, many lost everything or almost everything, while others continued as well-off, or better, than before. It was a time of grotesque inequality, not of equal suffering, as Canadians who named their "Bennett buggies" after the millionaire prime minister, were only too aware.

Broadfoot deals with the rich and the reasonably secure as well as the starving and destitute; accounts of people staying at the Ritz while they acquire a house and hire servants are juxtaposed with stories of men fainting from lack of food and women becoming prostitutes to support themselves.

Nor is it an unrelieved tale of gloom. Canadians showed plenty of courage, pride and determination to find humour in all the disaster, and that too comes across.

Fascinating, too, is the combination of acceptance and despair, or rebelliousness and anger, that characterized the response of different people to a disaster that was not caused primarily by natural calamity, but by the collapse of capitalism. While there was no revolution, there were plenty of indications that people were being pushed to the brink, like the On to Ottawa Trek, the Vancouver riots, the seething work camps, the attacks on landlords who tried to evict penniless tenants.

But the people speak best for themselves. Section headings are a good indication of the book's range; they include Government Relief Camps — They Treated Us Like Dirt; Employers Could Pick and Choose; Pride — A Commodity in Generous Supply; Dishonesty? Just a Word for Survival; Home-Made Entertainment; Kids; They Didn't Consider Indians People; It Gave Politicians More to Louse Up; So Many Problems and So Many Bureaucrats; Bankers and Business Walked Hand in Hand; The Rosy Pictures of The Timid Press; Law and Order; 1939 — Lining Up to Die.

A few excerpts:

"Look at it this way. Say, on July 1, 1930, Steve still had a business and a fine house in Burlington and a nice wife. By January 1, six months later, he's zilch. Living in the basement in his own house and his wife is the maid upstairs and the cook."

A Bennett buggy:

"I curse Bennett a thousand times, even today. I will do it until I die."

"The kids were playing road hockey out in front and my mother said, 'Jamie, go out now and play. You've got to go out and face them sometime.' I went out and began to bat around with them and one kid spotted those L'il Abners and yelled 'Relief boots. Jamie's got relief boots.' and everybody laughed. A couple of others made smart remarks, and the first time we were scrimmaging with the ball I gave the first guy a swift kick in the shins. The two other guys got it shortly after, and there were three guys sitting on the curb holding their ankles and shins and crying. No one laughed at my boots again."

"I know one family which lost three children from hunger. Lack of food, malnutrition, then diarrhea which they couldn't fight because they were so weak — and to me that is dying of starvation. They were my sister's kids, and every day if Bennett is in hell I curse him a thousand times, even today, and if he is in heaven, I curse him a thousand times and wish he was in hell. I will do it until I die."

sarah rothschild

FANTASTIC PLANET

Starts FRIDAY

March 15 cont. from 5:00
March 16 to 24 cont. from 1:30

cinécité
TONGUE AT CHARLES • 922-1234

SAC Presents on Friday, March 15th

WINNER OF 2 ACADEMY AWARDS!

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR
— JOHN MILLS
BEST CINEMATOGRAPHY

"★★★★ A MASTERPIECE!
A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE!"
Wanda Hale, New York Daily Mirror

David Lean's
Film of
Ryan's Daughter

Starring
ROBERT MITCHELL • TREVOR HOWARD
CHRISTOPHER JONES
JOHN MILLS • LEO McKERN and SARAH MILLS
VICTOR COOK and SUZY MARSDEN NOW

at 7:00 & 10:00

Only 95¢

Med. Sci. Auditorium

Hoechst thinks ahead

Ideas: The spark we run on

Hoechst develops a constant stream of new ideas to keep its research pointed in the right directions. Ideas about what is needed, ideas about what is wanted, ideas about what is possible, ideas about what is probable in the light of a constantly changing, ever-increasing body of basic knowledge.

Imagination steers the ship

Imagination is a prime source of the new ideas Hoechst uses constantly in order to keep developing better products — more effective medicines, better chemical and industrial materials. Imagination is only half the battle, but when good ideas are properly teamed with the discipline of applied research, they constitute a formidable force in the search for improved products in every area of modern life.

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world: in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organizations Canadian Hoechst Limited has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, printing plates, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst products and services, Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. Hoechst thinks ahead.

REG. TM. HOECHST
HOECHST

Canadian Hoechst Limited
4045 Côte Vertu
Montreal 383, Quebec

40 Lesmill Road
Don Mills, Ontario

Stop the Press: Waffle to save Canada

Canada Ltd.
ed. by Jim Laxer
McClelland and Stewart, $3.95

Canada Ltd. is a book that could mark the beginning of a new school of neo-Marxist analysis of Canadian dependency, or it could become the forgotten warning of a growing American hegemony impossible to halt.

The latter fate might be closer to the truth. Many Canadians seem to lack concern for American control and its satellite status for Canada. For the Waffle it has been a long road from the idealistic days of the 1969 Winnipeg manifesto "For an Independent Socialist Canada."

The Waffle has now decided to form an independent political party for a socialist alternative to the NDP. Yet only two years ago they worked within the NDP. Jim Laxer, a key figure in the Waffle, ran against David Lewis and finished a respectable second in the race for leader of a party the Waffle now discounts as a progressive force in Canada.

One of the questions Canada Ltd. raises is why the Waffle did not arrive at this analysis earlier. Why was it in the NDP if it was truly socialist?

I remember the heady days of the 1971 Ottawa NDP convention. Chants of "power to the people" and an explicitly socialist platform won for the Waffle almost one third of the convention's loyal support. There was a standing ovation when we passed the last remaining contender, John Harney, to do battle with David Lewis, the party establishment's candidate.

But the jubilation of the Waffle caucus after the convention was to give way to a bitter death struggle in Ontario, the base for Waffle support. Lewis had the perfect hatchet man, his son Stephen, and the Waffle was removed from the NDP at Orillia in 1972.

Since then, free from the stifling limitations of the social democratic NDP platform, the Waffle has tried to carve out a niche on the Canadian political spectrum through a left wing analysis of Canada's dominated position as part of the American Empire.

However, their success has so far been limited. As a Waffler I must admit we are still a small troupe in terms of membership and grass roots support. That is no reason for giving up but it does mean the Waffle has to think seriously about a strategy to allow it to reach out from its base of left-wing students and academics.

The Waffle labor caucus and the women's caucus are a start. And Wafflers have also demonstrated they are not purely theoreticians with their loyal support of the brutal Artistic Woodwork picket line last fall.

Canada Ltd. is one way the Waffle can try to broaden its base through conveying its views to a wider segment of the population. In what has to be one of the best and most comprehensive analysis of Canada from a socialist viewpoint Mel Watkins, Jim Laxer, John Hutchison and others cover a wide variety of aspects of the political economy of Canadian dependence.

There has been a deplorable lack of intelligent analysis of the Canadian situation from a socialist perspective. The NDP - CCF literature is mostly social democratic and rather moralistic in tone. The writings of the Communist party have always been tainted by that party's close connection with the Soviet Union. There have also been Trotskyite tracts, but they too have been limited by their rather limited vanguardist perspective. Canada Ltd. is an attempt to use the critical neo-Marxist perspective of socialist authors such as Baran and Sweezy to analyze the political economy of Canadian dependence.

The Waffle too have their biases, some of which may narrow their analytic viewpoint. The most contentious part of the Waffle platform is their nationalism and how it relates to their socialism. Nationalism, for many international Marxists, has become a concept relegated to bourgeois independence movements. Yet most of the truly great socialist movements were nationalist, notably the Chinese and Cuban Communist parties.

So for the Waffle to say to independentists, socialism is the only way to independence, does not appear to me as a contradiction. Wafflers are not embracing a national chauvinist position such as the

Any mass based left-wing party must spend a good deal of time in the "wilderness" building its strength and clarifying its analysis before it can claim popular support.

Laxer's fault is the same complaint I have about the Waffle. A small group by our own admission, we are already committed to forming a party when the base of support is just not there.

The analysis is good. But work for independence and socialism must proceed through extra-parliamentary struggles and through education and struggles in the work place.

It is pre-mature in my view to set up a party when the Waffle is still a small group of leftists. The conditions are not yet ripe. The Waffle has no doubt alienated many independent leftists by its premature move. Alliances not parties are needed. The left should join together, not fragment.

The analysis in the book is quite strong. It sums up a largely unpublicized current of Canadian thought in a reasonable way. While not advancing any new theories to co-exist with the NDP. At times the NDP's left wing has been socialist. Now it is not. It should probably stay that way.

Hutchison delivers two good pieces of analysis of the capitalist class and social class in Canada, clearly using a Marxist framework to look at the power structure of Canadian society.

The essay by Christina Hill reiterates the now familiar story of how women are oppressed in the work force and how they are dominated as an under class in Canadian society. She hopes for links between the women's movement and socialist movements but admits this has not worked effectively yet.

Jim Laxer contributes several essays, the most interesting on a process most Canadians are unaware of, de-industrialization. From what is obviously exhaustive research, Laxer demonstrates how the American empire is de-industrializing Canada, reducing us to hewers of wood and drawers of water.

No new industrial jobs have been created in the last few years and with the support of the American Labor movement,

In 1926 the only car a Canadian could buy was a Ford. Poor Canadian. . .

Canadian Liberation Movement. But there still arises the question of looking at Canada in isolation from the American socialist movements.

Canada Ltd. attempts to come to grips with some of these points. It is by no means perfect, but for an anthology it is remarkably consistent.

It covers familiar territory for any observer of the Canadian political scene — subjects like the de-industrialization of Canada, the resource sell-out, social class in Canada, women in the Canadian economy and a historical view of the Canadian capitalist class.

We might expect a pendant and unreadable collection from this list of academics and guest lecturers. Fortunately this does not happen. Surprisingly for the quick assembly time, the essays are well written and easy to understand for any reader, whatever his background.

The forward is the part I quarrel with the most. Robert Laxer, a U of T professor and former Communist Party member, who edited the collection, presents the weakest arguments in the book when he argues a Gallup poll shows Canadians are ready for a policy of wholesale nationalization. This is just not realistic.

most authors do a good job of covering their assigned fields.

Watkins writes the best essay with a strong well-argued attack on business unionism and the domination of Canadian trade unions by their American parents. Unlike the early years of the Waffle there is an unambiguous condemnation of reactionary international unions, while not seeing the independent Canadian union movement as a panacea.

John Smart effectively sums up the history of socialist and populist movements in Canada articulating the telling critique of the NDP and social democracy that ultimately led to the expulsion of the Waffle. The question he naturally avoids is: are the Waffle left wing social democrats or are they Marxists. I don't have a ready answer though I think the Waffle's chief theoreticians now consistently put their views in a Marxist or neoMarxist framework.

The NDP has always been committed to nothing more than modifying capitalism. They are little more than liberals in a hurry. Yet the socialist tradition in Canada seems woven with the NDP, as it has swung from left to right. It has always been difficult for explicitly socialist parties to try the metropolitan power, the US, is bringing the jobs home and closing down branch plants in Canada in response to the protectionism of Nixonomics.

Mel Watkins concludes the book with an impassioned but reasoned call for socialist movement for Canadian independence. He argues persuasively that the potential for an anti-imperialist alliance between workers in English and French Canada in the next few years will increase with the increasing Americanization of the economy and de-industrialization.

He sees the ultimate enemy, correctly, to be American imperialism and sees the Canadian capitalist class junior partners to their US counterparts. Socialism, Watkins argues, is the only real means for liberation and is only attainable through a socialist party with a mass working class base, ready to struggle with all means available to it.

Canada Ltd. leaves me with many questions. Clearly this is a good beginning toward a neo-Marxist analysis of Canada.

But it doesn't go into enough detail on particular subjects as a collection of essays. I would like to see some of the better essays expanded into books. The political analysis is quite competent. Few alternatives are proposed but then the main task is to build the struggle against the capitalist state not to draw the blueprints when we haven't even won the war.

Mel concludes strongly:

"We need a socialist party that would have a correct conception of the nature of the state under capitalism and under socialism, the state in capitalist society is a capitalist state. Therefore, simply to take control of the state will never be sufficient, for the state must be radically transformed as part and parcel of the transformation of capitalism."

To achieve socialism for Watkins would mean "to release the creative energies of the people. We could then begin to move to that humane and democratic society where working people themselves will control the conditions they work under. Then work, rather than being the oppression it now is, would become an expression of our humanity."

I'm waiting Mel. . .

Bob Bellson
Canada Ltd.
McClelland and Stewart
$3.95 271 pages ph.
The Variety 9

But in 1974 he can choose a car from Ford or General Motors or American Motors or Chrysler: Lucky Canadian!

Spaces fills a definite void

Spaces, created and directed by Dennis Hayes for Factory Lab Theatre, is now playing at the Bathurst United Church through March 24, and comes to you highly recommended. The show, while examining its own themes, also reaches toward new explorations in theatre. It is highly influenced by Beckett, using repetition and understatement as major motivating forces. Brecht, too, plays a significant role in the string of alienation devices employed, such as third person dialogue and onomatopoeic explanations. However, both playwrights are transfigured by Hayes to his own ends.

Spaces opens on three separate platforms, each occupied by a tramp (a man flanked by two women). They first carefully define their own "space", before moving out towards the others. Once their territory is well-defined, they try to define themselves. A noticeable schism in their existence is the space between the sensual level of the world and the spiritual level of their dreams, past and future. Sensuality vulgarizes the spiritual, as is made clear in their darkly humorous narration of the Crucifixion in which "J.C. gets his ass kicked up a hill".

Music may act as a bridge between the two disparate worlds. It comprises much of the imagery. Much of the dialogue is musical in origin: poetry, jazz "scat," and country and western or folk ditties. Each of the three characters treasures a tangible commodity musical in nature. Crazy Annie carries old sheet music in her "goodies" bag; White Lips hugs a lacquered music box; and Dan plays the harmonica. Music is an escape, but not an escape. Music, like the wine they drink, like religious frenzy, may lead to abandonment and forgetfulness or to introspection.

It is religion that becomes the major exponent of the play, seeming to explode suddenly from nowhere. Having pursued a male/female love scene, the result of brutality, the two women turn to each other in a very soft and sacred scene. Crazy Annie begins by feeding White Lips, ending in an embrace with both women humming softly. Dan is outside their happiness, watching, commenting. He offers them food and drink, which they finally accept: bread and wine. As an audience member, one's mind filters back to that previous scene, the narration of Christ's Crucifixion and feels a powerful religious sympathy with the characters. In the end, one wryly smiles and says "Very neatly done". There are many images and themes in Spaces, no direct message or pointed attack. You may glean from it whatever you wish.

Cast of Spaces turns in powerful and moving performances.

Another plus in this production is the cast. Cheryl Cashman (White Lips), Suzanne Turnbull (Crazy Annie), and Paul Kelman (Glitter Dan), all turn in powerful and moving performances, with great stage awareness and marvelous attention to detail. To them and to their director, congratulations from a reviewer who has seen little to commend this year in Toronto. As another bonus, Brian Furlott's music, an experiment in percussion instruments, is wonderfully subtle, highlighting and enriching the production.

Spaces is the kind of theatre we should see more of in Toronto. It's experimental, exciting, and expansive, breathing new life into what has been, for the most part, a very dull, if not bad, season. Feel the schism between lively and deadly theatre for yourself, see Spaces.

debby nathan

VIC Elections

Nominations for positions of VUSAC executive and VIC SAC reps. open until MAR. 15.

Forms available at VUSAC office

ELECTION DATE: MAR. 21

Centre for the Study of Drama
HART HOUSE THEATRE

Merrill Denison's

MARSH HAY

Thur. March 21 to Sat. March 30 at 8:30
Box Office now open 10:00 to 6:00
928-8688

EQUINOX - Tuesday, March 26, 1974

AN EVENING FOR EVERYONE - Admission FREE AT HART HOUSE

Listen to the Faculty of Music's Brass Choir and String Quartet.

Take a tour of the Hart House Art Collection and catch the opening of the Toronto Dominion Travelling Exhibit of Eskimo Sculpture.

See "Garbage" the U. of T. Film Board's production.

Watch a Lacrosse game or the Squash Racquets finals or try to improve your golf swing at the Athletic Wing.

Eat, drink and dance to the sounds of the steel band "Syncona".

SEE YOU AT HART HOUSE - 6:00 P.M. ON

"I want all of you to take a real long look at me. That shouldn't be any hardship because I'm handsome. Moreover, I have a penetrating wit, a fanciful imagination, and my eyes are bluer than Paul Newman's."

JON VOIGHT IS CONRACK
One beautiful man. His story is true.

20th Century Fox presents A MARTIN RITT/IRVING RAVETCH PRODUCTION
PAUL WINFIELD and HUME CRONIN
Also starring Directed by MARTIN RITT Produced by MARTIN RITT and HARRIET FRANK, JR.
Screenplay by IRVING RAVETCH and HARRIET FRANK, JR. Based on the book The Winner is Wide by PAT CONROY Music JOHN WILLIAMS PANAVISION® COLOR BY DELUXE®

STARTS TODAY!

MAR. 15TH

DAILY 2:00
3:50 - 5:45
7:35 - 9:30

TOWNE CINEMA

BLOOR YONGE SUBWAY • 924 2600

STUDENTS!

INTERESTED IN SUMMER EMPLOYMENT WITH VARIETY?

CALL

Kelly Girl

Join the thousands of students who enjoy the variety we can provide in summer employment. We need students with banking experience, office and clerical skills, to cover the many job openings that occur each summer.

If you enjoy meeting people and have a will to learn, call and discuss our teller training program. We will train you at our expense for summer work.

Should you be available for work now, don't wait for Summer — call and talk to us.

Kelly Girl

967-6655 Downtown
236-2318 West Toronto
449-2932 Scarborough
638-6680 Downsview
(416) 525-9420 Hamilton

Smoked meat flaccidity, ghetto glitz, — humanity

One of the most radical and influential playwrights to have emerged from the modern Quebec theatre scene, Michel Tremblay has already power-housed his way to recognition in Toronto with productions of A Toi Pour Toujours, Ta Marie-Lou (Forever Yours, Marie-Lou) and Les Belles Soeurs. Another Tremblay play Montreal Smoked Meat (En pièces détachées) is currently being performed by The New Theatre, Bathurst United Church.

Montreal Smoked Meat is the vulgarized English translation of a French title which manages to both define the form of the play and create a subtle illusion to the state of its people. The English title refers explicitly to the greasy-spoon snack-bar on Papineau where Helen, the central character, slings pastrami sandwiches and other endless short-order monotonies but it also becomes a kind of macabre pop-art reference to the ghetto reduction, the smoked-meat flaccidity, of humanity in Montreal's squalid east end. What the English title asserts with hamstrung brutality the French evokes with the passionate concern of an inside viewpoint, perhaps a typical dichotomy of the two cultures.

The first act of the play is a selection of sketches depicting a tenement neighbourhood, Helen's origin, a delicatessen, her purgatorial nemesis, a bar, the savage haven from which she is ousted, and finally her home. Populated by an invalid moronic husband, a placid neurotic daughter, and a self-vindicating mother, it is a hell-on-earth if ever there was one. And Helene herself has deteriorated from the flashy, devil-may-care newlywed, gossiped about in the opening sequence, to the hardened, alcoholic waitress of many futureless years later.

Although sustaining a harsh and uncompromising viewpoint of these people, the play offers relief not in content but in form. The naturalistic depictions of the back-stoop, shabby living-room, vinyl restaurant and glitzy bar environments are constantly enlivened by a fast-paced, incredibly precise dialogue (the talents of the script) which takes the banalities of working communication and turns them into expressive choral poems. For instance, the stream of restaurant short-orders is suddenly isolated by a waitress trio who shout out the words together, building them into a harsh, rhythmic crescendo.

The second half of the play unfortunately departs from the quick scenes of the first part and gives us two rather long drawn-

Montreal Smoked Meat: harsh naturalism, and banalities turned into choral poems out scenes of Helen's drunken home-coming and the eerie, but temporary, return of the brother Claude from a fifteen year sojourn in a mental hospital. These secondary lengthier sequences seem incongruous considering the style and expectations of the initial structures of the play. Although more explicit characterizations are developed, particularly by Irene Hogan as the mother and John Friesen as the mentally-ill Claude, they do not seem necessary. The message was coming across loud and clear and these more penetrating studies of a family maelstrom enervate with their mire, rather than enlighten.

Even so, there are some powerful images in the final scenes — the family dressed in white sheets to placate Claude who loves white, the family tableau with its choric chant "I can't do anything anymore", and the portrait of Claude, dressed all in white, with his manic "I can do anything", as the play's punctuation mark.

Lacking the dramatic sophistication of Les Belles Soeurs and the interactive tension of A Toi Pour Toujours, Ta Marie-Lou, this latest contribution nevertheless gives fresh, fascinating interpretations of a Quebec life about which we need to know more.

Sandra Souchotte

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55%...

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer. Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MARK II 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	149.00

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers. Vanquieur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity Vanquieur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow

THIS FOLDING BIKE

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW	159.00
SU MAYE, SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS	112.00
VISTA 10 SPEED	149.00
WING HUT MEN OR LADIES 10 SPEED	97.00
WING HUT SAFETY LEVER 10 SPEED	97.00
MODENA SAFETY LEVER CHROME, QUICK RELEASE	159.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1 10 SPEED	112.00
ALUMINUM FRAME, PINLESS SAFETY LEVER, QUICK RELEASE WITH CHROME FORK, CAMPANOLO DERAILLEUR 10 SPEED	195.00
	127.00

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dynamo electric lighting with generator, back carrier, padded seat, chrome chain guard, and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

- give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept charges.

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario

Phone: 749-6171

Your ChargeX card is accepted

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #36C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

Heroines for feminists: non-stereotyped and Canadian

Feminists will be pleased with Jean Johnston's recent book — a collection of eight biographies of forgotten Canadian women who led lives filled with tremendous physical and emotional trials. Hunger, fatigue and fear were no strangers to them. Jeanne Mance, Amelia Douglas, Charlotte Selina Bompas, Martha Black, Molly Brant. Most of them are forgotten people today, but their lives serve as excellent examples of the type of dedicated women who contributed so much to this country.

Unfortunately the author has made a poor start to an otherwise excellent book, in choosing Gudrid the Viking woman as her first biography. Gudrid, although a key member of the expedition to Vinland and childhood friend to the sons of Erik the Red, remains a vague and shadowy creation, partly because the only details available are from Norse saga and partly because the distant past of 1007 A.D. is beyond the author's ability to reconstruct with any degree of realism.

The second biography shares the same faults. Little is known about Marguerite de Roberval, "the only person whose behavior was heroic during the whole ill-managed, ill-tempered expedition to Canada led by Jacques Cartier in 1541". She did not sail with Cartier that spring but followed the next year under the command of her uncle Sieur de Roberval. During the voyage a young man courted her and her uncle's ire knew no bounds. He ordered her abandoned along with the young man and an elderly servant on a deserted island off the north-east coast of Newfoundland. History records little of what happened to Marguerite after her rescue and return to France. Johnston attempts to improvise the missing details and what results is most awkward and unbelievably coy.

Aside from some jarring attempts to fill in historical gaps and an unfortunate attempt to link each story to the next one where no real link exists except in the author's mind, Johnston's book makes good reading. Her research is accurate, her style is generally light and imaginative, and her descriptions of the countryside these wilderness women encountered are vividly reconstructed.

Johnston travelled across the country in 1962 on a Canada Council grant, researching much of the material in her book. She is no stranger to literary circles. A regular contributor to a wide range of newspapers and magazines, she got her start many years ago as woman's editor of the Varsity.

Her writing is entertaining and consistent in quality when she has enough historical data to work from. Johnston hits her stride in the last three biographies of the book. They combine the right blend of historical insight, richness of detail and writer's magic. Amelia Conolly, the Melis woman who became Lady Douglas; Charlotte Selina Bompas, a clergyman's wife, ministering to the Indians of the north; and Martha Black,

Emily Pankhurst, yes. But Canadian women suffered too — for women and for Canada.

Canada's second woman M.P. are excellent examples of non-stereotyped role models long needed to inspire and encourage young Canadian women.

WILDERNESS WOMEN: Canada's Forgotten History
Peter Martin Associates
$8.95 (HB)

lee palmer

Southern Comfort: it's the only way to travel.

Join the fun on the S.S. Southern Comfort. The party takes off any night and the only baggage you need is some Southern Comfort, ice, and mix.
See you on the levee.

Arrivals from the South:

Cold Comfort

Pour 1½ ounces of Southern Comfort over crushed ice. Add a twist of lemon.

Comfort Screwdriver

Pour 1½ ounces of Southern Comfort over ice. Top up with orange juice.

Comfort Collins

Mix 1½ ounces of Southern Comfort with the juice of a quarter of a lime. Add some ice. Fill the glass with lemon-lime drink.

Try these, too:

Comfort 'n' Cola,
Comfort and Tonic,
Comfort Daiquiri, etc., etc.

THE ULTIMATE EXPERIENCE

STARTS FRIDAY
MARCH 15

Cinemalumière
290 COLLEGE ST. AT SPADINA, 920 9817

daily: 2:30, 4:45,
7:00 and 9:15

Victoria College Drama Club
presents

ARKANSAS

a play by David Aitken

Mar. 20, 21, 22

U.C. Playhouse

1:15 p.m.

admission free

WE'RE WHELMED

We've never had a speaker sale before, and frankly, we didn't realize that the response would be so favourable.

Our policy has always been to spend as much time as necessary with each customer, answer his questions, and give him time to listen, and compare. Buying audio equipment is serious business, and we don't like to rush.

No matter how many other customers are waiting.

So if you visited us recently, and were frustrated by the seething mass of humanity, take heart.

THE RING-EPI SALE
FEATURING EPI LOUDSPEAKERS
EXTENDED UNTILL MARCH 16

921-3500 RING 629 SPADINA

Women's Work

Female teachers are 'taught' their place

Sybil Shack: The Two Thirds Minority: Women In Canadian Education.

Guidance Centre, Faculty of Education, University of Toronto. Paperback $2.75. 128 pp.

"I am not sure at what point in my life I first became consciously aware of the fact that being male was of greater value than being intelligent and that being female in certain situations automatically called for being in second place."

In her book on women teachers noted Canadian educator Sybil Shack begins with her own experiences — under the guidance of teachers, most of them women, becoming a teacher, being a woman not a man in the educational system, changing from a callow and ignorant teacher to a professional sometimes still ignorant.

She claims that many qualities which are labelled feminine help make good teachers. The very characteristics which prevent women from seeking or accepting their share of leadership, worked miracles with children. "Girls had to find some other way of winning the respect and support of their pupils. Because they lacked physical strength and male oriented authority, they had to rely upon reason, affection, persuasion and motivation."

An Alberta school inspector once reported: "Two years experience has convinced me that in the rural districts, we get better service from the women than from me. Not but we have male teachers doing good work, but the salary is such that the young man who is content with it generally lacks in one or all three of the G's — Go, Grit and Gumption."

The three G's — Go, Grit, Gumption. Men have them. Male teachers content with low salaries are females. And female teachers, they're females too.

Women obviously had all three and a fourth — Gentleness.

Shack paints a very vivid picture of her experiences in the field — women constantly underestimating themselves, women always deferring to men, women working harder and quieter, women being paid lower salaries.

Despite the fact that the book is a biographical account of her experiences in the teaching profession, you get a very accurate perspective of all the psychological warfare that goes on to ensure that women are not too aggressive or ambitious.

Men use teaching as a stepping stone to other careers — in other words the investment of time during which they can save to go to law, medical, business school. Women usually use teaching as a prelude to marriage.

Shack feels that many women teachers, particularly in elementary schools have thought of themselves as teachers before they were ready and the educational system had dead-ended many thousands of capable women by convincing them that they did not need more training or did not have to do better or be more ambitious.

Shack agrees that women have inherited the primary school because no one else wanted it, but she thinks that as a result women teachers have brought to it a kind of concern that does not exist anywhere else in the school system. They now have a strong sense of professionalism and determination to know as much as can be learned about children and how they learn.

Secondary schools, which belong to male teachers, need a feminizing influence. The absence of women teachers in secondary schools is explained by the fact that not as many women have degrees.

Women students are very rarely counselled to take sciences and mathematics, and very few role models are available to them. "Girl students are left with the impression that women teachers are not good enough for the high schools and so their opinion of themselves as young women is affected."

Throughout the book Shack says that women teachers have more insight and are more concerned about their pupils, and their classrooms have interesting decorations and are neater. Male teachers, on the other hand, are more concerned about their own status.

"We are very rarely encouraged to raise our qualifications. (why bother your pretty little head about that kind of thing?) because if we do we will price ourselves out of the market; we know our priorities and direct command is not one of them; we have learned to manipulate rather than lead. In short, we know our place." Shack states that this is also true for university women. She challenges women teachers to demand and accept more responsibility and training, to take power into their own hands.

The Two Thirds Minority also discusses innovative teaching, the other women such as nurses and guidance counsellors who are also involved in education.

The main limitation of Shack's analysis is that it does not go far enough. She does not ask the following questions. Why does sexism exist? Where did it come from? How does it relate to other forms of oppression? How does it function to keep men and women in their roles? In order to eliminate sexism it is necessary to understand what it is and how it operates.

To Shack it seems that equal opportunity to power positions is all that is necessary to achieve women's liberation. The point should be not to accept the same power structures and forms of relations that men have to put up with, but to change all that.

As a result of not coming to terms with some of the more fundamental questions, we are left with a strategy of women fighting for authority positions. It is not that that fight for equal opportunity is not important, but rather that it must accompany the fight for other things such as daycare, maternity benefits, pension plans, student teacher ratio etc.

Despite the book's limitation, it is extremely interesting. It is one of the few recent books that delve into the day-to-day life of a woman professional.

celia ramkhalawansingh

Women teachers find fulfillment in marriage not in teaching. Look who's smiling.

Women teachers belong in primary schools: they're not good enough for high schools.

"Mammy!" — it's Joan not Jolson

Joan Sutherland: "Songs My Mother Taught Me"
Richard Bonyng, New Philharmonic Orchestra
London OS26367, $6.98

There's only one Sutherland to opera buffs, but on this new record, the great Joan gives us a musical portrayal of another — her mother. Not quite accidentally, Dvorak also had a love for his mammy, and wrote a tune called "Songs My Mother Taught Me" which serves as the lead cut and title of this new album.

The selections on this disc were actually sung when Joan was a wee tyke. Muriel Sutherland had a "phenomenal voice" in her daughter's words, but never went on to become a star, preferring to sing for her own pleasure. Some of these songs come from the music hall, some from the pens of Mendelssohn and Gounod, but all are delightfully sung. If it's not valuable for any other reason, the record is a fascinating look at tastes in music in the early part of the century.

Opera Singers have mothers too.

There was an emphasis on art songs, operatic arias, but nothing too demanding or strident. The sort of melodious stuff that hangs at the backs of all our memories is what made up Joan's past. Of course, there's no point in making giggling criticism about the quality of singing. Sutherland is the world's greatest living soprano, although she adds in the liner notes that she started out as a mezzo; we're all luckier for the change.

Not a terribly profound disc, then, but one that have been delightful for Sutherland and her conductor-husband Bonyng to produce. That enjoyment shines through the music, rounding off a delightful vocal souvenir.

dave basskin

From the bordello, the bar, and the poolroom — to you

Scott Joplin: The Red Back Book
New England Conservatory
Ragtime Ensemble
Gunter Schuller, conductor
Angel S-36060, $6.98

If you've been following the trends in the classical field of late, you'll have noticed a "new" composer. Scott Joplin, a black American who rose to the top of the heap in the brief period at the turn of the century when "ragtime" music was undergoing a craze of unprecedented magnitude. Nothing like it had ever hit the country before.

Ragtime was the bastard offspring of black music and European traditions, brought together in the congenial atmosphere of the bordello, the bar and the poolroom. With no rhythm section at hand, the piano man had to make do, so the left hand subbed for the absent drummer and bass player. The first and third beats of the bar pounded out a heavy, low bass note, filling in a chord on the off-beats. The right hand made up the melody in "ragged time", hence the name.

Joplin wasn't the first of the ragtime composers, and he may have not been the best, but he certainly was the best who ever wrote down his own material. The 1899 publication of the "Maple Leaf Rag" made his name world-famous. His collaboration with white St. Louis publisher John Stark took his works around the globe, yet when the craze broke after the war, he fell from public favour and soon died.

Two years ago, a young American musicologist named Joshua Rifkin set the music world on its ear with a stunning disc of Joplin Rags (Nonesuch H-71248) which sounded almost dreamy and reverent compared to the image usually associated with rags — fast, flashy, and foolish. He was primarily responsible for the current interest in Joplin's music, and the Nonesuch record is still worth having.

Around the turn of the century, before radio or mass entertainment, every town had a band or small group of one sort or another to play the popular tunes of the day. Anything and everything from Bach to Gilbert and Sullivan was arranged, and Joplin's rags were always popular. Recently, the music was rediscovered and played by the New England Conservatory Ragtime Ensemble, conducted by Gunter Schuller, composer, conductor and jazz historian. These orchestrated rags set the pattern for jazz for many years to come, with their irresistible melodies and strong harmonic progressions. The arrangements were sparkling and crisp, and their popularity, both then and now is easily understood once this fine new recording is heard.

The new Redford-Newman movie "The Sting" uses an orchestrated rag called "The Entertainer" as its theme, and its unforgettable tune is played marvellously on this disc. I defy anyone to keep from smiling or dancing when this record is one — it's just that good. The recording, obviously a rush job, was done in two days, and it shows, with sloppy takes and missed notes, but I'm sure the pieces didn't sound perfect in Joplin's day either. As such, the record is pretty much of a document of the concerts given by this froup shortly beforehand, which "premiered" the music.

Two of the original piano arrangements ("The Entertainer" and "Sun Flower Slow Drag") are played, just for the contrast, rounding out a very war, very happy disc. Chase away essay and exam blues with The Red Back Book — I guarantee it's the right medicine.

dave basskin

ABC CHARTERS
to Europe

-Youth Fares
-Student Eurail passes

922-4161

SERVICE, LTD.
258 College Street

all the latest in fashion
and custom-made eyewear

BRADDOCK
OPTICAL

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE
280 BLOOR ST. WEST 962-2020

RADIO VARSITY

Applications are now open for
Radio Varsity
Managing Director

for the year 1973-74

APPLICATIONS MUST BE RECEIVED BY

Wednesday, March 20

Send applications to
Geoff Parker

Communications Commissioner, SAC

TRY IT,
YOU'LL LIKE IT
A LA STRADA
SPECIAL
FOR STUDENTS
77 Avenue Road

A delicious order of
spaghetti with meat
sauce or tomato sauce
Soup of the day
and
Coffee or tea

FOR THE LOW BUDGET
OF A
UNIVERSITY STUDENT
daily at

LA STRADA

lunch $1.50
dinner $2.25

Heidelberg

Brewed from pure spring water.

And that's the truth!

Non causa Sousa

The Magnificent Sound of Baroque Brass
London Festival Brass Gusemble
London Phase Four SPC 21087

There was a time, not too long ago, when brass choirs were a musical oddity; they just didn't turn up on concert programs or before the mikes. This may have been due to the somewhat restrictive concert world in the early part of the century, but the boom in Baroque music, which started in the early '60s changed all that. In the seventeenth century, the brass instruments were simply coiled tubing; long (tuba), medium (horn) or short (trumpet), they were all played by the same method. All the baroque player had at his disposal were his lips and air pressure. By forcing more air through the horn at the correct frequency of "buzzing" the lips, he had rudimentary control over the note the instrument would play in its "harmonic series".

Considering the formidable difficulties involved in playing such instruments, the music composed must have been written for some amazing players; it takes a brassman of tremendous skill to maneuver through the maze of runs and trills that make up the pieces of the era. Above all, the sound reminds one of power, money, empire at its peak, for the greatest city in the world—Venice—had a veritable storehouse of competent composers and musicians.

Despite the fact that it was run down from the grand days of the Doges the city with its Byzantine cathedral was the ideal location for brass choir music. Its resonant interior gave the instruments a classy echoing quality that suited them perfectly. Venice wasn't the only venue of brass — deep in Germany, Bach wrote challenging parts for trumpets into his concertos, and in Britain the horn had a long career as an adjunct to the hunt.

The disc at hand is hardly a trailblazer in the recording world; the days have passed when a record of this type would be unique. But, of course, a well-recorded program of brass music is always welcome, and the musicians of the London Festival Brass Ensemble have turned in a polished performance of Bach, Pezel, Scheidt and others on this new disc. Some of the pieces are adaptations or non-brass music (the Bach C-sharp minor fugue) but suit the medium well. Conductors Alan Civil and Elgar Howarth lead the ensemble of four trumpets, four horns, four trombones and tuba expertly, although it's hard to know who conducted which item, as no credits are given.

The fanfares are sparkling and lively, and the dances even manage to elude the ponderousness sometimes found in playing such music on brass instruments.

If your impression of brass bands is one of Sousa and ho-hum, this disc will change your mind. It's just the thing to wake you up in the morning and send you marching off to face the wars.

dave basskin

This is one half of a baroque horn player.

Is there a Coward industry?

Well, it's about a year since Sir Noel left us, quite the loss for the world at large. For anyone who treasured his songs, plays or films, things haven't been quite the same since. Noel died in the middle of a revival of sorts, with Private Lives playing in London's West End again (starring Maggie Smith) and the popular revues Oh Coward and Cowardly Custard delighting audiences the world over.

Moaning over the past is pointless, though; it's not as if we're left with no trace of the man at all. A new record marks his days in the theatre well, "Noel Coward's Theatre" (Ace of Diamonds SDD2206). It is simply an interview with the Master, allowing him free reign to talk about his life, his plays and his views on drama, comedy, stage design, actors, actresses, "motivation" acting, and much more.

More of a document than a valuable lecture, this record is a fitting reminder of the man who "always showed up at the first rehearsal, word-perfect" (and demanding the same from his casts) but was intelligent enough to be open to honest criticism. He had little use for the press critics, perhaps excepting Kenneth Tynan — "but he's young, and perhaps he'll grow out of it".

Not much more needs to be said about this disc. It's a must for Coward fans, giving us a long look at that witty and worldly man of the theatre, who will never be with us again.

dave basskin

GAY DANCE

Saturday March 16
 8 p.m. Licensed.
 Holy Trinity Church (Yonge just south of Dundas)
 $1.50
 sponsored by Gay Alliance Toward Equality
 8 Boswell 961-6496

THE THEATRE MICKITIES present 4 One-Act Plays, featuring

"The Words upon the Windowpane", by W.B. Yeats; "The Stronger" by August Strindberg; "The Sandbox" by Edward Albee; and "Traps" by James Stewart.

Sat. and Sun. March 16 and 17 at 8:30;
 Matinee Performance Monday March 18 at 3:00
 Upper Brennan Hall, St. Michael's College
 ADMISSION FREE.

U.C. GRADS TIME IS RUNNING OUT!

Tickets available for your grad banquet until Tuesday, March 19th at the principal's office.

There is only ONE OFFICIAL
 University of Toronto

CREST PIN
 or SIGNET RING

and they are supplied only through

THE S.A.C.

or
EARL EDWARDS

1534 Bayview Ave.

OFFICE AT REAR OFF HILLWOOD

INSIGNIA JEWELLERS

Phone 483-4212

Please call for appointment

RONNIE HAWKINS
 IS AT LOUNGE
Hades

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
 1 Bl. West of Bay St.

OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 8:30 P.M.

Do you want to make something of it?

Manischewitz Concord Wine is for people who find the taste of dry wine about as pleasant as smokers' tooth powder. Make something of it. Like:

Manischewitz Purple Cow

Stir together equal parts of Manischewitz Concord Wine and vodka. Serve on the rocks and add a twist of lemon.

Manischewitz Hi-Boy

Fill a tall glass with ice cubes. Add 3 jiggers of Manischewitz Concord Wine, and fill with ginger ale or club soda. Top with lemon slice. Stir.

Manischewitz Party Punch

A knock-out. Dissolve ¾-cup sugar in juice of 6 lemons. Add tray of ice cubes, 1 bottle Manischewitz Concord Wine and 1 bottle of club soda. Stir gently until very cold.

For other interesting Manischewitz recipes, write Suite 800, 234 Eglinton East, Toronto.

Manischewitz.
 The start of
 something great.

rhythm of the last three lines reveal the poet's own emotional "lightness" in this strained situation.

It is sometimes difficult to determine precisely what is alienating the poet: whether the half-foreign country of Japan, the half-foreign country of Canada, or something in the poet's own emotional make-up. For example, in "Dream after Touring the Tokyo Tokel", the description given of "Tokyo twentieth century" could be a description of any industrialised city. The nightmare which results from the poet's exposure to this city is not substantially different from the nightmarish thoughts which the poet has on being exposed to New York in her principal abortion poem "Dear Euclid".

Occasionally a very nice piece of writing will result from the poet's constant struggle to discover her personal culture from between the half-cultures, as in "On Hearing Japanese Haiku":

*Throat blossoms to sounds
Sama zama no mono
Stirrings in the sandy fibres of my flesh
And these ancient fingers
Gardening*

It does seem strange to me that the poem is not itself a seventeen-syllable haiku, but then Kogawa does not seem greatly interested in the purely technical aspects of poetry. Nevertheless, the poem has a sense of completeness about it which many of the other poems do not. By limiting her subject, she manages to say something fresh about it. (Often, an observation that is in itself fresh is staled somewhat by the time the whole poem is read and digested: that is where her technical slackness is most regrettable.)

There are about half-a-dozen poems in the beginning of "Forest Creatures" which attempt to document what it is like to be a Japanese-Canadian in Canada. Most of them deal with prejudice, against herself as a girl, and against her young daughter. One, "What Do I Remember of the Evacuation", describes the internment of the Japanese people during the last war:

*What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember my father telling Tim and me
About the mountains and the train
And the excitement of going on a trip.
What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember my mother wrapping
A blanket around me and my Pretending to fall asleep so she would be happy*

*Though I was so excited I couldn't sleep
(I hear there were people herded into Hastings Park like cattle.
Families were made to move in two hours
Abandoning everything, leaving pets
And possessions at gun point.
I hear families were broken up
Men were forced to work. I heard
It whispered late at night
That there was suffering) and
I missed my dolls.*

*What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember Miss Foster and Miss Tucker
Who still live in Vancouver
And who did what they could
And loved the children and who gave me
A puzzle to play with on the train.
And I remember the mountains and I was Six years old and I swear I saw a giant Gulliver of Gulliver's Travels scanning the horizon*

And I remember how careful my parents were

*Not to bruise us with bitterness
And I remember the puzzle of Lorraine Life*

*Who said "Don't insult me" who I Proudly wrote my name in Japanese
And Tim flew the Union Jack
When the war was over but Lorraine
And her friends spat on us anyway
And I prayed to the God who loves
All the children in his sight
That I might be white.*

By the way, a complement to the picture which this poem offers may be found in a short story by Beverly Mitchell, a PhD student at U.N.B., which appeared in the fall 1973 Fiddlehead. (The story apparently won the Sir Charles G. D. Roberts prize for the best short story of 1972-3, and was first published in Stories from the Pacific and Arctic Canada.)

"Letter from Sakaye" describes the internment from the point of view of a white child. Sakaye is a shy little Japanese girl who appears in the narrator's Grade One classroom in Mission City, B.C. Until Grade Six, and despite the alienation of Sakaye's people from the white people of the town, the narrator and Sakaye become increasingly friendly toward one another. In fact, many of the white children feel a sympathetic interest in the Japanese children. Then comes Pearl Harbour:

Although she has been publishing in Canadian magazines for about ten years, A Choice of Dreams is Joy Kogawa's first major book of poetry. It is worth reading.

Joy Kogawa is a Japanese-Canadian. She was born in Vancouver in 1935, the daughter of an Anglican clergyman (Japanese). In 1941, her family was interned, along with several thousand other Japanese families, in the interior of British Columbia. After the war, her father took the family to Coaldale, in southern Alberta, where his parishioners went to work the sugar beet fields. Ms. Kogawa went to highschool in Coaldale, and then attended the University of Calgary. After studying for a year at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, she moved back to the west in 1956, and lived in various places in B.C. and Saskatchewan until she moved to Ottawa in 1969, where she still resides.

Her book is divided into three parts. There are forty-odd poems dealing with a recent visit to Japan ("About Japan"); twenty-eight poems dealing in a general way with memories of the past and emotions of the present ("Forest Children"); and seven poems which seem to be about the experience of having an abortion ("Waiting Room").

In Japan the poet discovers, as one might expect, that she is no longer entirely Japanese. Her alienation from the scenes which she observes is reflected in the harsh images and rhythms which she sometimes employs, as when in "Descent Into Smog" she describes her arrival at Tokyo airport:

*...The Tokyo trot
Much bowing, many bow legs
A grey kimono emerges, tightness, anxiety —*

*My aunt has helmititis, or is it
Just a temporary helmet she puts on
When something has to be done —
Like walking under ladders
Standing in hard hat areas
Meeting North American strangers —
She asks hard-hat questions
What's your name, girl? Curiosa?
Curiosa? Schedule, purpose
What's your game?...*

"Tokyo trot" sounds like a G.I. joke. The half-jokes of "bow legs" and "helmititis" also have a curiously American ring. At the same time, the "hard hat" images and the

how shall i te

in a word

ell of apples

of wars

But the rumours that followed December seventh made it clear that for many in Mission City the association of the only too real. Where did all the money go that the Japanese had been making on their farms? Not to the trades people of Mission, that was sure. And what about Hyawaka's son who had gone to Japan last year? What business could he have over there? And then reports about the fishing boats on the West Coast began to drift into Mission — the fishermen had been charting the coastal waters in preparation for the invasion of B.C. Someone even discovered that the fresh straw carefully laid down between the rows of young strawberry plants pointed directly to the Mission Bridge — and because we boasted one of the three bridges that crossed the Fraser River, we suddenly saw ourselves as a strategic location, infiltrated by the enemy, and a prime target for attack.

This does not change the attitude of the white children, who even stage a small protest demonstration when a bossy, vulgar churchwoman snubs Sakaye's mother. However, one day all the Japanese people are gone. Later, when the narrator receives a letter from Sakaye who is on a farm in the prairies, she is disappointed because the contents are so mundane. Now she does not remember whether she bothered to reply. At any rate, communication between them came to an end:

...My mother had been dead for two months when Sakaye's letter arrived, so there was no one to tell me that Sakaye had had to get permission from the Canadian authorities to write to me, and that her letter had been censored — and it was only a few years ago when I read about the Japanese internment that I realized how Sakaye must have waited for my reply.

I wish I could answer Sakaye's letter and tell her all this, because now I know that it was important after all. She must be nearly forty, and she may still be living someplace on the prairies.

But I can't read the address on her letter any more.

Despite their different perspectives, Joy Kogawa's poem and Beverly Mitchell's story are remarkably similar. Both writers carefully limit their treatment of the tragedy — and it was a kind of tragedy, although not of course on the scale of the evacuation of the Jews in Europe — to memories of their childish perception of the events. Each new revelation about the relationship between the white and Japanese communities is described in terms of a particular incident of which the narrator partook. Neither writer attempts to make an adult's assessment of the moral and emotional issues which are raised by these incidents. In the last lines of her story, Mitchell sighs and sinks into sentimental regret. In the last lines of her poem, Ms. Kogawa hisses and retreats into gentle bitterness.

Joy Kogawa is not at her best when she attempts to write a documentary poem such as "What Do I Remember of the Evacuation". Despite the publisher's blurb on the back cover of her book, I must say that she is not a poet of "large vision". However, her "small dramas" are sometimes quite beautiful.

The beauty is that of the quiet voice of a sometimes-wise woman, speaking simply and directly. In "Breezes" she speaks of past nearness and present distance:

The weeping willow sways low
In the breeze it seems to brush
The tops of those distant bushes
Sensuously in my one dimensional Perception. Once I imagined
I knew so well the meaning
Of your careful words brushing
My mind gently with a nearness
Now I see how distant
The bushes are I still
Would paint them touching.

In "Child Painting", she captures the world of a child and her own feelings about this world:

A pink cloud, only
"At night," his black brush says
"You cannot see it
But it's still there moving
And tomorrow perhaps hail"
His brush grows roots
Flings branches skywards
A long black tree
Searching shapes
Enclosing clouds in a

Where can you go to find your psychic roots when downtown Tokyo (above) looks just like downtown Cleveland?

Growing large
Black bird
"Tell me about your Picture, Bobby."
Words are stones to birds in flight
His elbows move like wings.

The last lines of one of the poems in "Waiting Room" epitomize Kogawa's situation as a poet: how shall I tell of apples/in a world of wars.

The last and longest poem in A Choice of Dreams, "Dear Euclid", will interest many people because of its subject. My own feelings about it are mixed. But it is a poem which should be read, and not only because of its subject. This abortion is another "small drama", but the lines are spoken with such intensity that just now criticism seems irrelevant:

...Once did God
Flood away his imperfect creation
And now the imperfection remains
And an ark full of regret.
My small Noah, it is to another world
You must go, not the Vacuum aspirator, fast drying world
I walk on daily, not this Morning and evening time heavy
Gasping to find laughter
Madness this dark mist stumbling.
I am Eskimo mother pursued by starving
Beasts by night and howling blizzard
And I abandon you, here, here, in the White numbing coldness, your face I dare not

Look for an instant longer, you are Dead before you are alive and I don't know how
My limbs move when it is I Should lie there with you, the foreign judge
Proclaiming my guilt and calling me
Murderer but my legs only frostbitten
Move on, stumbling in the perpetual winter
Farther away and farther always now to Silences...

A Choice of Dreams
Joy Kogawa
McClelland and Steart; $2.95

heather kirk
The Veracity 17

Good Christians are socialists; Bad socialists are Christians?

The Social Passion: religion and social reform in Canada, 1914-28;

by Richard Allen; University of Toronto Press; $5.95

Any student of social change in Canada must come to terms with the influence of Christianity. For, while in both the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, there have traditionally been sharp divisions on social issues, in Canada, religious influences played an especially important part in shaping the socialist movement, as well as other social forces.

Richard Allen's contribution to the understanding of the development of Canadian society and Canadian political alignments is invaluable, and the fact that his book is now out in paperback (albeit priced at $5.95) should help to make it more widely read. The fact that Tommy Douglas likes the book should not be held against it.

The ambiguity in the heritage of Christianity goes right back to Jesus himself, with his prescription on the one hand to "render unto Caesar what is Caesar's" and his pronouncement on the other hand that "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God".

All in all, his teachings would seem to point to a social vision that is akin to communism, but they suffered immensely through the unreadiness of the society into which he introduced them, through the distortions of Paul, and through the corruptions of power.

So Christianity became primarily the "opiate of the masses", a source of tremendous suffering and injustice through the centuries, the means by which oppressors justified their power. As Protestantism, it became a convenient ideology for capitalism (though Catholicism had little trouble adapting either).

But with the rise of the working class, strains of Christianity began to appear that not only offered solace and a better world after death, or advice to the poor to better themselves, but sometimes suggested that change was possible on earth.

In Canada, especially the Protestant version of this radical approach was important. The social gospel movement which Allen describes so well helped produce the CCF, and this at a time when it sounded considerably more radical than its successor does today. J.S. Woodsworth is merely the best-known of this brand of Christianity.

The Catholic church produced a separate and somewhat similar movement in Canada, although it never reached the proportions of its counterpart. Allen deals only with the Protestant movement, the social gospel, explaining that it interacted little with the Catholics. It is interesting, though, that in recent years the Catholic church has produced a movement that is occasionally revolutionary, not just reformist, notably the revolutionary priests of Latin America. Perhaps Protestants are more prone to leave religion entirely as they become more radical although, to be sure, they were heavily involved in the sixties campaign against the Bomb and in protests against the coup in Chile. But revolutionary Protestants are even harder to find than revolutionary Catholics.

It is true that the radical side of Christianity, although anything but dominant, has made a contribution to social change. At the same time, it has to be concluded that the social gospel, if taken as a political position rather than a transitional stage in the development of individuals, has had profoundly negative influences as well. Although Allen does not particularly bring this out in his analysis, it is clear from his evidence.

Did Jesus have a goatee? J.S. Woodsworth did.

The pre-eminent stress on Christian philanthropy and paternalism, the pious moralism and condescending pity, were accompanied by a rhetoric that was nothing so much as an attempt to portray the ideal society as one where a large happy flock of sheep (no longer sheared) were tended and administered by kindly and competent shepherds. One has only to read the tracts of the social gossellers, or indeed of the CCF, to see the syndrome. What was inhibited was a scientific and realistic analysis of the causes of poverty, and a hard-headed approach to turning out those responsible for the mess society was in. The crippling effects on the movement for social change and socialism in Canada were immeasurable.

But while Allen's analysis is deficient on this point, his book is still by far the best starting point for acquiring an understanding of these phenomena.

sarah rothchild

Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts; lamenting evanescence

She dwells with Beauty - Beauty that must die;

And Joy, whose hand is ever at his lips

Bidding adieu; and aching Pleasure nigh,

Turning to poison while the bee-mouth sips:

Av, in the very temple of Delight

Veiled Melancholy has her sovran shrine,

Though seen of none save him whose strenuous tongue

Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine:

His soul shall taste the sadness of her might,

And be among her cloudy trophies hung.

The Hart House Chorus sings
Handel and Brahms,
Sunday at eight.

BEYOND 1984,
BEYOND 2001.

BEYOND LOVE,
BEYOND DEATH.

STARTING TODAY!

783-1441

AT FOUR THEATRES

GLENDAL

IMPERIAL

1881 AVENUE RD. W. OF LAWRENCE

YONGE - DUNDAS 364-6335

NORTHWEST

SCARBORO

HWY. 77-20200 RD. W. 877-3041

STANLEY RD. 437-8171

*In your own way.
In your own time.
On your own terms.
You'll take to the taste of Player's Filter.*

A taste you can call your own.

Warning: The Department of National Health and Welfare advises that danger to health increases with amount smoked.

As the twilight began to deepen over the hill of Calvary, the little knot of the faithful who stood in the lengthening shadows could see their Teacher weakening. Life was visibly ebbing away from the lonely figure on the cross. With growing despair, they waited for a miracle, for a sign, for at least a word from this man Jesus whom they called the Messiah.

And then—as they had almost given up hope, they could see him trying to move his lips, trying to gather strength for a few last words. As they strained to listen, they could hear him whispering, calling out in a weak and cracking voice: "Matthew, Matthew, Math-hew". The effort had almost been too much for him, but Matthew had heard his Master, and virtually flew to the cross, flinging himself on his knees at its foot. "Yes Master, yes Lord, I am here," he cried.

"Matthew," came the feeble voice, "Matthew, I can see your house from up here."

...

So it was with Walter Gordon, the Messiah of Canadian nationalists in the 1960's, the man who set out resolutely — well, sort of, — to drive the American money-changers out of the Canadian temple.

Denis Smith's Gentle Patriot: A Political Biography of Walter Gordon tries to present a clearer picture of the failed saviour, and to a very limited extent he succeeds. That is, he presents excerpts from Gordon's personal diaries and notes, as well as various records from the years of the Pearson administration, which make the behind-the-scenes politicking and maneuvering clearer.

But what emerges most plainly from the book is the fact that the public Gordon was essentially the whole Gordon. Gordon the confused wanderer who never strayed beyond being continually outwitted by his opponents, Gordon the bumbler who couldn't handle himself in the world outside his safe Bay Street office, Gordon the irresolute who continually backed off from his position in the face of pressure: this was the picture the media presented of a Gordon during the Pearson years, and this is the picture that Denis Smith, despite his favourable attitude to Gordon, presents. The book would also seem to indicate that Gordon is really as dull and pedantic as he appeared in public life, but it is possible that this is due to the lifeless way in which Denis

*You don't walk on water
by trying to walk
in the middle of road.*

Smith pushes his pen.

About the only new Facts that emerge in the book are those that reveal the unscrupulousness with which the seemingly pure Lester Pearson treated his political colleagues, and especially Gordon. While Pearson was incapable of giving any direction to his cabinet, Parliament, or the country, he did manage to alienate many of his supporters with his machinations and lack of backbone.

Gordon himself was trapped in an ideological morass from which he was incapable of extricating himself, and since, in addition, he lacked the political wiles and ruthlessness necessary for success in Ottawa, his failure was a foregone conclusion.

Although he could see some of the dangers of American domination of the Canadian economy, he was moderate in his response to the point of being without any clear analysis or principles in fact it wouldn't do, after all, to discourage American investment in a major way, or to stake out an independent foreign policy position for Canada. That would be extremist. The moderates must be appealed to; the businessmen reasoned with.

But unfortunately, the majority of the Canadian business elite was only glad to carve out a little niche for itself in the framework of American hegemony, and regarded Gordon's 'moderate' nationalism as dangerous lunacy. Undaunted, Gordon a charter member of the Bay Street set, sought to convince them and to implement his ideas by manipulating the lever of governmental power. Elitist to the core, the idea of a nationalist movement directed by working people against the capitalists, both American and Canadian, was naturally totally foreign to his way of thinking. Yet as Mel Watkins and his cohorts were to realize, independence in Canada was impossible and in any case undesirable without socialism. And as even the Wafflers have largely failed to understand, socialism and therefore independence can be brought about, not by the election of, say a Waffle party, more nationalist and more socialist than the NDP, to pass the necessary legislation, but only by the activity of a mass movement that sees the struggle against American imperialism as merely a necessary component of the basic effort to bring about socialism.

For Gordon, however, the only legitimate and only possible vehicle of political action was understandably enough the Liberal Party. All else was extremism and politically unrealistic. So Gordon, the realist, worked through the Liberal Party with its historical dedication to playing junior partner in the American-dominated status quo. And when he became sufficiently frustrated, he left the government, disillusioned. Although he was as close to the workings of the economy as anyone, he came away none the wiser, with no clearer perspective than when he arrived. He continues to repeat his earlier views, with no hint of seeing any contradiction between advocating independence and defending the corporate capitalist economy which makes dependence on the US inevitable.

If it is impossible to resolve contradictions in Gordon's thought (as Smith admits), it should at least be possible to present his career and ideas in a stimulating fashion. Smith has failed to do this, and the fault is not entirely that of Gordon's blandness and inconsistency. The book is dull and uninterestingly written, and at $12.50, not worth the price.

Gentle Patriot: A Political Biography of Walter Gordon; by Denis Smith; Hurtig Publishers; $12.50

uili diemer

An Important

FRENCH COURSE UNION MEETING

Monday, March 18
3 p.m. UC 138

Topics:

1. staffing representation
2. plans for next year's union
3. course evaluations

It is IMPERATIVE all members attend.
New members most welcome.

Gallagher's virtuosity comes across in concert

When I was in A & A's recently, I saw a book on the technique of playing rock lead guitar: It talked of the rock-blues style in terms of "clichés"; in other words, the style was analysed and broken down into a series of little licks called "clichés". Rory Gallagher must have studied that book, because that's how his sound is put together. I don't mean to knock Rory Gallagher unduly; he is, to me, the best guitarist—in terms of sheer technique—that I have ever heard, including Johnny Winter. It's just that superior technical virtuosity and even taste as well don't always result in superior music. That's why Irish born Gallagher, who is immensely popular in Britain, doesn't rate as a superstar over here—yet.

Gallagher's main problem, inability to brave the intricacies of varied music that's more than just correct, becomes apparent when you listen to his new album, Tattoo (Polydor; $7.29), but doesn't affect his impact during performance. His concert at the Victory Theatre last Friday was outstanding although his album isn't. But he definitely is a great performer to hear live.

Gallagher and his group (Lou Martin, keyboards, Rod De'Ath, drums, Gerry McAvoy, bass) set the pace with the opening number—very tough, tight, pure rock'n'roll—Gallagher trotting out his licks stylishly, showing excellent rapport with the audience, Martin contributing an electric piano solo that was far better than anything on the Tattoo album. For seconds we were offered a slow blues, "I Wonder Why", again with virtuoso leads from both Gallagher and Martin. Later on we got a much-needed contrast (Rory Gallagher doesn't attempt anything lyrical) with two numbers on acoustic guitar, both featuring a very honest sound, unclouded with reverb etc., and one excellent one on mandolin. It wasn't until the enthusiastic audience had applauded Gallagher into doing an encore that bassman McAvoy and drummer De'Ath got to show their considerable abilities in solos, bringing the concert to a triumphant close.

As for the Tattoo album, it's pretty standard stuff. Except for one song "Who's That Coming", it doesn't catch your ear. You have to hear Rory Gallagher live to really appreciate him.

nick schmidt

STUDENTS WITH OFFICE EXPERIENCE Register NOW!!

FOR SUMMER OR TEMPORARY
EMPLOYMENT

▶ Dot Personnel Services

WEST
236-1133
3313 A Bloor St. W.

EAST
429-3706
797 Don Mills Rd.

CENTRAL
923-9801
30 Bloor St. W.

XEROX
EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY
COPIES

7c
EACH

1st thru 5th
copies per original

5c
EACH

6th thru 10th
copies per original

2c
EACH

11th and additional copies of the
same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes: Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work)

• FREE collating

20%

ALSO AVAILABLE

- CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
- REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36"

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-5:00 PM

NOTE:
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS, WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

Loggins & Messina flow like honey

Loggins and Messina
Full Sail
Columbia: $7.29

About two years ago, Jim Messina and Kenny Loggins stood most of the music industry on its collective ear when their first LP Sittin' In became a huge commercial success. The album had been a favorite of musicians and disc jockeys for almost a year before the public finally caught on to the duo's brilliance.

The story goes, that Kenny Loggins was in the studio under the auspices of cutting a solo album. Jim Messina was functioning as producer but got so involved in Loggins' music that he was soon playing and singing on almost every cut as well as managing the knobs in the control room. That's an explanation of sorts why that first LP was titled, Kenny Loggins "Sittin' In" with Jim Messina.

The two managed to put together a third album Full Sail, filled with songs that are some of the most wrinkle-free to have been compiled on a disc. The ballads flow like honey, and the up-tempo tunes are joyful celebrations. The album is a masterpiece.

Loggins and Messina should be names synonymous with quality. Their arrangements are the tightest-knit around - every instrument being there for a purpose, meshing beautifully with the others. The slow gentle songs like Kenny Loggins', "A Love Song" (now made famous by Anne Murray), "Watching the River Run", and "Sailing the Wind" are perfect cases in point.

What L&M do best is the mellow funky material that is so well represented on Full Sail. "Travellin' Blues", "You Need a Man" and "Didn't I Know You When" give the reed section of Al Garth and Jon Clarke great opportunity to strut their stuff.

The soft spots are only soft relative to the higher quality material. "Lahaina" is a calypso-styled tune that smacks of "Vahevelia" on Sittin' In. It's well performed but it's just a second rate piece of fluff. Another un-notable is "Coming To You", which rates the Buddy Holly sound-alike of the year award.

The high point of the album is a lengthy Messina composition called "Pathway To Glory". The singing style and tune have a Seals and Crofts feel. The instrumentation mixes oboe, fiddle, piano and electric and acoustic guitars. The break spotlights a group of solos led off by John Clarke on oboe that blend adroitly into harmonica before making the slide into fiddle. The tempo picks up and sets the tone for one of the most enjoyable and technically good laid-back guitar solos I've heard. Remarkably, they're able to ease out of that bridge with speed and skill to return to the familiar vocal chorus, "Beware, o brother beware".

There should be a lot of people who'll argue that Full Sail is a better album than Sittin' In. The only sure bet though, is that there's a lot of good good listening ahead.

alan mandell

Friday, March 15, 1974

Everything falls into place as Yes charts the unknown

Tales From The Topographic Ocean
Yes
Atlantic/WEA; $12.58

The English group Yes were no overnight success by any standard. They went through a process of development and refinement of their musical ideas that encompassed three albums before they struck the "right" chord. All the elements seemed to fall into place on their fourth and best album Fragile. That LP was marked by the acquisition of the brilliant keyboard talents of Rick Wakeman, as well as the now familiar science fiction-fantasy cover-art of Roger Dean.

The newest LP, Tales From The Topographic Ocean is Yes' most ambitious recording to date. The work is a double album, exploring a single theme, in four parts each of which takes up one side of a record. The motif was chosen by lead singer Jon Anderson, who read of the "Four part Shastric scriptures, which cover all aspects of religion, social life, as well as fields like medicine and music, art and architecture", described in Parahansa Yogananda's Autobiography of a Yogi. Anderson and guitarist Steve Howe collaborated on the lyrics and musical framework in an all night session in a Georgia hotel room. The final process of arranging, rehearsing and recording, which involved various musical suggestions from the other members of Yes, took some five additional months.

The final result is a testimonial to the remarkable talent of the five musicians involved. The four interlocking musical passages, are awesome in total, but more approachable as individual units. It's the music that really stands out — the lyrics tend to be stand-offish in their pretentiousness. As a result the words are often secondary and the voices merely becomes another instrument.

Like the preceding albums from Yes, Tales From The Topographic Ocean features a careful filagree of sonic elements, combined with a taste for drama and cinematic presence. As such it represents an extension of the concept nature of Close To The Edge that at its very best moments can challenge the level of excellence displayed on Fragile. It's music with a definite three dimensional nature and an unmistakable sense of animation.

The opening piece, "The Revealing Science of God", begins with Anderson's voice backed Howe's unobtrusive guitar. The other instruments find their way into the picture gradually, building to a quick climax. From here on, the listener is exposed to consecutively unfolding musical forms, presumably to hint a what is to come.

"The Rembering" sustains the vocals a bit too long. But latter third of the side contains a rewarding section that features intertwined guitar and keyboards. Wakeman exploits some of his most intriguing synthesizer effects ever.

Vibe-like keyboards and percussion that shifts from speaker to speaker with dizzying speed, begins the third movement, "The Ancient". The rhythmic opening is carried on to provide the environment for Steve Howe's blazing guitar gymnastics that utilize, flattened and sharpened sustained notes. When the vocals finally make their entrance, they do so in such an abrupt manner as to shock. And so goes the piece, until the swirling environs, give way to a more relaxed passage featuring simple vocals and the uncluttered classical guitar stylings of Howe (reminiscent of composition "Mood For A Day" on Fragile).

Side four, "The Ritual", may well rank as Yes' best work. Of special note is a drum solo by Alan White with concomitant percussive side effects, that dominates the piece. The drums are even pierced at points by a sizzling synthesizer assault. Howe pulls off yet another of his delayed attack guitar solos and the piece ends on the phrase "nous sommes du soleil" and Wakeman's mellotron fading out.

Tales From The Topographic Ocean is worth having. It's hard to offer any kind of classification to the music. It's futuristic in a sense, definitely not rock but possibly the "classical" music of our time.

allan mandell

come
HONKY TONK
with
VINCE TROY
Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!!
HOUSE OF LANCASTER
147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0615

Larry's
Hideaway Hotel
121 Carlton at Jarvis
THIS WEEK
FLAG
Mar. 11-16
NEXT BIG ATTRACTION
THE BRITISH
ARE HERE
Mar. 18-22

OPENS TUESDAY MAR. 19 7:30 P.M.

Bertolt Brecht's
THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN

Directed by Leon Major

The Company: Maja Ardal, Guy Bannerman, Claude Bede, Robert Benson, Jeff Braunstein, Joyce Campbell, John Cutts, James B. Douglas, Denise Fergusson, Christine Foster, Ron Hastings, Betty Leighton, Howard Mawson, Sean McCann, Mira Ernan Mira, Richard Monette, Tedde Moore, Gerard Parkes, Jennifer Phipps, Gary Reineke, Saul Rubinek, Elizabeth Shepherd

Student Rush $2.00

Plays Tues. to Sat. 8:30 p.m. $6.50, $5.00, $3.50
Matinees 2:00 p.m. March 23 & 30 only $6.00, $4.50, $3.00

BOX OFFICE NOW OPEN 366-7723

ST. LAWRENCE CENTRE - 27 Front Street East
Toronto Arts Productions

"This land is our land"

Native land claims

Speakers:
James O'Reilly,
lawyer for the James Bay Indians
James Walsh Shee,
President of the Indian Brotherhood
of the Northwest Territories
Tapiu Carley,
President of the Inuit Tapinmat of Canada
Flora MacDonald,
Progressive Conservative critic for Indian Affairs

Seminar '74
Trinity College

Saturday, March 16
9:30 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.
Concert Hall 1, Edward Johnson Building

Tickets
Call Office of Convocation
Trinity College 928-2651

HILLELS GRAD CLUB

is presenting

LIZ & DANNY IN CONCERT

Liz Vomberg, flautist
Danny Sapon, mandolinist will play Jewish folk songs

DATE: SUNDAY MARCH 17th, 1974
TIME: 3:30 P.M.
PLACE: HILLEL HOUSE

AND THEN
DELICATESSEN SUPPER AT HILLEL AT 5:30 P.M.
(Where the elite meet to eat)

Guitarist Steve Howe collaborated on music and lyrics for this "concept" album

"I don't make shoes for your feet. I make shoes for your body."

Shoe is actually lower than the toe.

This helps guide your body into a straighter, more upright posture. A posture that takes weight and pressure off your lower back and the metatarsal area of your foot. This should help reduce fatigue, and make walking and standing easier and more comfortable.

This straighter posture is similar to that attained in the Lotus position in Yoga.

The sole of my shoe is molded in the form of a healthy footprint in sand.

Lowering the heel is not enough.

The entire sole of my shoe is molded in a very special way. With each step you take, your weight is shifted from your heel to the outside of your foot, to the ball of your foot, and then to your big toe.

This gentle rolling motion allows you to walk and stand for hours longer without tiring. You should feel a whole new energy in my shoes.

My shoe is completely different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's a shoe for your entire body.

It was designed by studying the body. How it stands. How it walks. And what it needs.

I call my shoe The Earth Shoe®.

It's more natural to walk with your heels lower than your toes.

That might sound strange at first. But look at your footprints when you walk barefoot in sand. You will see that the heel is much deeper than the toe.

This is the natural way your body wants to walk.

My shoes work with your body.

The heel of The Earth

The Earth Shoe comes in styles for men and women. From open sandals to high boots. From $23.50 to $42.50.

To get an idea of how The Earth Shoe works, stand barefoot with your toes up on a book. Feel what begins to happen to your body.

The toe of my shoe is wide. So your toes can spread out naturally and comfortably. Instead of being cramped and squashed.

The arch of The Earth Shoe is much more than just a support. It helps your arch exercise. When you try my shoes you will feel the difference immediately.

It took me 10 years to perfect The Earth Shoe. And I did it with several doctors, in my native Denmark, who not only worked with me, but actually wore the shoes to test each delicate adjustment.

You may feel strange at first.

When you first put the Earth Shoe on, you may feel a little odd. This is because you will be using neglected muscles you're not used to using.

Wearing my shoe is a special way of exercising your body while you walk.

You should wear them moderately at first, until you get used to this new way of walking.

Where to buy them.

My shoes are sold at stores that only sell The Earth Shoe.

In every case, these stores were opened by people who wore my shoes, and believed in them so much, they decided to sell them themselves.

To really appreciate my shoes you must try them.

I have received thousands of letters from wearers who were pleased beyond their expectations.

Come try them. You will see, perhaps for the first time in your life, what it is like to stand straighter, to walk more gracefully, naturally and comfortably.

Earth Shoe

As with all successful ideas and inventions, there are imitators.

Although a shoe may look like The Earth Shoe, none reproduce the careful design and years of testing that are built into every pair. The Earth Shoe is patented. It can not be copied without being changed.

To be sure you're getting the real thing, look on the sole for The Earth Shoe trademark.

* The Earth Shoe® is a registered trademark of Kalso Systemet Inc. © 1974. Kalso Systemet Inc.

Anne Kalso

Kalso Earth Shoe 5 Charles St. W. Toronto, phone 967-7378

Open Thurs and Fri 11am to 9pm
Mon Tue Wed and Sat 11 am to 7pm

History text has pinpoint accuracy (except for the facts)

Dwight MacDonald once pointed out that the characteristic of a Luce magazine was that everything was accurate about any given article except its main points. Decisive Decades: A History of the Twentieth Century for Canadians, is like that except that the facts, not just the main points, are often wrong, or distorted, as well.

It's impossible to do a detailed analysis of a 500-page high school textbook, so a few examples will have to suffice.

The discussion of Vietnam is typical. With the comment that "French colonial rule followed the typical European techniques of that time. Western material, educational and religious values replaced the traditional culture of the Vietnamese" the book skims glibly over the barbarous process of colonialization by which the country was conquered, the traditional society forcibly destroyed, the economy warped, and the ancient culture seriously damaged.

It claims that the Geneva settlement of 1954 called for the division of Viet Nam into North and South at the 17th parallel, a statement that, depending on how you interpret it, is either a bare-faced lie or a complete distortion of the fact that the settlement explicitly stated that the 17th parallel was a provisional military truce line, not a division.

Diem, it claims, "was remarkably successful in rebuilding South Viet Nam", a statement for which it would be difficult indeed to find a shred of supporting evidence (and of course none is offered).

Hanoi's response to this alleged remarkable success is said to have been "one of infiltration and preparation for a new offensive" a claim that is not even made by US Military authorities, who admitted that Hanoi was only too eager to avoid any kind of provocation so that the reunification elections could take place as scheduled. Every authority at the time, from Eisenhower on down, was certain that the Communists would win any free election, and that therefore one had to be prevented at all costs. "I have never talked or corresponded with a person knowledgeable in Indo-Chinese affairs," wrote Eisenhower, "who did not agree that had elections been held as of the time of the fighting, possibly 80 per cent of the population would have voted for Communist Ho Chi Minh." But Decisive Decades makes no mention whatever of the refusal by Saigon and the US to hold the scheduled elections.

Minor distortions abound as well, like the statement that the NLF was a new name for the Viet Minh, when in fact both sides of the war agree that the NLF had a broader different composition.

The myth of the 1964 attack on American destroyers is repeated. Napalm is described as "liquid fire to smoke the Viet Cong out of their underground warrens", surely one of the more remarkable euphemisms ever to appear in a school textbook.

The question of peace talks is presented as if poor Lyndon Johnson's reasonable terms were continually turned down by the war-mongering communists, an interpretation which was insupportable even before the Pentagon papers revealed the US role in sabotaging peace feelers.

There's more, much more, to the way this piece of history alone is caricatured and twisted by these two gentlemanly apologists for genocide; those interested in pursuing the matter further might check Noam Chomsky's American Power and New Mandarins and his For Reasons of State, as well as I. F. Stone's In a Time of Torment, for complicitous documentation and hundreds of references to the facts which Hodgetts and Burns so painstakingly ignore.

Various other distortions emerge in a random flipping through the pages. The discussion of Marxism is as comical as anything to anyone familiar with Marx's writing, as the authors obviously are not. But at any rate, they see no need whatever to offer anything as trivial as evidence for statement like "The picture of society being a constant inevitable struggle between two classes — completely ignoring the middle class — is also a piece of a straightforward communist doctrine suitable, perhaps, to certain backward areas of the world, but in no way applicable to a modern, industrialized country." Presumably they feel that the obligation to portray a position accurately and to refuse it with actual arguments, is a 'straightforward piece of communist doctrine' suitable, perhaps, to certain backward areas of the world, but in no way applicable to a modern high school textbook.

But it's on the overall level of interpretation of history that the book is most laughable (except as propaganda). Idealistic America in an evil world, sometimes making mistakes, but always acting from the best of motives, even if some of her leaders were less than saints. Democracy versus communism. Canada's steady growth to nationhood. Ad nauseam.

A gallery of Great Canadians

Dwight Eisenhower

Lyndon B. Johnson

Henry Luce

...whats-his-name...

The whole book is the kind of simple-minded moralism that I thought had been laughed even out of the Canadian intellectual community. Perhaps it shouldn't be surprising that this kind of trash continues to appear. But it is certainly unfortunate that thousands of high school students are going to be subjected to the work of these intellectual charlatans, whether they want to or not, and without ever being given any hint that there are other facts, (or, rather, that the facts are otherwise) and other interpretations.

Decisive Decades: Revised Edition
A History of the Twentieth Century for Canadians by A.B. Hodgetts and T.D. Burns Nelson
ulli diemer

Quaint rural photos lack a clear theme

Permanence and Change: A Rural Ontario Document
by David Nasby
Anansi
$7.50

David Nasby, according to the blurb on the book's jacket, "has recorded people at work, farm sales and auctions, stockyards and country fairs" "free from sentimentality or nostalgia, and with complete respect for his subjects."

The publisher doth protest too much, methinks. In a book like this, containing almost all pictures, with very little text, you expect the work to speak for itself. A statement like the above, a disclaimer that the people portrayed were not exploited by the camera, should be unnecessary if it is true.

It is true that this book of photographs of life in rural Ontario avoids the worst forms of Friday, March 15, 1974 condescension that middleclass arty photographers are so often guilty of when they discover "the poor", "the old", or some other quaint group. The content of the pictures has primarily to do with the activities of life: work, socializing, play, and has less of that mood of gloom that so many "socially conscious" photographers wear like an albatross. And for this the book deserves praise. Perhaps the anger of the victims of the camera, articulated well in Marjaleena Repo's Photography and the Powerless, has begun to get across, at least to some.

Others are as oblivious as ever. I recall one photographer at a recent conference I attended, complaining of the lack of understanding and harassment that shutterbugs are subjected to, and citing as an example the case of one photographer who took pictures of the body of a fireman who had just been killed when a building collapsed, and who was chased and almost beaten up by the dead man's buddies. This he just couldn't understand.

Perhaps it's a lack of respect for the human sensibilities of others that is bred into us in childhood when adults, complete strangers as well as relatives, are forever gurgling over our cuteness, squeezing our cheeks, and treating us like imbeciles. Even those who understand how oppressive condescension is when it's applied to other races, the poor, or women, just love to slobber over children as if they were funny-looking teddy-bears.

David Nasby, to his credit, avoids many of the faults of this approach to photography. A number of the individual shots are interesting. But the question arises: why were they put together into a book? What's the point? For the book is obviously not a collection of individually compelling photographs. The majority of the shots, by themselves, don't warrant publication simply for their individual quality as art. Rather, they're included as part of a thematic treatment of a topic.

But the problem is that the themes are not brought out. The volume is simply a collection of pictures of rural life. As a result, there is no real message, no dynamic that is revealed, no discernable pattern. Nasby's attempt at artistic integrity, his desire (I suppose) to avoid "imposing" a pattern from the outside on this way of life, becomes self-defeating. It ends up as an artistic form of the empirical questionnaire-sociology that pervades our universities. The attempt to simply record, to portray "objectively", portrays — meaninglessness. And so, the overall effect of the volume becomes what the individual pictures seek to avoid: an invitation to sigh quietly in your living room over the quaintness of this way of life, so different from our own. Art National Geographic.

It makes you wish that artists, whether they operate with words or visual images, would occasionally stop to ask themselves what they're trying to communicate, and to whom. A price tag of $7.50 should help to make it clear, by itself, who is going to buy this slim volume.

I wonder, too, why it is that photographers are so prone to taking pictures of people different from themselves, whether it be a college teacher with a degree in sociology, like Nasby, taking pictures of rural life, or male professionals who can think of nothing but tits to photograph. The best thematic photography comes from people trying to convey their own way of life on film.

sarah rothschild
The Varsity 23

Why don't photographers look in a mirror?

WOMEN'S STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

For all those people interested in and involved with courses or projects in Women's Studies.

Friday, March 15th., 1974
4 p.m.
Interdisciplinary Studies,
Second Floor
97 St. George Street.

SPECIALIST COUNSELLORS required for

FRENCH SUMMER DAY CAMP July 1 - August 9

Programs in French language, including swimming, arts and crafts, nature, camp craft, and sports (field and gymnasium)

TORONTO MONTESSORI SCHOOL
8569 Bayview Ave., Thornhill
Mr. Gilbert Mamane
889-6882

"THE ORIGINAL" NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

WINNER
1970 1ST ANNUAL TORONTO
PIZZA AWARD
STAR WEEK'S JUNE '71
PIZZA CONTEST
620 YONGE
NORTH OF WELLESLEY

DINING ROOM OPEN 11 AM
1 AM MON-SAT
SUN 3 PM-1 AM
TAKE-OUT AND DELIVERY
DELIVERY FROM 4 PM-1 AM

925-1736

Award winning pizza as you like it

CAREERS in JEWISH LIFE

Monday, March 18 - 'JEWISH STUDIES'

5 PM PROF. FRANK TALMAGE:

DEPT. OF NEAR EASTERN STUDIES UNIV. OF TORONTO
'JEWISH STUDIES IN NORTH AMERICA'

7:30 PM MRS. R. KATCHEN:

LIBRARIAN, ROBERTS LIBRARY, U of T
'LIBRARIANSHIP & JEWISH STUDIES'

8:30 PM PROF. A. AVICHAJ:

DEPT. OF HISTORY, UNIV. OF ROCHESTER
'JEWISH STUDIES IN ISRAEL'

Tuesday, March 19 - 'JEWISH EDUCATION & the RABBINATE'

5 PM DR. JOSEPH I. COHEN:

CONSULTANT, AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR JEWISH EDUCATION
'JEWISH EDUCATION AS A CAREER'

7:30 PM RABBI S. STAUBER:

RABBI OF BNAI TORAH CONGREGATION
'CRISIS & OPPORTUNITY FOR THE RABBI IN NORTH AMERICA'

8:30 PM RABBI M. BERGLAS:

RABBI OF SHAAREI TEFILLAH CONGREGATION
'MOTIVATION FOR THE RABBINATE: A PERSONAL ACCOUNT'

Wednesday, March 20 - 'SOCIAL WORK'

4 PM PROF. SOL GREEN:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, YESHIVA UNIV
'WHAT'S JEWISH ABOUT SOCIAL WORK?'

5 PM MR. JEROME DIAMOND:

DIRECTOR, JEWISH FAMILY & CHILD SERVICES
'THE FIELD: EMPLOYMENT, SALARIES, MOBILITY'

7 PM PROF. BEN SCHLESINGER:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TOR
'PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL WORK IN NORTH AMERICA'

8 PM PROF. BEN SHAPIRO:

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TORONTO
'SOCIAL WORK OPPORTUNITIES IN ISRAEL'

at Hillel - 186 ST. GEORGE

SUPPERS WILL BE SERVED EACH DAY FOR PARTICIPANTS WITHOUT CHARGE. CALL THE OFFICE TO RESERVE - 923-9861

Another rush job LP?

Saints & Sinners
Johnny Winter
Columbia; $7.29

Johnny Winter first appeared on the rock scene about six years ago, following the biggest promotional hype job ever. Here was this long haired albino from Texas, a genius who played a National steel bodied guitar so well that he would just wipe out all those English puffs. And sure enough his first album was good, but after that Winter began to play rock instead of blues and eventually even the rock got lost among his pseudo jazz/blues efforts. Then came heroin and Johnny vanished.

Saints & Sinners is the second LP since the resurrection of Johnny Winter and unfortunately it lacks the drive and creative energy found on Still Alive and Well. Whereas on the comeback album he had to prove that he could still play, on this new effort he has the opportunity to pick and choose without any pressures and the resulting hodge-podge simply doesn't sell.

Consider the tunes he has chosen. There are four old tunes ranging from the Jagger/Richards "Stray Cat Blues" from 1968 back to "Riot in Cell Block #9" from way back in 1954, and in between you'll hear Chuck Berry's "Thirty Days" and an overdone loser called "Boney Moroney". Among the newer material there are two of his own compositions as well as one from brother Edgar, Van Morrison and Allen Toussaint. Unfortunately Johnny tries to cover too much ground without emphasizing his strong points, and so the album has no central theme or direction.

On tunes like "Stone County", "Blinded by Love", and "Rollin' Cross the Country", Winter is able to combine the big backing provided by Rick Derringer and brother Edgar with a solid rock beat. "Blinded by Love" comes across the best because the backup vocals don't interfere with Winter's singing, which has begun to sound more like his brother's. On the plus side there are two excellent tunes, "Thirty Days" and "Riot on Cell Block #9" which allow Winter to do what he knows best, playing solid all out rock.

The true gem on this LP is a slow blues tune, written by Winter himself, called "Hurtin' So Bad". With a horn and sax section backing him, Winter sings with great feeling and emotion. His voice, perfectly suited to the song, has never sounded better. It's nice to hear a blues number performed by a singer who knows what has to be done, and does it right.

The losers on this record include a version of the Stones' "Stray Cat Blues", which is done as a straight cover of the original, and, whereas Jagger's vocal sounds lewdly suggestive, Winter just goes through the motions of copying Jagger. The overall performance is very good but why bother with a copy when the original is so great? The inclusion of "Boney Moroney" seems like a waste of time and effort. It's just pointless to perform worn out and very weak songs. Unlike the other oldies on the album this song really has no purpose. The last loser on the LP is a Van Morrison composition, "Feedback on Highway 101", and, despite the help by Edgar and Derringer, it never gets off the ground. It's a typical Morrison tune and Winter's voice simply can't do the job, and he ends up sounding like a bad copy. The jazz background, with a fine sax solo by Edgar, seems to overwhelm Winter, drowning out his voice.

The whole LP sounds ragged at the edges and seems almost like a rush job to coincide with the Winter tour. The choice right now seems to be between all out rock, which is Winter's strongest point, both as a singer and as a musician, and the slow blues ballads, which are good but will never replace the original masters. Also it's on the rock tunes that Winter seems to be able to use his raspy voice without being drowned out by the rest of the instruments. For now I'll stick with Still Alive and Well.

seorge schardt

Some more problems to solve

One More River to Cross
Canned Heat
Atlantic/WEA; $6.29

Crowbar
Epic/Columbia; $7.29

Canned Heat has been described as a 'good back-up band'. What do you do if you lose the person you're backing up?

In Canned Heat's case, the loss was the death in 1970 of Al 'Blind Owl' Wilson, harmonica player (also slide guitar, piano) one of the handful of white blues players of the first rank, author of such songs as "Going Up The Country", "Pullin' Hair Blues", and "Get Off My Back".

Wilson was a big enough musician to dominate most songs he played on, not through volume, but subtly. His lines provided a shape, an edge to their music that lifted Canned Heat above the average. With him gone, they are working in a vacuum.

In 1966, Bob 'the Bear' Hite and Wilson formed the Heat. Both were serious blues collectors. Hite and Wilson helped discover Skip James, who contributed a lot to Wilson's high, lamenting vocals, and Hite published — I'm not sure if he still does — a magazine devoted to rhythm and blues). They found bassist Larry Taylor, and Henry 'Sunflower' Vestine, lead guitar. After a first album, Adolfo 'Fito' de la Parra was added on drums. The line-up remained pretty much the same until the death of Wilson, although Larry Taylor was replaced because he disliked touring.

One More River to Cross is the third album Canned Heat has released since Wilson's death, and Hite, Vestine, and de la Parra are still hanging in, along with three newcomers.

The blues core of the band's music appears to have dropped away, leaving the band without a style. Hite himself sounds tired. On a medley of Fats Domino songs (a man Hite obviously identifies with) he seems subdued, the last word I would have applied to 'the Bear' previously. At the close of the medley, when he says 'So long, Fats', Hite is almost waving goodbye to his old self. Vestine, an excellent guitarist with a distinctive 'sting like a bee' sound, recovers his old spark on but one song, Bob Hite's 'I Need Somebody', one of the better cuts. (Vestine played with free-jazz artist Albert Ayler during a leave of absence from the Heat around 1970, until Ayler's death.) Likewise, de la Parra never really unleashes his drumming ability, which is considerable. (Listen to him on Canned Heat: Live in Europe 1970).

New members of Canned Heat are relatively facelists. Bassist Richard Hite the Bear's younger brother, does a tepid imitation of his brother's beer-drinking, carrying on persona on 'Highway 401'. Yes, this is the Highway 401. Wish it had been a better song, though. James Shane, rhythm guitarist, is perhaps the weakest link in the new six-man Heat. He is a copier of copies — his guitar breaks, his singing, his songwriting ("You Am What You Am", "Bagful of Boogie") belong to a limbo shared by a thousand bands. The third newcomer is Ed Beyer on keyboards. What's needed is a good harmonica player. Although Bob Hite outweighted Al Wilson by at least two to one, Wilson's harmonica was far fuller than Hite's on "Bagful of Boogie", the lone harmonica solo on "One More River to Cross".

A general complaint: too many of the songs on this new album deal with the musician's life. "L.A. Town", "Bright Times Are Coming", "Highway 401" are all on this theme. To me, this is an overworked subject, the refuge of the songwriter with nothing else to write about.

Although this is not as good an album as earlier Canned Heat releases, the Heat is incapable of sinking below a certain level, still fairly high. On the early albums, almost every cut was excellent. Here, the ratio of good to bad is more half-and-half. "I Need Somebody" is very good, and don't forget "I'm Hog For You, Baby", and old Leiber-Stoller song which was the flip side, if I remember right, of the Surfari's "Wipeout". The lyrics are classic:

One little piggie bought a pizza,
Another piggie ate potato chips,
This little piggie's going over (to) your house
To nibble on your sweet lips
'Case I'm a hog for you, baby, etc.

One More River to Cross is for Canned Heat devotees. For others, try anything the band recorded up to and including Future Blues, in 1971

Crowbar has been given all the benefits of a New York recording studio, and still comes out sounding hopelessly second-rate. Much of the time they can be called a harder Blood Sweat and Tears, with Kelly Jay, author of most of the material, their David Clayton-Thomas, and Jozef Chirowski, on the basis of his overwrought "Something Happened Yesterday" (not much, I assure you), Toronto's Steve Katz. On their 'serious' numbers, such as the "Killing Time Trilogy", or "Nothing Lasts Forever" Kelly Jay leads Crowbar to new excesses of overinflation, leaving BS&T far behind.

Crowbar's 'non-serious' numbers, like "Million Dollar Weekend", "Kilroy", and "Go For the Throat", are by and large lame paens to the innocence of the fifties. These boys listened to CHUM when they were younger. Rock and roll is a way of life, is the message of "Kilroy", delivered with thundering overkill.

The album also included "Rocky Mountain Tragedy", an exercise in country music by a band with no aptitude for or understanding of the genre which they travesty.

The album has a few things going for it: Jozef Chirowski's "All the Living Things" is mildly promising, and some of the musicians backing the band up, Randy and Michael Brecker (Dreams), Sneaky Pete (Flying Burrito Brothers), or Hugh McCracken, have good reputations for work done elsewhere. But in the end the verdict is: no redeeming social value. I confess that, listening to Crowbar, I had a sensation which was new to me. I suddenly found myself waiting for the silences between the tracks.

chris probert

Friday, March 25, 1974

Is Canada's fresh air good for the voice?

Sundown
Gordon Lightfoot
Reprise/WEA; $6.29

Sea of Dreams
Bob McBride
Capitol; $6.29

Have a Good Time for Me
Jonathan Edwards
Atco/WEA; $6.29

Recent albums from two Canadians and one solace-seeking New Englander present the listener with expected class and two pleasant surprises in rock and folk's blurred genres. Native Gordon Lightfoot, with his latest Sundown offers up the seemingly perennial collection of originals from our foremost exponent of pop-folk. Lighthouse escape Bob McBride's second solo vehicle is titled Sea of Dreams and his performance is notably enhanced by the presence of sidemen Chuck Aarons and Jim Ackley on a somewhat abbreviated album package of ten tunes. Expatriate-Yankee Jonathan Edwards, reported to have emigrated to the Maritimes to escape Uncle Sam's absurdities, checks in with his third album Have a Good Time for Me and of the three his is the most satisfying because of its surprising range of musical appeal.

With Old Dan's Records, Lightfoot's year old release, he seemed to be moving toward new song forms more aligned with cocktail-blues than the traditional D-chord configurations he was often criticized for not varying. Songs such as "Lazy Mornin'" with its un-Lightfoot piano opening seemed to represent a yearning for more expansive musical horizons, but on Sundown Gordon seems to wish to refine and tailor the form he has perfected in how many years of songwriting? "Somewhere U.S.A." is a lilting song of the road given particular appeal by the presence of both of Lightfoot's excellent second guitarists — Red Shea on slide dobro and Terry Clements on lead. Shea is incidentally joined by John Stockfish on bass for this reunion album and their realignment with Lightfoot seems significant in assessing this album's appeal. In fact, on the title track (to be released as a single), Stockfish and Shea are featured on bass and electric lead, while Terry Clements fills in on lead acoustic guitar. The session-saturated Jim Gordon, on drums, completes the lineup. That ensemble is varied on the ten songs on this album, as on "The List", Rick Haynes takes Stockfish's bass duties to help shape this number into the type of toe-tapper that "You are What I Am" represented on Lightfoot's previous release. Other highlights on Sundown include "Too Late For Prayin'" with its careful integration of Nick DeCaro's strings reminiscent of "If You Could Read My Mind", and the beautiful "Seven Island Suite".

Unlike the split between Blood Sweat & Tears and David Clayton-Thomas, that between Lightfoot and ex-lead singer Bob McBride has not resulted in any considerable deterioration in the careers of either party. McBride's second album, produced by Dennis Murphy, was recorded here at Thunder Sound, and the ten brief but compactly arranged tunes, nine of which were composed by the singer, are showcases for the powerful voice of this Canadian crooner.

Some smooth background vocals enhance the merit of tunes such as "Perfect Day" and "Mother Nature's Music", while Jim Ackley's string arrangements never intrude with saccharine smoothness, but float behind the arrangements as a proper backdrop to McBride's instrumental backings.

While Jonathan Edwards hasn't the personal identification with the eleven songs on Have a Good Time for Me that Lightfoot and McBride have with their own compositions, he remains a brilliant interpreter of material. The songs are from such relatively unknown writers as Eric Liljquist, Joe Dolce and Malcom McKenney, with one from the old blue yodeller Jimmy Rodgers. The integration of piano with Rythm guitar on "King of Hearts" is representative of the sound Edwards is able to utilize by phasing piano backing into even the countrified tunes such as "Place I've Been". The result is a strange interplay between piano and such instruments as pedal steel guitar, and Rodgers might take a spin in the grave to hear the way Edwards has taken the country blues to the city by restructuring "Travelling Blues" around "Bill Elliot's tinkling ivories.

No matter what the blend of instruments, Edwards' songs are delivered with all of the spirited enthusiasm that shot "Sunshine" to the top of the pop charts a couple of years back. "Sit Down Rock and Roll Man" appears to be a suitable portrait of Edwards, as it documents the tribulations of a singer who feels music with his heart but won't sell his soul for his rock and roll. It seems a good profile of Edwards who seems to demand that a song have a basic good-time feel whether the tune fits into country, folk or soft rock genres.

dick loney

Junk songs are great but production fucked up

Rock 'N' Roll Animal
Lou Reed
RCA; $7.29

If a lot of people wondered how Lou Reed was going to be able to follow up his previous release, Berlin, and still maintain the high standards of that masterpiece, then his latest release should make them very happy. It's easy to see, right from the electrifying performance by guitarist Steve Hunter in the "Intro" and up to the final notes of "Rock 'N' Roll", that Rock 'N' Roll Animal is a killer.

The performance, recorded live in New York at the Academy of Music, includes four tunes from Reed's days with the great Velvet Underground—"Heroin", "Sweet Jane", "White Light/White Heat", "Rock'n'Roll" as well as "Lady Day" from Berlin. The band is made up by organist Ray Colcord, guitarist Dick Wagner, Toronto's own Pentil Ghan on drums and bassist Prakash John, as well as the already mentioned Steve Hunter, who nearly steals the show with his lead guitar.

The stunning display by Hunter's soaring lead in the "Intro" sets a pace that is maintained throughout the record, both by the band and by Reed, who has never sounded better. His voice has as much bite as the lead guitar and he uses it to set the tone and mood or "Sweet Jane". It's a short story in which Reed captures and develops his character with just the right amount of sarcasm, and uses the band to round out the picture with music. And that is the important factor in this record, the way in which Reed uses the band to complement and reinforce his own limited vocal abilities.

The gentle, laid back opening of "Heroin", leads into Reed's stoned-like interpretation of a junkie's dream song. Here the band is synchronized with the lyrics and as the spike sinks in the music rushes, hitting the brain with a perfect bull's eye.

Friday, March 15, 1974

And as Reed builds up the tune, with his haunting lyrics and wiped out vocals, the band surges in a wave like motion using every instrument to its limit. It's a nightmarish vision of a human being, who, trapped by pleasure and desire, yet knowing that it's killing him, finds it too strong to overcome. It is a combination of despair and surrender which is interwoven with the music by Reed's passionless singing.

On side two Reed opens with "White Light/White Heat", and spits out the lyrics against the pounding rhythmic pace set by the hand. It's another junk song, but it lacks the remorse and fear present in "Heroin". It is actually a joyous celebration and, as the lead guitar wails away, the bass throbs and the drums roar, Reed screams out with joy and pleasure. This is followed by "Lady Day", from the Berlin album, and Reed builds up the ominous mood to the point where it surpasses the original version. The band is just perfect, although at times it does tend to drown out Reed's voice.

The final cut "Rock'n'Roll", is a true classic, as Reed rises to the occasion with his strongest performance ever. Praise again goes to the band and one can sense that Reed himself knows this and is swept along by the music. And as the music fades, to the applause and shouts from the audience, it is easy to see that Lou Reed has truly established himself as great performer.

Overall the only trouble is that words are simply unable to describe this LP, you have to hear it to believe it. Not enough praise can be directed to all the members of the band, which unfortunately was brought together only for the tour, and their brilliant performance. Rock 'N' Roll Animal should rate as the best rock album of the year, and if RCA hadn't fucked up the production, especially on "Rock'n'Roll" where they left the bass out, making the lead guitar sound as if it was playing at fourty-five rpm, this record would have been flawless.

serge schardt

Applications are now being accepted for the use of the University College Playhouse during the spring and summer of 1974.

Rent is negotiable

Decisions on allocation of the space will be made during the first week of April.

Please send applications to:

Allen Booth,
79A St. George Street,
Toronto

Applications are now being accepted
for the position of

STUDENT ADMINISTRATOR
at the University College Playhouse

Term: Sept. 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975
Salary: $2200.

Applicants should have been involved with some Playhouse activities during the past year.

Please send resumé and anything else of interest to:
ALLEN BOOTH
79 A St. George Street

Deadline for applications is Friday March 29

SMC FILM CLUB
PRESENTS

FRIDAY MARCH 15
SATURDAY MARCH 16 $1.00
7:30 & 10 P.M. - CARR HALL

Watsup

rock

Almost as if it were directly in response to the ever increasing number of essay and problem set due dates, musical activity has dropped off from its recent peak. If you do want a break from your work or you happen to be one of the lucky few with time on your hands there are still a few things going on that could prove diverting.

Phil Ochs is at Riverboat, 134 Yorkville (922-6216), tonight and tomorrow. Ochs was one of the most successful protest singer of the early '60's and by far the most radical. His most famous compositions include "Changes", "There But For Fortune", "I Ain't A Marching Anymore", "Draft Dodger Rag", "Cops of the World", "Santo Domingo", "Miranda", and "Pleasures of the Harbour". When he was here last, in August, he was performing most of those familiar tunes. He hadn't written any new songs in over three years. Ochs is doing two shows each night one at 8:30 and the other at 11 pm.

Roy Buchanan a solid class 'A' guitarist who was born in Arkansas and grew up in California, returns to Toronto for the second time in six months to perform two concerts at the Victory Theatre, tonight. The shows begin at 8 and 11 pm and tickets are $4.50 plus tax. Rick Roberts, a former Flying Burrito Brother, who went solo is also on the bill.

At Fiddler's Green Coffeehouse tonight, you can hear the topical political songs of Bill Steele. The Bluegrass Jam performs, you-know-what kind of music on Tuesday. Admission is $1 and you can get more information by calling 489-3001.

The Good Brothers are at the El Mocambo (921-2558), until tomorrow. Roomful of Blues, who play some great dixieland are opening on Monday.

Gordon Lightfoot's annual Massey Hall concert series begins again next Thursday and carries through each successive evening 'til March 25. Those concerts were sold out and an extra Sunday matinee which was added was also sold out. I've been told that some 'observed' seats have recently been made available. There are approximately 95 of these seats per show. Most are behind thin posts and would require you to lean over about six inches to see the stage. You can get more information from the box office.

With spring almost here, it seems like a good time to run a contest. That's a poor excuse for a contest, but it's a slow week. The prizes will consist of an unspecified number of unspecified albums.

It's going to be easy to win. All you have to do is complete ONE of (a), (b), (c) or (d) and mail it to "Contest", The Varsity, 91 St. George Street.

(a) Write an essay on the effect of David Bromberg on China's cultural revolution.

(b) List your 5 favourite albums of all time.

(c) Who is Tom Walkom and what does he know that you don't about Robertson Davies' beard?

(d) All of the above.

Entries can be sent by campus mail or dropped off in person but they must be received by March 25. Winners will be announced in this space. All friends, relatives and slight acquaintances of David Bromberg, Tom Walkom and Robertson Davies are not eligible. Decision of the judges is completely arbitrary and probably ridiculous.

am

theatre

Since the last news release received from Second City the price of the dinner/theatre package has already gone up $1.50. Monday through Thursday it is $7.50 with showtime at 9 pm and Friday and Saturday $8.00 with showtime at 9 pm and 11 pm. I guarantee nothing by the time you get to the theatre! Their new show Heilo Dali opened this week at the Firehall Restaurant. Backdoor Theatre, at 474 Ontario Street, is currently presenting a new Canadian play The Proud One, by Lily Portiz Miller. It examines a closely knit Jewish family disrupted by the return of their rebellious over-proud daughter, Martha. Student tickets are $2.00. Also in performance right now is a production by Factory Theatre Lab of Dennis Hayes' new work Spaces. It is defined as a theatre piece of vibrant rhythms in speech, sound and movement which centres on personal spaces and the invasion of that space. Showplace is Bathurst United Church with a 9 pm curtain. Blitzkrieg, a dynamic look at the relationship between Hitler and Eva Braun depicting them as supreme role-players, continues until Sunday at the Poor Alex Theatre.

Coming up Monday March 18, and Tuesday March 19, the Playwright's Production Company at Toronto Centre 'or the Arts, presents two original one-act 'plays in progress', Lella by Terry Leeder and The Process by John Romano. The company has their home-base at 390 Dupont Street and admission is "pay-what-you-can". Waiting for Godot, performed by the Menagerie Players, opens March 19, at the Central Library Theatre and a production of Brecht's The Good Woman of Setzuan opens the same night at the St. Lawrence Centre. Another popular date next week is March 21, which heads off Arms and the Man at the Colonnade Theatre, Old Times at the Firehall Theatre (a Harold Pinter play directed by Toronto theatre critic Herbert Whittaker) and Marsh Hay at Hart House Theatre. Marsh Hay is the second Canadian play to be presented at Hart House this season and is also part of a special celebration and exploration of Canadian theatre before the sixties, sponsored jointly by the Graduate Drama Centre and York University's Faculty of Fine Arts. The celebration, taking place Thursday March 21 and Friday March 22, is a special selection of seminars, lectures, and plays shifting back and forth between Hart House and Curtis Lecture Hall at York University. Special guests include a star-studded cast of Canada's own. Contact the Drama Centre for further information.

ss

books

Simon & Schuster has reprinted Bill T. O'Brien's Summer of the Black Sun in a $1.25 pocket book version. It's a story of a young man in a mental institution who undergoes what R. D. Laing would call a journey through madness. It's unsentimental, yet full of feeling, and it makes for some fine reading. But don't believe me: Alden Nowlan liked it too.

A powerful book, and one that deserves a much fuller review than we are able to give it here, is Osip Mandelstam's Selected Poems; Oxford Press; $10.75, translated by Clarence Brown and W. S. Merwin. Mandelstam was a Russian poet, and one of the first order, who found it impossible to keep silent about the effects of Stalinism in Russia. For his courage, he was forbidden to publish, and later sent to a concentration camp, where he died, the date of his death unknown even to his widow, his body thrown into an unmarked mass grave.

With the publication of his works in English, at last, he should quickly win a following. Certainly with the publication of Nadezhda Mandelstam's (his wife) memoirs, a storm of abuse has materialized in Russian literary circles.

Much fuller discussion of the Mandelstam's and their books, and of the reaction to them, can be found in the New York Review of Books of February 7 and 21.

One of the less useless How-To books around is Jean Ranson Shortney's How to Live on Nothing; Simon & Schuster; 95¢. Of course, the price gives it away; you can't live on nothing; with nothing you can't even afford to buy the book. But the book does tell you about a lot of ways to save money, and live cheaply, and, more importantly, gives useful hints on how to do things, from making furniture to curing colds. And it's based on a philosophy of life, as well, that emphasize knowing the world around you, understanding your appliances, the food you eat, re-using waste, relying on yourself instead of experts, etc.

New old books department: McClelland and Stewart has issued a paperback version of Pierre Berton's The National Dream and The Last Spike, abridged, in one volume. Priced at $4.95, it contains about half of the material of the original works. This probably means, points out Dave Basskin, whose syndicated music review you read in the pages of the Review, that the two volumes will not come out unabridged in paperback. So if you want to know the whole story, you'll have to either buy the quite expensive hardcover versions, or try and find them in the library. Otherwise, you'll have to make do with this one-volume deal which concentrates mainly on the story of the building of the railroad, and takes out much of the social context that doesn't directly pertain, according to Berton.

However, you'll be compensated with "96 pages of colour photographs from the CBC's multi-million dollar production" of the tale.

ud

review

editor
art books movies classical rock
theatre production

tom walkom
david wise
ulli diemer
bob bossin
david basskin
allan mandell
sandra soucotte
gene allen

Friday, March 15, 1974

Gordon Lightfoot returns to Massey Hall for his annual concert series March 21. There are a few seats left.

Vic burnt the track

photosun

The Sunsensor sunglasses that darken and lighten automatically.

Shorrey's
OPTICIANS

70 BLOOR ST. W.
4 OTHER LOCATIONS IN TORONTO
SEE YOUR YELLOW PAGES

By H. DUBSKY and R. KEDDOR

The intramural track meet was held on March 5 and 12 at Hart House, involving participants from Vic, Knox, Meds, Eng, Dents, Trin, UC, Fac Ed, Innis, and Phys Ed. Vic emerged as the overall winner with 30 points followed closely by Knox with 25.

Others were Meds (5), Dents (2), Eng (2), UC (2), Trin, PHE, Innis and Fac Ed were shut out.

Vic showed their shapely legs and carried most of the sprint relays whereas Knox showed what enduring stuff they're made of by winning the distance medley relay and the one and two mile runs.

Turnout for the women's events was low, especially on March 12, but unofficially the points went this way: Meds (11), Trin (10), and Vic (5).

One composite women's team appeared for the second day of events and, facing no equivalent competition, the Fac Ed team, showing their true gentlemanly colors, offered to substitute. The event became known as the 'Motley Medley.'

In spite of an early lead by the men, the women, S. Beach (PHE), G. Anderson (PHE), J.

Fletcher (Grad) and L. Evans (Vic), proceeded to leave the males panting along the wayside.

Commenting after the victory, Evans had only this to say: "We needed the competition." And so yet another blow was struck against male chauvinism on the Hart House running track.

Vic A won the 4 x 1 lap relay in a time of 1:13.0. Members of the team were Hotrad, Warrick, Bars and McVarnish. Vic B was second. Meds and Knox A completed the field.

Vic B took the 4 x 6 relay in a time of 9:39.6. Warner, Ross, Donnan and Fulton were the members of the Vic team. In second was Vic A followed by Vic C and Knox B.

The one mile run was won by Sharpe of Knox in a time of 4:38.8. Sax of Knox was second. Lockhart of Vic third and Pislipo, a Dent, fourth.

The 4 x 3 relay was won by Vic A whose team consisted of McVarnish, Albo, Warrick and Hotrod. Their winning time was 4:11.0. Meds, Knox and Dents completed the roster.

Knox's Binkley, Laari, Morley and Sharpe took the 6x3x9x12 medley relay in 12:13.7. Other placing teams were Vic A, Vic B

Drown your sorrows...

The Varsity—Bill Dowkes

PHE student goes under in an inner-tube water polo game and Eng.

Sharpe also won the two mile run in 9:50.5. Morley, Woods and McKay placed second, third, and fourth.

In the women's competition, Trin took the 4 x 1 relay (1:28.8) followed by Meds. The Meds balanced that loss by taking the 4 x 3 relay in 5: 10.5 over Trin's 5:17.1.

Goat from Vic beat Wilson (Meds) and Seagram (Trin) in the one mile run in 6:23.7.

Remember when?

Alexander the Great held a wake of sorts on the death of one of his warriors, which climaxed in a gymnastic and musical contest with prizes for the doughtiest drinkers. Thirty-five of the competitors died on the spot, six afterwards, among them the prize-winner.

John Huizinga
in Homo Ludens

Curlers say 'bye

In women's interfaculty curling, the battle for first place was won by the SMC team. Joan Hughes (skip), Donna MacKenzie, Debra Pearce and Carol Messier. In second place were the Dents, skipped by Marg Bullen.

This marks the end of the WAA interfac curling season. A great deal of thanks goes to Mrs Mills, our coach, and to Shirley Morrison, our curator, who put a lot of work into the curling programme to make it another successful season of "good curling."

Have a Great Summer! See you back in September!

FIGURE SKATERS

PLEASE NOTE

The regular classes at Varsity Arena run by the Benson Bldg. are continuing until Wednesday, March 27.

Class times are as follows:

TUESDAY: 11:00 a.m.-12:00 a.m.
12:30 p.m.-1:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY: 2:30 p.m.-4:00 p.m.

$40 a month and all the anguish you can eat.

Some job description, eh? Forty bucks walking around money. Spending your working hours listening to the wretched pour out their misery.

Our customers cut through every stratum of society. Our territory is all over: prisons, tough bars, squalid rooms jammed with families of five, broadloomed suburban living rooms jammed with everything but hope. All those folk standing in their own garbage. Those are our people. We try to help them take the garbage and re-cycle it into something useful, rewarding and Christian.

We're helped by a decent education. By intelligence, empathy and a sense of humour. By developing a tough and gentle spirit. By having as a well-spring a rock-like faith in Christ.

Come help us help others to help themselves. It's an extraordinary life for the right kind of man.

Think about it. Then, if you'd like to hear more, write or call us.

THE REDEMPTORIST PRIESTS

Gerry Pettipas, C.S.S.R.,
426 St. Germain Avenue, Toronto
M5M 1W7
(416) 466-9265

STANLEY KUBRICK'S
CLOCKWORK ORANGE
and
AL PACINO and GENE HACKMAN
SCARECROW
SCARECROW
8:00 & 10:10
CLOCKWORK
7:50 ONLY
SAT & SUN CONT FROM 1.45

new yorker 651 YONGE ST.
925-6400

VARSITY ARENA
C.I.A.U.
CANADIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE NATIONAL HOCKEY CHAMPIONSHIP
FINAL
WATERLOO
VS
SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS
Saturday March 16th at 2:00 p.m.

Tickets on sale now at Athletic Office and Varsity Arena.

PRICES:

General Admission $1.00

Reserved $2.00

sports

Lawrence Clarke
923-4053

SMC overcomes New 6-4 to enter finals

By DAVE STUART
Division I

SMC pulled the plug on New College's hopes for a playoff spot in the final round of division I hockey Wednesday night. They downed the Grus 6-4 in the second game of their total point series. The flying fathers overcame a one goal deficit from the first game to win the semi-final round 7-6.

New College started strong in the opening period and led 3-2 on a goal by Prentice and two by Carew. Tate and Brady replied for St. Mikes. Play was crisp and exciting as both teams worked hard throughout the period.

The second stanza was short on goals (only one by Rogers for SMC) but was long on penalties. The officials handed out tripping, interference and elbowing penalties with reckless abandon. Brady, a tough SMC rearguard, suffered an eye injury when clipped by a high stick but later returned to finish the game.

The Grus' defense fared no better as Gaye Westlake, an emergency replacement for a sidelined regular, suffered a gash on the forehead in a collision with two other players. He required several stitches.

In the third period SMC overran the faltering New defense. New was unable to move the puck out of their own end and gave up three goals to Corcoran, Tate and Kahner.

Actually, the score would have been much higher for St. Mikes but the forwards insisted on hitting the puck four times rather than the twice.

New's only goal of the third period was scored by Minns.

SMC now faces Law I in a best of four game final series. The first game in Monday at 7 pm.

The New College goalkeeper and defence watch anxiously during the close playoff game which SMC eventually won 6-4.

Division II

In second division action Jr. Eng grabbed a quick 4-1 lead in the first period and hung on to defeat a persistent Fac Ed squad 6-4. Skule amassed 10 goals in the two game series to six for the teachers and earned a berth in the finals next week.

In the opening period the plumbars were led by Gilbert with two goals. Tock and Reader got one each for Eng. Fac Ed's only goal of the period went to their captain Glynn.

Jr Eng's wide territorial advantage of the first stanza was short-lived as Glynn and Nicholson took over the play for the pedagogues. Glynn picked up two more goals to complete his hat-trick and cut Skule's lead to 4-3.

Glynn's offensive prowess for the Bloor St. Bullies was marred by his chippy play and he spent several minutes in the sin bin. What else would you expect from a guy with six elbows on each arm?

By the third period, Jr Eng had recovered their skating legs and tallied two more goals on efforts by Seckington and Kennedy. McKenzie netted the final goal for the diehard teachers late in the period.

Fac Ed vented their frustration at the officials near the end of the game and were rewarded with a two minute bench penalty. The penalty was served by a somewhat irate Patterson who also picked up a misconduct penalty for whispering unprintables in the ref's ear.

Meds shunt SMC from b'ball playoffs

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

A year ago yesterday a Varsity sportswriter covering the interfaculty basketball championships, wrote:

"One has to go with Law as the favorite of the Sifton Cup. This is the last year for most of the players while this Meds team is the start of a dynasty. Look for last year's champs, Law, to postpone Meds win streak by a year."

The first part of his prediction came true — Law did defeat Meds in a hard-fought battle last year. And Wednesday night, Meds went a long way to proving the second part of his prophecy when they knocked SMC A out of the playoffs with a 61-60 upset victory.

SMC, who overpowered the rest of the league during the regular season, watched amusedly while a hyper-energetic Meds team missed their first twelve shots from the floor. For their part, SMC grabbed several defensive rebounds from these wild shots to set up on early lead.

Meds eventually settled down and began to cut into the SMC lead, and it was only 12-8 with 11:18 left in the first half.

The doctors adopted a professional bedside manner and began to cut into the SMC lead, and it was only 12-8 with 11:18 left in the first half.

Meds only hit on 11 of 44 shots from the floor in the first half, and if SMC had grabbed more than four defensive rebounds, the score might have been much higher for the Mike's.

In the second half, the see-saw battle continued with the lead changing hands several times. The score was 52 all when SMC called a time-out with 5:32 left in the game.

After that, Meds seemed to hear the voice of prophecy as they jumped to a 57-52 lead. SMC tried hard but to even it up but the Meds defence left them only the outside and that wasn't enough, even though SMC scored a last second basket.

Hibloom lead Meds' shooters with 23 points, followed by Sternberg (14) and Horenbias (12). Trafford shot 14 for the mikes with Dziemianczuk and Poland adding 12 each.

In another interfac semi-final, Vic evened up their series with Sr Eng after losing the first game last Friday. Vic won this one 83-65.

Eng got hot outside shooting last game to win and started this game in the same way. The engineers led 10-6 at the eight minute mark but then began to sag under the relentless team play of the polished Vic offence.

Vic lost the opening game using a zone and switched to a man-to-man system for this game. By the middle of the first half, it had stymied the engineers, who depended heavily on two shooters.

Vic began the second half leading 43-34 and gradually accelerated, to the victory with the engineers apparently powerless to halt it.

Vic got 20 points from Ezzers, 14 from Hollingsworth and 10 each from Young and Eben. Gratz led the engineers with 19, with Tonos adding 17.

Viv and Sr Eng meet again in the deciding game next Tuesday at 7:30 pm with the winner meeting Meds for the championship.

Women's hockey playoffs

By JANET CLARKE

In interfac women's ice hockey A league, PHE II led the field with 12 points. Erindale had second place with 11 points. Behind these two were SMC (10 points), Trinity (8), PHE I (7), Meds I (4), Vic (2), Meds II (2 points, defaulted out of the league).

In the semifinals PHE II beat SMC 2-1, with Carol McDougal scoring one goal and assisting on Pat Williams' goal for HPE II. Priscilla McLennon put SMC on the score board.

Erin soundly defeated Trin by a 5-1 score. McDonough and Bray each scored two for the winners. DeTallo brought the score total to five. Trish Beck scored for Trin in the first period.

PHE II and Erin will now meet in the finals on March 18 4-5 pm.

New College (10) lead the B league with (eight points). PHE I, SMC and PHE II were all tied in second place with seven points each. Engineering was next with six points, followed by Innis (5), New 9 (4), Nursing-Pols (3), UC-Music (3), Trinity (3), Vic (3) and Pharm (3).

SMC defaulted to New (10). PHE I downed PHE II 2-0, which means it's New (10) and PHE I who meet in the final game on March 18th, at 8 pm.

A moment of surrealism descends on the SMC-Meds basketball game.

STOP

Think!

The issues transcend 'freedom of speech' or 'academic freedom'
—inside—

Berns and Bloom leave Cornell for U of T,	page 3
SAC to organize forum on "academic freedom",	page 3
"Academic freedom" as a medieval concept,	page 5
Faculty chickens come home to roost,	page 4
Banfield's fan mail,	pages 5-8

HERE AND NOW

Friday's Variety will be the last issue before Friday March 29. All Here and Now entries up to noon, Friday March 29 should be submitted to the Variety office no later than 5 pm Thursday.

WEDNESDAY

All day

Permanent & Summer Jobs are coming in every day, and today is a good day for '74 graduates to register for our Permanent Job Referral Service. Career Counseling & Placement Centre Room 412

10 am

Great reductions—Young Socialist Book and Record Sale, come and bargain with us, two weeks, Sid Smith Foyer.

noon

"CUSO at Erindale" - there will be a CUSO information session for all people interested in working overseas for two years at Erindale College, Room 3127.

12:15 pm

The NDP Youth will be holding an important meeting today in the south sitting Room, Hart House. Newcomers are welcome.

1:15 pm

Victoria College Drama Club presents Arkansas - a play by David Alken. UC Playhouse, admission free.

3:10 pm

Victoria College presents the German film Die Buddenbrooks. New Academic Building, Room 3, Victoria College; Admission free

4 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Prof. Sol Green speaking on "What's Jewish About Social Work" at Hilliel House.

5 pm

Jewish Careers Symposium with Mr. Jerome Diamond who will be speaking on "The Field: Employment, Salaries, Mobility" at Hilliel House.

6:30 pm

Hillels Kosher Supper will be served tonight at Hilliel House. Please call in to reserve by 5:00 pm today

7 pm

Abby Hoffman will speak on Women and Sports in the Free Lecture series on Women, organised by INX 260. Women Oppression and Liberation. Faculty of Education Auditorium, Spadina and Bloor 928-4928.

Jewish Careers Symposium with Prof. Ben Schlesinger who will be speaking on "Professional Education for Social Work in North America" at Hilliel House.

7:15 pm

A reminder to athletes with invitations that the annual UTAU athletic dinner is being held tonight in the Great Hall, Hart House. Ken Dryden will be the guest speaker.

7:30 pm

Films at OISE: "Disinherited" with Marlene Dietrich by von Sternberg at 7:30 and "Bus Stop" with Marilyn Monroe at 9:30. $1.25 at 7:30 or $1.00 at 9:30. 252 Bloor West

8 pm
Come to a New Year's Party! The Baha'is are commemorating the beginning of year 131 B.E. and welcome you to join them for coffee. International Student Centre.

Jewish Careers Symposium with Prof. Ben Shapiro who will be speaking on "Social Work Opportunities in Israel" at Hilliel House.

THURSDAY

11 am

There will be Mesas Hispanicas in Room 123, Sussex Court, 21 Sussex Ave. from 11:00 am to 2:00 pm. Come to eat your lunch and practice your Spanish (U of T Hispanic Club).

noon

Thursday at the Media Centre - Preview - "To Syngene and to Play", a colour presentation of Medieval music and "York Cycle", a mobile Medieval drama en route through the streets of York in the Corpus Christi Festival, 121 St. George Street, Room 202.

If you have been wondering, why don't you come and find out about Baha'i at the regular U of T Baha'i Club fireside, held in the South Sitting room of Hart House. Bring your questions and your lunch.

1 pm

Prof. Lionel Vallée (Montreal) is back from Chile and talking about it in the South Sitting Room, Hart House.

1:15 pm

Victoria College Drama Club presents "Arkansas" - a play by David Alken. UC Playhouse, admission free.

4 pm

Lecture: Prof. Blair Neatby: Mackenzie King and French Canada. Lecture Theatre, Library Science Wing, Roberts Library.

There will be a very important meeting of the Graduate French Association, to discuss the departmental Academic Advisory Committee's views on restructuring the present MA and PhD programmes. Room 138, University College

5 pm

All graduate students are welcome to attend the fourth informal talk in the Graduate French Association's current series of discussions with professors of the French department. Professor J. Flinn will be the speaker. Women's Union, 79 St. George St.

6:30 pm

Hillels Kosher Supper will be served tonight at Hilliel House. Please call in to reserve by 5:00 pm today.

Practice for Recorder Club to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

7 pm

The German Conversation Group. 3rd Floor, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

7:30 pm

Films at OISE: "Hitler: Last Ten Days" with Alec Guinness at 7:30 and "Waterloo" with Rod Taylor, Orson Welles and Christopher Plummer at 9:30, $1.50 at 7:30 and $1.00 at 9:30; 252 Bloor West.

8 pm
St. Michael's College and the Faculty of Medicine present a lecture on "Science and Medicine: The Moral Dimension." Prof. J.M. Gustavson, Professor of Theological Ethics at the University of Chicago will speak on "Genetic screening and Human Values." Medical Sciences Auditorium. Admission Free

8:30 Forum: Banning Banfield: how to fight the university's racism. Speakers include Charles Roach, Gianni Grohova from Toronto's black and Italian communities. We will discuss "free speech," and how to stop racism like Banfield. Hart House Debates Room.

Oleg Grabar Fogg Art Museum, Harvard University: "The Alhambra: Palace or Myth?" Royal Ontario Museum Auditorium.

Mr. John Spilsbury will be guest speaker at Scarborough College in room H214. He will discuss "Everything you wanted to know about Highland Creek, Port Union and West Hill, but were too afraid to ask."

Seminar: Prof. Blair Neatby. The Problems of Writing the Biography of King: Government by Spook. Upper Library, Massey College.

FRIDAY

10 am

The South Asian Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, announces a lecture by Professor Eugene F. Ischick, chairman of for South and Southeast Asia Studies, University of California and author of "Politics and Social Conflict in South India" on "The Rise of the Backward Classes in the Tamil Region" in Room 2090, Sidney Smith Hall.

10:30 am

Oleg Grabar, Fogg Art Museum, Harvard University, "The Illustrations of the Arabic Magamat." Royal Ontario Museum, Room 4. Department of Islamic Studies and Royal Ontario Museum.

Dance supports Artistic fund

108 people were arrested during the Artistic Woodwork strike this winter, most of them have received heavy fines and many are being sent to jail as the cases continue before the courts.

The alliance of Artistic management, hired scabs, Annings Security, Metro police and the courts leaves many victims in its trail: workers whose jobs were stolen, and defendants hit with heavy fines and little means to pay them.

THE WORD IS YOU ARE GOING TO JOIN US AT HART HOUSE FOR

EQUINOX

TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1974

READ ALL ABOUT THE EVENING'S EXCITING EVENTS

6:30 p.m.

La Federation Des Cooperatives du Nouveau Quebec Exhibit - Canadian Eskimo and Indian crafts

Camera Club displays prize winning photographs from the 52nd. Annual Exhibition.

Archery Club: Intra-Club Tournament with a prize for best bare bow

7:00 p.m.

Hart House Chorus Concert - a selection of Canadian folksongs

Woodsmen Demonstrations

Chess Club "simul". Committee members will challenge enthusiasts.

Yoga Demonstration

7:30 p.m.

Concert - U. of T. Faculty of Music's "String Quartet"

"Garbage", U. of T. Film Board's production.

The Bridge Club will set up tables so you can earn some ACBL points.

8:00 p.m.

First of three tours of the Hart House Art Collection

Art Class for the absolute and utter beginner. Directed by a famous artist.

The Library Committee presents an evening with Mr. Marshall McLuhan. Admittance by ticket only.

8:30 p.m.

Lacrosse Game

Concert featuring U. of T. Faculty of Music's Brass Choir. A resounding musical experience.

10:00 p.m.

DANCE to the rhythms of a six piece steel band "Syncona". Calypso, Jamaican rag and soul music. Refreshment available in the Lower Gallery.

NOTE: Food Services hours are extended for EQUINOX.

HART HOUSE

ART GALLERY GROUP SHOW
VOTE FOR THE PAINTING YOU WOULD LIKE TO SEE PURCHASED

GALLERY HOURS:
MONDAY, 11 A.M. - 9 P.M.
TUESDAY TO SATURDAY, 11 A.M. - 5 P.M.
SUNDAY, 2- 5 P.M.

MOON HORN JAZZ CONCERT

PAUL GROSNEY
TODAY
EAST COMMON ROOM, 12-2 P.M.

CAMERA CLUB ELECTIONS

TODAY
VOTING IN THE CLUBROOM

MUSIC THURSDAY NIGHT

TORONTO BRASS
THURS., MAR. 21
MUSIC ROOM, 6 P.M.

DEBATE

RESOLVED THAT THIS HOUSE HAS LOST CONFIDENCE IN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA
TUES., MAR. 26 DEBATES ROOM, 8 P.M.

EQUINOX IS COMING

TUES., MAR. 26
RESERVE THE WHOLE EVENING

An Offer You Can't Refuse

Lowest Discount Prices On...

- HI-FI STEREO EQUIPMENT Pioneer, Kenwood, Sony, Dual, Telefunken etc.
- COLOUR TV Zenith, Admiral, FCA etc
- CAR-RADIOS AND TAPE PLAYER All makes, including Blaupunkt AM-FM and Stereo Models

GIVE US
MAKE AND MODEL...
WE DO SELL
FOR LESS!

LOOK AROUND FOR YOUR BEST DEAL... THEN ASK FOR OUR STILL LOWER PRICE

KROMER RADIO LTD. 920-6700

112 Harbord St. (1 Block West of Spadina) Close to U. of T.

LUNCHEON NEWS

from under $1.00
Unique quick self-service
snack bar
hot and cold specialties

Now Appearing
BRASS TAX

A favourite drop in place for celebrity visitors. The Hick's the place to rub shoulders with the likes of KRIS KRISTOFFERSON, RITA COOLIDGE, GORDON LIGHTFOOT, IAN AND SILVIA, FRANK ZAPPA, the great BOB DYLAN and more

Always serving entertainment
- Biggest
Club
Dance
Floor
in Toronto
- No
Cover
Charge

NICKELODEON

279 Yonge at Dundas Square

ROUND Records

COME UP AND SEE US SOME TIME.
ONE FLIGHT HIGH AT...
46 BLOOR ST. WEST
921-6555

Loud voices not always consistent

Although several U of T professors are currently demanding guarantees of free speech following the Edward Banfield incident, their past record on civil liberties issues has not been strong.

History professor Michael Bliss, who hit the pages of the Toronto Star last week with his refusal to teach class until "free speech" is enforced, vigorously supported the suppression of free speech, due process, freedom of the press and freedom of association when the Trudeau government invoked the War Measures Act in October 1970.

Most serious observers now view the Act as an over-reaction to FLQ terrorism that month.

Evidence has revealed no "apprehended insurrection" existed as the government then alleged. Only a handful of the several hundred people arrested without charge were eventually brought to trial.

The Act allowed police to arrest without warrant and jail without charge. It permitted censorship of newspaper reports considered sympathetic to the FLQ.

Said Michael Bliss at the time: "This is an unprecedented crisis of a terrorist, revolutionary conspiracy. The government has not over-reacted but possibly under-reacted."

At last Friday's meeting of the U of T history department, Bliss spearheaded an unsuccessful move to bar student rep Gus Richardson on the grounds he was not properly elected.

The department voted with some dissent to endorse the U of T Faculty Association's condemnation of U of T president John Evans' handling of the Banfield incident, and to demand Evans enforce "free speech" with tough disciplinary procedures.

When Richardson opposed the motion and several other abstained, Bliss criticized them for breaching departmental unity.

The history department motion was moved by Kenneth McNaught who also supported the suppression of civil liberties in Canada during October 1970.

McNaught said then in the Toronto Star:

"Nor...were Ottawa and Quebec City incorrect in apprehending insurrection. Use of the massive political symbol of the War Measures Act rather than the various police options based upon usage and the Criminal Code was correct.

Now Bliss, McNaught and others are outraged by the threat to free speech posed by the SDS disruption of the Banfield lecture last week. They are demanding president Evans capitulate to their demands for a hard-line discipline statement enforcing "free speech."

No faculty members have yet commented on whether their current enthusiasm for "free speech" is an attempt to use a popular issue to embarrass Evans and increase their power in the university.

Professor charged

A U of T professor was formally charged yesterday with common assault stemming from a March 12 incident following a lecture by controversial American urbanologist Edward Banfield.

Teresa Hibbert, a third year York University student, said in a sworn information she was struck during a scuffle in University College's West Hall following the Tuesday afternoon lecture.

After Banfield's talk, a group of persons surrounded Banfield in an attempt to help escort him from the room which contained some hecklers.

History Professor Robert Bothwell is scheduled to appear in court at old city hall on May 2.

Academic affairs prepares for further discipline problems

At the outset of yesterday's academic affairs committee meeting vice-provost Don Forster summarized the present state of administration action arising out of the March 13 incident at which American urbanologist Edward Banfield was prevented from speaking by opponents of his alleged racist theories.

At a meeting of the executive committee last Thursday to which representatives of student groups (unidentified) were invited, it was decided to give jurisdiction to CAPUT, the committee set up to handle disciplinary matters under the U of T Act.

History professor Milton Israel, new vice-provost, who was to have begun his activities July 1, is working on guidelines for free speech in consultation with campus groups.

Forster said the Administration does not want to be caught unprepared again, in case of another disruption. The Banfield affair will be discussed further at the next meeting of the Governing Council, Forster said.

Academic Affairs Chairman Keith Dove revealed Banfield was invited to speak three months ago. Dove felt this fact weighed against the view, held by some, that Banfield was invited to provoke certain sections of the student body.

Committee Member Prof. W.B. Dunphy saw the University as a place where extreme views could be aired, so long as they had scholarly pretensions.

Bill Nelson, Chairman of the Faculty Association, said Banfield was clearly not a racist, from his reading of Banfield's work. Rather, Nelson said, Banfield endeavours to substitute class for race as the determining factor in blacks' poverty.

However, Nelson also found Banfield "insensitive, wooden, and often unhistorical" in his theories.

Important meeting

An important Varsity staff meeting at one pm today will include a screening of all candidates running for staff positions on the paper next year.

All staff are urged to attend and take part in these decisions which will make the world safe for democracy.

The voting will not take place tomorrow. It will take place Friday before and during the staff meeting.

To make an informed choice and have a good screening, staff are urged to come in early and read copies of submissions received from candidates for the various editorial positions.

The Cornell capers of Bloom and Berns

By BOB GAUTHIER

"Once a show of force has been made and it has been established who has the power, the group that has won is in command."

Allan Bloom at Cornell during demonstrations in April, 1969 as quoted by the New York Times. Allan Bloom and Walter Berns are two fairly recent political economy devotees at the University of Toronto. Both are former professors at Cornell University; that is, professors until the student demonstrations of April and May 1969, when Black students protesting racist practices and teachings at Cornell decided they had had enough.

Berns is now a member of the American Studies Committee at U of T, one of a few professors who annually invite one of their "fellow Americans" north into Canada to speak at U of T. Bloom is a mere political economy professor, majoring in "Plato according to Bloom."

Both men played key roles at Cornell in the spring of 1969 in their vigorous denunciation of what they felt was a "too-liberal" administration and a student body that had gained too much power at the expense of the professionals — the faculty. Berns and Bloom were involved in a circle of senior faculty members who called for "law and order" on campus. They were among approximately 70-90 faculty members out of a teaching body of 1,300. The rest took a more moderate or even a liberal line, recognizing that legitimate grievances did exist among the Black population at Cornell.

Berns' and Bloom's actions at Cornell are ironically similar to their actions of the past week at this university.

Blacks seize buildings

The conservative faculty's reaction at Cornell stemmed from the seizure of university buildings through use of force by Blacks who felt they needed to press their points of discrimination.

The occupation was a result of steady tension and escalation, with many students bringing guns onto campus. The Blacks who took charge of the buildings were also armed. However, no one was injured and the occupiers eventually surrendered to police.

Faced with increasing escalation of racial and other tensions the university administration, under liberal president James A. Perkins decided not to press charges in recognition that grievances were justified and legitimate protests should not be punished. Both administration and faculty did agree, however, that the occupiers had gone too far in using force and guns to demonstrate their point.

Some faculty took the matter more seriously, seeing the occupation as a threat to their "academic freedom." American political science professor Clinton Rossiter took much of the initiative in drawing up a statement signed by about 40 members of the history and government departments warning that if the agreement was affirmed, they would "undertake a review of our relationship to the university in the light of this intolerable, and one would have thought, unthinkable situation."

"My feeling is that a man can't teach in a place that is in a condition of turmoil. I don't mean I want a state of constant serenity. I feel once in a while a crisis is good for us—it reminds the people on the outside that we are part of the real world," Rossiter said.

Demands supported

In fact, many white students at Cornell adopted a "Black-is-right" stance; they condemned the seizing of the building and carrying of guns, but believed that black demands on the university were justified.

Even 26 faculty members supported seizure of the buildings, while 49 said they would strike until the demands of black students for a restructuring of the university were met.

President Perkins supported a student-organized two-day teach in and classroom discussions to discuss the university and "its future direction toward a more humane and relevant institution in the 1970's."

With little change in the faculty position of opposition to concessions to those students who occupied the buildings Perkins set up an emergency advisory board comprised of three faculty, three students, and three administrators.

On April 24, 1969, Cornell's faculty overwhelmingly reversed itself and nullified the suggested disciplinary action against the five Black students. However, a small minority of senior professors expressed disgust at what they believed to be "abject capitulation." The faculty decision was received with the cheers of 8,000 of Cornell's approximately 14,000 students.

Berns: 'abject surrender'

Walter Berns, then professor of government, like his colleague Bloom, called the faculty reversal "abject surrender."

"And anyone who claims he voted one way on Monday but then, having had an opportunity for rational discussion in an atmosphere free of coercion, changed his mind, is simply not telling the truth."

The Cornell Daily Sun said "the huge congregation of students (sitting it out in the gym)... served notice to the faculty that it has had enough of pig-headedness and insensitivity."

"Cornell was heading for an explosion and the faculty didn't seem to care enough to avoid it. The thousands in Burton Hall last night did care."

Nevertheless Berns resigned. The New York Times said: "Professor Berns, in an emotional farewell, said he could no longer teach on a campus where academic freedom was dead."

"You know me for a man who says what's on his mind," he told the students. "There's no question in my mind I can't do it anymore."

Bloom: 'moral revulsion'

"Another member who seemed on the verge of resigning was Allen Bloom, a professor of government, who told the student meeting he felt, a 'simple moral revulsion at faculty members being threatened.'"

"Those who make the revolution do not cease their demands with the accession to power... we are in for difficult days."

"He found the Cornell episode an 'entirely new thing in American universities, a complete capitulation under threat of firearms to a group of students who have a program for transformation of the university.'"

"He said it was now difficult to imagine how the university could resist any demand for restructuring in general and the curriculum and teaching in particular."

"Once a show of force has been made and it has been established who has the power, the group that has won is in command," he said.

"The resemblance on all levels to the first stages of a totalitarian takeover are almost unbelievable," the professor went on.

On April 28, 40 professors, including Nobel laureate Hans Bethe, professor of physics, signed a pledge to remain at Cornell for the present.

The New York Times quotes Bethe as saying: "We intend to stand together in the present crisis, to stay at Cornell and to remain in contact with our students as teachers and friends, whether in formal classes or otherwise."

"We call upon students and colleagues to join us."

"We recognize the need for many substantial changes."

However, Bethe stressed that academic freedom must be preserved.

On May 1, 1969, the New York Times published a letter from Bruce Wallace, professor of genetics at Cornell. The letter was dated April 28. Wallace said in part: "The issues and their causes are so complex that only their bare bones can be presented here... The majority of students realize that a faculty is necessary for a university; not all faculties have understood that the reverse is equally true."

On May 4, six SDS members (who had participated in the earlier student disruptions, along with other campus groups) were arrested for disrupting.

Allan Bloom dismissed the arrests as "a sop to the (university) trustees."

Bloom continued: "This action is as empty as the resolution on academic freedom passed at the faculty meeting yesterday. None of these measures go to the root causes of the current anarchy at Cornell."

On May 17, the New York Times published another letter, this time from five Cornell faculty members. The letter read in part: "Since the eventful April 23 we have met with our students in our classrooms, in our offices, and at large and small meetings, spoken out against destructive elements, and vindicated academic freedom by the best way there is—by exercising it in full measure."

THE Varsity

TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors
Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Slobinick
Tom Walcott
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

Hear ye, Hear ye. In olde merrie England the couple to be married (or married) announced the joyous fact by publishing the bans. Tonight we carried this tradition by publishing about the banning. Not getting married were Marina Straus, Gary Welland, Gene Allen, Betsy Swift, Art Moses, Bob Bet-on, Chris Probert, and lovable Igor KGB

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Dalton's Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 61 St. George St.

Faculty chickens come home to roost

"Freedom of speech" and "academic freedom" are not the real issues at this time on the U of T campus. These tired "civil libertarian clichés" are nothing more than needless "red herrings."

What really is at stake is the very real question of racism at the university and how it subtly affects each and every one of us.

One group's reaction to racism—that of the SDS—has brought a negative response from some faculty, who profess they see the issue in terms of "freedom of speech". Foremost among these faculty members are great American "rugged individualists" Allan Bloom and Wally Berns. (You can read how "rugged" they are on page three.)

Students are essentially being used in what is an administration-faculty power play. Coincidentally for faculty members the SDS just happened along as the scapegoat at the opportune time.

It's no secret to anyone who has spoken to long-time conservative and University of Toronto Faculty Association president Bill Nelson that he views the administration as 'an evil'. The administration is often a thorn in the side of progress, but then again certain faculty members have had a good run at things in the past (U of T Act, 1971).

Nelson and company have complained throughout the present academic year that the administration is too soft with students: they would like nothing better than to see the non-academic sections of the Code of Behavior implemented.

For example, on November 28, 1973, Nelson wrote to Governing Council chairman Malim Harding: "The executive of the faculty association has asked me to express to you our concern over what, on two occasions in recent willingness on the part of the Governing Council or its academic affairs committee to accede to demands made by disruption or the threat of disruption."

Nelson ends the letter on an ominous note: "If this clear argument of principle and common sense is not sufficient, one might add the political observation that the new governing structure of this university has not yet established sufficient respect for its authority to throw any of it away."

Nelson and faculty friends must have done a double take, however, when the SDS disrupted the Governing Council meeting in January. Conservative philosophy professor Chuck Hanly was not allowed to speak, for the very good reason that he would not allow students of this university to speak.

When was the last time the faculty association threw open its meetings to the public? When did the Governing Council, which is supposed to represent all students at this university ever allow any person to speak unless it specifically approved of that person?

Do untenured faculty members have freedom of speech? Of course not.

Yet some of the faculty have the audacity to attack a group of students for not allowing a professor to lecture, using alleged racist theories.

Students at this university should have the right to heckle, and shout down other persons whose views they do not agree with. They should not however, physically impede someone from speaking.

The SDS is presently being tried by a "kangaroo court" of sorts—public opinion.

We would like to see the students, faculty, and even administration do a little bit of thinking. Representatives from all estates in the university community—faculty, administration, and students—should not act like a vigilante committee. The issue of racism at this university will still exist with or without the SDS.

The real issues are racism and faculty power, not "academic freedom" or "freedom of speech". The Students' Administrative Council is sponsoring a teach-in next Wednesday. Perhaps that would be the proper time for rational, not hysterical discussion.

Bloom's record dubious

"Machiavelli says: 'Neutrality doesn't last too long. You become the tool of the one who win.'" — Allan Bloom, quoting Machiavelli out of context at his first year political science course yesterday.

We sat in on Allan Bloom's first year political science course yesterday to see why a conservative faculty member from Cornell University would take such a reactionary stand in the recent over-reaction to the SDS demonstration against Edward Banfield.

Although we went away somewhat puzzled we do see the method in Bloom's madness. Through the use of skillful oratorical skills (which rival, up to a point, the skills possessed by the Greek scholars he teaches about) and a scholastic dose of humor and anecdotes, Bloom keeps his class amused and awake, if not beguiled.

Bloom's political manipulation of his students "Bloomites" through his subtle but apparently somewhat effective teachings have stood him good ground in the past week or so.

In answer to a question at yesterday's lecture session Bloom replied to a student who was unable to answer a question: "Nothing will happen to you, this is still a haven of free opinion."

One or two students clapped, but many more laughed. Laughter is the correct interpretation of Bloom's actions, although his political teachings should be analyzed on a different plane by his students.

As our article on page three describing Bloom and Berns at Cornell explains, this man has seen similar circumstances elsewhere. The parallels are strikingly similar, even if the magnitude of incidents isn't.

The centre-spread may also prove interesting reading for some people. It attempts to show that dissent has always occurred at U of T, sometimes with far worse results than insults to a foreign professor.

However, for Berns and Bloom it may just be the beginning of another Cornell "nightmare".

We think they and other faculty members should cool down and think "rationally," as they profess they do. Instead of the Conachers, Nelsons, Rists, etc. playing power politics they should realize people see through their game. They've played it many times before.

op-ed

Articles submitted to the "opposite the editorial" page should be typed, double-spaced on a 64-character line, and signed. As with letters, contributions may be edited for space reasons; four type-written, double-spaced pages is the maximum length recommended. Op-ed pieces are published according to space availability, immediacy of topic, and relevancy. Mail op-ed pieces to The Varsity, 91 St. George St., Toronto 181, by campus or regular delivery, or bring them to The Varsity editorial offices.

Opinions expressed on the op-ed page represent the opinions of the writer only, and not the views of The Varsity collective.

Academic freedom: medieval

One of the more interesting developments in the wake of the Banfield affair has been the rise of faculty militancy on the question of academic freedom and freedom of speech. U of T historians, both in their department and in the press, have been the quickest to denounce the SDS as "thugs", "torm troopers," and "shouting myrmidons."

The far greater force of their venom, however, has been directed against President Evans and his fellow administrators for their "tragically predictable" failure to guarantee free speech and academic freedom on the campus.

It is not strange to hear other members of the faculty bandy about such overblown rhetoric; however, historians, who are charged with providing the academic community with a chronological perspective that extends further back in time than the preceding week should know better.

In no letter or manifesto or newspaper article have those historians noted that academic freedom is sustantively different from freedom of speech.

Freedom of speech is a civil right and belongs to everyone; it is not President Evans' responsibility or duty to guarantee it. Academic freedom is a special kind of freedom by which the university community operates; it has never been clear in the history of higher education in North America what academic freedom consists of let alone whose responsibility it is to enforce it.

Any enquiry into the nature and genesis of academic freedom (which these historians studiously avoid) leads one to doubt that it can be enforced from above. Academic freedom is not a right and does not come to us from Voltaire; rather, it is a process which comes to us from the medieval university. The medieval university did not provide an automatic guarantee of free speech to all its members even within its walls.

Academic freedom first evolved from the demands of students in the medieval university for freedom to learn. This involved the right of students to structure their own learning programs and to decide on the relative merits of their teachers. A student role in praising or criticizing his professors was one of the earliest components of academic freedom. The other and later component of academic freedom was the freedom to teach. This evolved gradually and came to guarantee the right of a professor to teach whatever he wished within the restricted area of his proven competency and inside his classroom.

Academic freedom is a process based on the interaction of these two freedoms and in no way constitutes a complete guarantee of the civil right of freedom of speech. Moreover, an inheritance from the English tradition has somewhat restricted the free operation of academic freedom in the Canadian university.

The role of in loco parentis meant that the university assumed the responsibility of a parent in the development of the child-student. This role mutually inhibited both the freedom to teach and the freedom to learn. It is only recently that the Canadian university has repudiated this role. (One should note that the reconvening of the Caput so unanimously endorsed by the advocates of free speech constitutes a return to in loco parentis.)

Generally its repudiation has meant expanded freedom to teach; however, faculty have been less willing to surrender the parental authority themselves.

Students have found that structures inhibiting their freedom to learn have been slower to fall. The SDS action in the Banfield affair must be judged in terms of the historical development of academic freedom and not in terms of Voltaire's aphorism on death and the defence of free speech.

There is little doubt that SDS violated the process of academic freedom in their prevention of Banfield's lecture. Banfield should have been allowed to speak, but not to go unchallenged.

It is not clear that faculty would have been satisfied had Banfield been allowed to speak; their lament that the U of T did not provide this distinguished scholar with "serious and respectful consideration" sounds far too much like a parental admonition to an obstreperous child.

If academic freedom is to have a broader and more scholarly meaning than the right of faculty to speak before respectful audiences, then students must exercise their freedom to seriously, loudly, and disrespectfully question the "wisdom" that is being offered to them.

Since comparisons have been made so freely to Nazi Germany and to storm troopers, it would be well to remember that nothing perished faster in Hitler's Germany than the freedom to teach. The universities were quickly closed off as a source of opposition to fascism; however, the universities did not close. The objectionable faculty left and teaching went on as normal.

If more students had seriously questioned the racism handed down to them as wisdom from honored and distinguished professors, the Third Reich might have come to an earlier and better end. As it was, far too many students listened with respectful consideration to Hitler's academic apologists. As historians should know, academic freedom does not rest on their right to free speech alone.

Perhaps I have been unfair. When historians become so exuberant as to cancel classes, it is difficult not to believe that the anxiety of these committed educators is genuine. But, it occurs to me that the last time these people were so agitated over a free speech issue, they were not trotting out poor old Voltaire in defence of some lacklustre American conservative.

Three and half years ago during the War Measures Crisis of October, 1970, Voltaire would have been quite embarrassing to them. Free speech was not quite so valuable to them then as it seems today. In fact, they were willing to suspend the entire corpus of English common law from which all individual freedoms flow on the basis of unsubstantiated rumours circulated by the Trudeau government.

More recently, when free speech and most other freedoms perished in Chile, the U of T Faculty Association refused to censure the abrogations of these freedoms on the grounds that it did not have enough information on what the military junta had actually done. How strangely cautious in light of their present universalism!

Perhaps they secretly agreed with F. Paul Fromm, who has joined them in denouncing SDS, on almost identical grounds, that Salvador Allende got what he deserved.

They do betray themselves in a letter of reproach to the Globe and Mail decrying the indignity heaped upon poor old Banfield by the press as well as by SDS. The Globe's crime was to label Banfield a "ridiculously reactionary American professor". Must a free press perish so that professorial dignity may prevail?

In the final analysis, they do not really feel comfortable in the civil liberties tradition with which they have garbed themselves for the last week. Their search for a strong leader who would have acted precipitously demonstrates a fondness for power and action which is entirely alien to civil liberties. None of them would really die for anyone else's right to say something with which they disagreed.

Their hyperbole fails to hide their hypocrisy
Ron Creighton

Racism threat to equal status

The incident at the University of Toronto in which visiting American professor Edward Banfield was physically stopped from speaking raises the question of the right to free expression when such expression threatens other community values.

The Banfield incident follows similar incidents within the last two years in which professors accused of advancing racist theories were prevented from speaking at English and American Universities. William Shockley, a noble prize winner was stopped at Princeton University and at Staten Island Community College; Richard Herrnstein at the University of Iowa; Arthur Jensen at Berkeley and Hans Eysenck at the London School of Economics.

In each of these cases the protesters, who include lecturers, students, blacks, Puerto Ricans and Italians shouted the speaker down or invaded and occupied the speaker's platform.

Assuming that the theories advanced by these scholars are racist, are such methods of protest reconcilable with the right of academic freedom and the idea of the rule of law in a constitutional society? Does freedom of expression include freedom to express racist beliefs?

The right of free expression has been always subject to certain limitations reflecting the moral standards of the best established segments of a society at any given time. Thus we may find blasphemy, libel, sedition, obscenity, contempt of court and promotion of hatred against a racial group as exceptions to the rule of constitutionally protected free expression.

The foremost principle of justice in society is the right of equal status of all persons. This right includes the right of freedom from racial discrimination. It is public policy in Canada that every person is equal in dignity and rights without regard to race or ancestry. Racism is a threat to this principle. Racism fosters the belief that one group is superior to another by reason of natural endowment at birth and by right has a preferred place in society.

Any theory or scientific research directed to showing one race as superior to another is racist and contrary to the principle of equal status. Protesters who prevent academic racists from lecturing take the position that the very expression of racist theories is a crime to be physically stopped in much the same way as the burglar must be stopped. Says Guy Silton, the French journalist, "Racism is no subject for debate; it is a subject for a trial."

The right of freedom of expression is subordinate to the right of equal status and is a right only insofar as its exercise secures the right of equal status. To those who say "How can racism be the issue unless we first hear what the speaker has to say? Don't deny us the right to hear the speaker. Let us decide for ourselves." - the reply must be that their right to hear the speaker must cede to the right of his victims to be free from racial discrimination.

It must be remembered that the views of the academic racist are well known through their many books, wide publication of their papers in journals and through their previous lectures. (In the University of Toronto incident Banfield did in fact speak twice on Tuesday, March 12th.) In Toronto the organised struggle against Banfield's theories has been going on for two years.

The academic racists are restrained sophisticated scholars. This makes them more difficult to deal with than Western Guards or John Birchers. They are advisers to presidents and governors and their books are used widely in North American Universities. It is doubtful that those in authority would stop them in the way that the Canadian Government stopped Stokely Carmichael, Abbie Hoffman or Jerry Rubin who were all denied entry by Immigration officials.

The "pillars of the community" among whom are seldom found victims of racism, may unwittingly sanction racist expression by emphasizing the right of academic freedom over the right of freedom from racial discrimination. When this happens the victims and their supporters will struggle with whatever means they have - including civil disobedience addressed to the sense of justice of the community.

Charles Roach
Toronto lawyer

Bliss action 'demagogical'

I would like to express my opinion concerning Professor Michael Bliss' performance in the History 282 lecture last Thursday. Bliss walked in, announced that the class was cancelled, then proceeded to read a prepared statement defending the principle of free speech in connection with the Banfield incident. I resent very much Bliss' independent action in cancelling a lecture which it was his job to deliver. He turned the class into a political platform for his conservative views when the polls for the SAC election were still open, and then stalked out before anyone could offer any criticism or discussion. After delivering a soul-stirring oration on the principle of free speech, he left before any of the members of his audience could exercise their equal right to free speech in a classroom turned into a regrettably one-sided political debate.

I would compare Bliss' behaviour unfavorably with the more responsible action of his colleague Professor Robert Bothwell, who took the first half hour of his History 312S lecture the same morning to explain his part in the affair and his opinions about it. Bothwell accepted questions concerning his position, then turned to the lecture which it was his responsibility to his students to deliver. It seems apparent that Professor Bliss prefers demagogical speech making to free and open discussion when it comes to his personal opinions.

Tony Carfagiani
UC IV

Law students offer aid

The Law Students' Action Committee, an association of students at the Faculty of Law of the University of Toronto, wishes to express its opposition to the actions of the administration surrounding the 'Banfield incident.'

While we do not wish to comment on the merits of the particular students actions taken in that incident, we wish to affirm our conviction that racism masquerading as objective Social Science is none the less racist. We are, furthermore, united in our condemnation of what the administration has done.

A Teach-In on fascism is held at the university campus. The administration schedules, for just a week later, a speech by a man known to be the target of many student groups for his 'academic racism.' This speech, very well publicized, is attended by such unusual spectators as the wife of the University president and Ms. Jill Conway, vice-president of the university for internal affairs and intimately connected with the new discipline code.

The expected confrontation occurs; the speaker is sent back to the United States. Very soon thereafter comes the announcement that a dormant disciplinary body, the Caput, is being revived to deal with the student disrupters.

This is a put-up job. The administration plans a confrontation, attends at it, and issues swift reprisals. We feel this is part of its general strategy to gain acceptance for its strict discipline code, and condemn it accordingly.

It is unacceptable that the administration be allowed to profit politically from a confrontation they have themselves contrived.

We also wish to express our willingness to act as legal agents, free of charge, for those accused in front of Caput or the Governing Council

Philip Zylberberg
Law Students' Action Committee

The letters on pages five to eight represent some of those we received dealing with the so-called "Banfield incident". More letters will be published Friday.

Left short of intelligence

"Banfield is pre-Nazi," said the fellow with the pamphlets to me yesterday, "we have to stop him from speaking so that he can't put his fascist ideas into practice." Perhaps it's another sign of the impending apocalypse, but I sense a critical shortage of intelligence on the left today.

When it was announced that US social scientist Edward Banfield was coming to speak at this university, I was interested; having read The Unheavenly City and written a paper critical of it, I was curious to hear how he would defend himself when questioned. When it became clear that the self-appointed guardians of morality that make up the SDS were going to "ban" him from the campus, this truly made me angry.

There are several issues involved in the matter, but the most ominous one is the attempt at stifling free speech on the part of the left. It may be old-fashioned to believe that students in a university such as this have the right to decide for themselves what to believe in, but as one heckler at the seminar said: "This isn't the Gulag Archipelago, it's Canada. Let the racist speak!" For the purposes of this op-ed piece, I don't care what stand you take on Banfield — racist, fascist or defender of the truth. Trying to ban him from the campus is only an admission of failure on the part of the SDS.

How else can we interpret their actions? I can only conclude that the SDS is so insecure and unsure of its own position that no opponent should be permitted to speak. C'mon fellas...the truth will out, so what are you afraid of? Add to this the ridiculous effrontery of one student telling another what he or she can't hear and you have all the elements of classic stupidity.

Now, the argument usually countering mine is: "suppose you change Banfield's terms of reference from Black to Jew. Then would you allow him to speak?" Yes, I would, if only for the reason that I'm enough of an optimist to believe that this university's students are capable of deciding for themselves. Most people were outraged by the hysterical screaming at a rally "to support the people of Arab nations" last October, but by the second such event, the crowd had dwindled considerably, and no one was taking the speaker very seriously.

As long as the speaker is not presenting a clear danger to the safety and well-being of the students by speaking to them, there is no good reason for banning him. This becomes clear when you examine the SDS "line" a little more clearly. "Ban Banfield before he bans us" read one sign posted at the morning seminar on Tuesday. I asked an SDS member to explain this to me and he said that if Banfield's statements were put into practice, free speech would become a thing of the past; dreadful measures of repression would come down on the heads of the people; extermination camps would be set up. Reichfuhrer Banfield would supervise the destruction of opposing viewpoints.

Again, I don't care what Banfield says (at least in the discussion of the issue of banning him; my own opinions on his work don't enter into the picture here). Plainly the SDS is not working from any coherent set of principles or ideas. Banning Banfield is strictly a partisan measure, devoid of any higher notions of "freedom" or "liberty". It makes just as much sense to ban leftists as racists or fascists from this campus under their guidelines. Clearly, they want to ban Banfield because they lack a sufficient answer to his recommendations.

But what if they do have a good answer to him? I have seen a straightforward reply to The Unheavenly City, entitled "The Unheavenly System" which has a lot to say about Banfield's views, and some of the more intelligent members of the left had this with them and quoted from it when asking questions. Fine — this is the proper sort of response — not the radical Ostrichism of the left that the SDS wants. Face it, gang, if you throw him off campus, you're only hiding your heads in the sand; you can congratulate each other for a "people's victory" and be happy ever after. But you won't have gotten rid of him. You should be the last ones to have to be told that you don't defeat an opponent by refusing to meet him. Shame, shame, you ideologically valiant, "correct" marxists.

Everyone loves a circus, and that's just what we get when Banfield speaks. The elements of the people's peanut gallery make a glorious attempt to keep racists silent by heckling and attempting to shout down voices they don't like.

Grow up, SDS. If you're so sure people like Banfield, Herstein, Shockley and Jensen are wrong, then let them speak. Then when you and your allies have spoken, let the people decide.

Dave Basskin

Group defends invitation

While gratified by your editorial support of the principle of academic freedom of expression (March 15), we must correct one or two of your points of fact.

You charge that in inviting Professor Banfield to the campus the American Studies Committee acted thoughtlessly and stupidly. Let us remind you of the aims and purposes of the committee, which is an inter-disciplinary group drawing on the departments of history, english, political economy, sociology, and geography, and concerned with studying American civilization, without the limitations imposed by the individual disciplines, as a coherent whole. Over the past 10 years the committee has brought to the campus such diverse but invariably distinguished scholars as Henry Nash Smith, Leo Marx, Robert Heilbroner, Alfred Kazin. Professor Banfield was invited, in this tradition, as one who would address himself to both urban studies and political science. The committee's action in doing so could be regarded as provocative, thoughtless and stupid only if it had the idea that he was indeed a "racist," and this it did not have. We repeat: he was asked not as a controversial figure (who can predict what will stir up controversy? Daniel Ellsberg was recently stifled by proponents of the left on an American campus), but as a student of American culture and civilization.

Secondly, you state in your front page article that the committee "did not publicize Banfield's visit until early this week." You are again in error. The committee regards the annual visit of its American Studies Lecturer as part public university occasion (the public lectures), and part departmental occasion (the seminars). Having made tentative scheduling arrangements with Professor Banfield on January 21, we wrote to the chairmen of political economy, geography and sociology (those we thought most likely to be interested in hearing from him), and some instructors began to publicize his visit, especially the "departmental" seminars, in their classes shortly thereafter. The lectures were announced in the university Bulletin of March 1, the earliest possible time for inclusion in their "Coming Events" section, which announces events for the coming week or so. We did not take out an advertisement in the Varsity: in view of the charge incurred last year for an advertisement for Alfred Kazin's visit, the Committee decided it was beyond our budget.

The American Studies Committee
Barrie S. Hayne, chairman
Walter Berns
T.H. Adamowski
Aidan McQuillan
W.C. Berman
Clifford Orwin
Barry Wellman

(Ed. The Here and Now section of the paper is open to all campus groups, and it's free. A fair number of faculty members make use of it. Try it, you might like it; the price is right.)

Banfield shows poor scholarship

I am somewhat alarmed at suggestions that Edward Banfield should be viewed as a scholar of the highest repute. Certainly, the long list of his influential positions is not adequate proof.

In The Unheavenly City, he wrote "Sexual promiscuity in the Negro slum is notorious". (p. 72) There are no footnotes to back up this allegation. His only evidence is a study of alleged high frequency of sodomy in young boys in the Irish ghetto of the Middle West Side of New York in 1914. (p. 72, 278). Such allegations appear to be no more than racist stereotypes. Social scientists frequently find the contrary to be true. Milton Rokeach discovered that pleasure and an exciting life were the lowest priorities for persons with annual incomes under $2,000. ("Value Systems in Religion," Review of Religious Research, 18, Fall 1969.)

As a scholar, Banfield has shown prejudice and irresponsibility in his attempts to blame the victims of racism for their problems. Men of his ilk should not be given the prestige of the University of Toronto to validate their fallacious ideas.

Bill Wilhelm
Class of 67

Caput avoid real issue

It is unfortunate that the disciplinary issues arising from the prevention of Professor Banfield's lecture have been referred to CAPUT. The use of CAPUT, which has no student voting members, will serve to shift attention from the prime issue of freedom of speech to the issue of the acceptability of CAPUT as a disciplinary body. In my opinion a preferable course of action would have been the establishment of an ad hoc Governing Council committee, representing all of the estates of the university, to deal with this specific matter. Perhaps the wisdom of this course of action will become apparent to the members of CAPUT who may be encouraged to refer the matter back to Governing Council.

Anna Mallin
UC II

You'll see how we save you money.

Global Optical

788 YONGE STREET, at Bloor, 961-2131
550 BLOOR ST. W., at Bathurst 534-2323
Open 9:30 to 6, Thurs. & Fri. till 9
No appointment needed. Glasses same day.

The one stop optical centre

ANNOUNCING HILLEL'S
Arts Festival
OMANIM

MARCH 22-24

Fri. 8-12 p.m.
Sat. 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Sun. 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Cocktail Oneg Shabbat
Fri. 8 p.m.

B.B.Y.O.

15 Hove St.
near Sheppard and Bathurst
free admission

Wares from Afar

specializing in
ANTIQUE ENGRAVINGS, LITHOGRAPHS, ETCHINGS
& MAPS

- For home and office at moderate prices
- Large stock
- All subjects
- Free search service

Barbara Meli

636-9539

STARTS WEDNESDAY - STUDENT CARDS $2.00

The Directors Company presents
RYAN O'NEAL
A PETER BOGDANOVICH PRODUCTION
"PAPER MOON"
7:00 & 10:15

ADULT entertainment
2 HITS
The fun starts here.
"PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM"
A Herbert Ross Film
WOODY ALLEN
LANE KATON
8:40

new yorker 651 YONGE ST.
925-6400

Hart House
Music Thursday Night;
in the spring a young man's fancy...

Ah, diatonic chords! that cannot shed

Your keys, nor ever bid the tone adieu;

And, happy melodist, unwearied,

For ever piping songs for ever new;

More happy love! more happy, happy love!

For ever warm and still to be enjoyed,

For ever panting and for ever young;

All breathing human passion far above,

That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloyed,

A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

The Toronto Brass, Tomorrow at eight

Must reject imposed views

Is it academic freedom for Professor Drummond to impose his views of the Banfield incident on his classes? (Reported in the Star, March 16.) Is it academic freedom for Professor Bliss to cancel two classes because of the incident? (Same article.) Why is it that John Evans, in thinking of "appropriate mechanisms to secure freedom of expression" at the U of T can only think of violent methods, the use of police force? (See his letter, reprinted in the Varsity March 15.) And who are the "genuine scholars" which Evans says are the only ones with the right to speak on campus? (Star, March 15)

In the recommendations of the Campbell Report as given in the Varsity March 15, if negotiations over "obstructive but non-violent" demonstrations fail, then a referendum should be called to determine how much support the obstructing group has in the university community. If it has widespread support, then a solution can't be "imposed" and further negotiations must take place. If it has "limited" support, "the position of the demonstrators is undercut."

What does that mean? that the administration can deal with the group as it sees fit? I'm worried about that group with "limited" support—is violence sanctioned to quell a dissenting minority?

Is the faculty to succeed in pressuring Evans into using greater force to protect them from the questions of students (Bill Nelson in

RONNIE HAWKINS

IS AT LOUNGE
Hades

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.
OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 8:30 P.M.

HILLEL GRADUATE CLUB

is presenting

RICK KARDONNE & BRONA BROWN

in concert

DATE: SATURDAY MARCH 23rd, 1974
TIME: 9:00 P.M.
PLACE: HILLEL HOUSE
186 St. George Street

Admission: $1.50

Light refreshments
will be served.

NEW MUSIC CONCERTS

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

SAT. MARCH 30 AT 8:30 P.M.

devoted to the fascinating and enchanting music of

Guest Composer: GEORGE CRUMB

Pulitzer Prize Winner

featured performers:

ORFORD STRING QUARTET, MARY MORRISON - soprano,
SHAMBHU DAS - sitar, WILLIAM KUINKA - mandolin

Edward Johnson Building,

University of Toronto

Adults $2.50

967-5257

Students $1.50

Friday, March 22nd.

7:00 & 9:45

KITTY KOPETZKY & DICK KANIPSIA.
TOGETHER AT LAST!

SLITHER

JAMES CAAN PETER BOYLE SALLY KELLERMAN LOUISE LASSER

PG METROCOLOR

only 95¢

Medical Sciences Auditorium
(Instead of Shoes of the Fisherman)

tor" on the administration when it is clear that the administration could and would use the precedent of banning these ideas to ban the ideas of the left on campus.

Third, their campaign is directed against individuals. The demand to "Ban Banfield" feeds the illusion that it is individual racists who are responsible for racist ideology. But racism is an ideology which is structured into capitalist society in order to justify the oppression and exploitation of large numbers of people — blacks, natives, Québécois to name a few.

In spite of the incorrect tactics of SDS, the central issue now facing students is the defence of any individuals victimized by the Caput. This committee, composed of heads of colleges and deans of faculties, and including one non-voting student is a totally illegitimate body. Even Claude Bissell realized this five years ago when he began searching for a new discipline code — a process which has now culminated in the Conway-Cadario code.

All groups and organizations on campus must unite against any attempt by the CAPUT to discipline students involved in the Banfield incident. The broadest possible defence is necessary. Such a defence campaign is integrally tied to the struggle to repeal the Conway-Cadario code. If the administration is successful in disciplining students through the CAPUT while ignoring their responsibility for the incidents arising out of Banfield's visit, they will succeed in fostering the illusion that students, and not the administration, threaten democratic rights. They will use this incident as further proof of the necessity of ramming through a discipline code and structures which will only make it more difficult for us to struggle for our rights in the future.

Barb Stewart
U of T Young Socialists

pus needs a restrictive non-academic behavior code.

Cornelia Schuh

Cornell

from page 3

Let Banfield speak freely

I was startled to read the poster distributed by SDS giving that group's account of the melee that prevented Professor Banfield's lecture last week. One must assume that the SDS members have so little faith in the inherent validity and appeal of their own ideas that they fear exposure to those of Professor Banfield, lest they or anyone else be accidentally converted. Although I personally disagree with Banfield's ideas, it is an arguable point whether or not they are racist. Furthermore, there is a vast gulf between recommending a cut in the welfare cheques of an oppressed economic or ethnic minority, and herding the members of that minority, at gunpoint, onto cattle-cars for the trip to the gas ovens.

This, however, is not the issue. No one, to my knowledge, was forced to attend Banfield's lecture. If the man's ideas are ridiculous, let him speak freely and make a complete fool of himself, but at least have the courtesy to recognize that most of his potential audience has the intelligence and judgment to recognize idiocy, and is not a herd of cattle, whose intellectual fodder must be sifted for them by a self-styled elite. SDS initiated the comparison to Hitler's Germany; surely it might be wise to carry it one step further. If the intelligent and reasonable students of this university acquiesce in this open assault on our academic freedom, then we are no better than those responsible and well-meaning Germans who stood in silent dismay as each of their liberties was wrested from them.

V. Wilcox
Vic III

The letter finished on a note that Bloom, a student of ancient Greek and Roman history would appreciate, even if he didn't agree with it. "As Socrates told the Athenian jury: The truth of the matter is this gentlemen: Where a man has once taken up his stand either because it seems best to him or in obedience to his orders, there I believe he is bound to remain and face the danger, taking no account of death or anything else before dishonor."

The dissenting faculty were a minority; the majority won and the Black students were dismissed. Discipline procedures were reviewed and some adjustments made to prevent the seizure of buildings and property by force, however.

Interestingly enough, at Cornell students can lay charges against faculty as easily as faculty can accuse students. Cornell is not protected by the Haist Rules on tenure, staffing etc.

Of the 1,300-member faculty, 10 senior faculty initiated a campaign measure to remove President Parkins, according to the New York Times.

"Professor Walter F. Berns," the Times reported, "winner of this year's $3,500 Clark Distinguished Teaching Award, said Cornell was becoming 'politicized' and that he was going to the University of Toronto as a visiting professor." Not long after, his colleague Bloom followed.

Parkins eventually resigned, having lost much of his effectiveness. The next president was Dale Corson, who left his position as provost. Like U of T provost Don Forster, Corson was 'faculty' and faculty members undoubtedly felt more comfortable with 'one of their own' in the job rather than a university president who was too liberal.

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES and DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY present

Prof. Blair Neatby

Carleton University
Author: William Lyon Mackenzie King, vol. II, 1923-32.

Lecture: Mackenzie King and French Canada

Thursday, 21 March, 4 p.m.
Lecture Theatre, Library Science Wing, Roberts Library

Seminar:

The Problems of Writing the Biography of King:
Government by Spook.

Thursday, 21 March, 8 p.m.
Upper Library, Massey College.

Around Again

Used Records:

rock, jazz, folk, classics
and

Books:

literature, philosophy,
"religion", sci.fi.
and

Some other interesting things

18 Baldwin St.
(north of Dundas
west of University)

Wednesday, March 20 - 'SOCIAL WORK'

4 p.m. Prof. SOL GREEN: SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, YESHIVA UNIV. "What's Jewish About Social Work?"

5 p.m. Mr. Jerome Diamond: DIRECTOR, JEWISH FAMILY & CHILD SERVICES "The Field: Employment, Salaries, Mobility"

7 p.m. Prof. Ben Schlesinger: SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TOR. "Professional Education for Social Work in North America"

8 p.m. Prof. Ben Shapiro: SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, UNIV. OF TORONTO "Social Work Opportunities in Israel"

at Hillel — 186 ST. GEORGE

SUPPERS WILL BE SERVED EACH DAY FOR PARTICIPANTS WITHOUT CHARGE. CALL THE OFFICE TO RESERVE — 923-9861

Chargex Accepted * Student Discount

SOFT LENSES
AVAILABLE

GLASSES
large selection
of imported
frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.

354 Yonge St.

364-2607

XEROX
EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY COPIES

7¢
EACH

1st thru 5th
copies per original

5¢
EACH

6th thru 10th
copies per original

2¢
EACH

11th and additional copies of the
same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes, Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work)

20%

• FREE collating

ALSO AVAILABLE

• CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
• REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36"

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 10:30 AM-8:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 9:30 AM-6:00 PM

NOTE
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

Students dissent as old as U of T itself

Thanks to faculty, student, and administration over-reaction, the so-called "Banfield Incident" last week will long be remembered at this campus.

However, it is extremely important to realize that events of this nature have occurred on this campus before this academic term. It is nothing new at U of T, and the root causes of the problem won't go away through over-reaction on anyone's part.

The "Banfield Incident" is only another chapter in the long history of educational and political activism on campus. The tops of interest since the 1880's and the on-and-off again intensity with which students reacted to these issues provide some erratic, though interesting patterns. Many of the issues of former years may sound familiar to present students.

Students strike over faculty

The student strike of 1895 provided one of the first major outlets of student dissatisfaction with the running of the university. The students were at that time unimpressed with the calibre of their professors, a judgement which prevails at almost any time in the history of the university.

Students' complaints arose from one specific incident: a seemingly incompetent professor, who happened to be the son-in-law of the chancellor of the university, was appointed to a chair in the history department over two better qualified contenders.

A Varsity editorial during the troubles said: "There are men in some departments who don't earn one-tenth of the money they draw. Some of them are too indolent to earn it, and some are too ignorant of their work," words that were not taken lightly by a very conservative 1895 administration.

Political science students led by William Lyon MacKenzie King, became vocal activists when they were informed by the administration that two speakers in lecture series on social issues would not be allowed to speak.

The Varsity created a side issue by publishing an editorial commenting on the denial of free speech. The editorial maintained that the men were not allowed to speak because of their "unorthodox religious views". The Varsity's editor, W. F. Montgomery was suspended and the new editor was given a week to retract the statement or face suspension. A week later he was no longer a student. A staff member named William Dale also entered on the side of the students, casting aspersions on the teaching ability of the recently deceased president, Sir Daniel Wilson. He too was quickly suspended.

The political science students called for a government inquiry into affairs on campus, and boycotted classes for two days to support their demands. Mackenzie King, although an early leader of the action, was one of the first to be branded "traitor" when he continued going to classes.

The government arrived and their report was inconclusive. The Varsity editor was reinstated, and the paper continued its editorial policy with a little more caution:

"While The Varsity's freedom shall never be allowed to deteriorate to license, its freedom of speech shall be jealously and faithfully guarded."

This incident illustrates one of the longest campus political struggles for the right of a free press. The paper continued the movement for independence from outside authority through many clashes with the Students' Administrative Council and the Board of Governors and attempts by either body to enforce control over The Varsity's editorial policy.

In 1930, the Board of Governors, attempted to cut off the allotment of funds to the paper from SAC, by a manoeuvre worked out with the joint executive that handled the paper's affairs. W. J. Dunlop, then Director of Extension and Publicity, had said that a committee was being set up to look into the running of the paper.

The Varsity, of course, felt it was because the Board had no possibility of editorial say in the paper: "The issue is clear. No matter what attempts are made, or what contingencies have arisen, to belound the issue, the question is one of freedom of expression."

"These officials are irked by pointed references in the undergrad paper about the muzzling of our first-class minds by third-class bureaucrats. Here surfaces in print in The Varsity a contempt for the faculty that is usually voiced by students only in lounges away from staff ears."

The Toronto Star, ever leary of the possibility of open student opinion, had this to say: "The probability is that if The Varsity goes under owing to official action, there may arise in its place a student's publication entirely beyond control of the authorities."

Rise of anti-Communism in 1930's

With the rise of virulent anti-Communism in the thirties, any sort of dissent became a suspicious and sometimes dangerous thing to engage in. The failure of the world capitalist system during the depression saw the appearance of revitalized socialist movement around Toronto. Socialist and labour leaders were unpopular, and the Toronto Police Commission, fully established as public watchdog, kept a wary eye on any sort of troublemaker. In 1931, they instituted a free speech ban in the city — specifically aimed at "Communist meetings."

The commission also accused certain "ministers of all denominations, lawyers and university officials" of helping the communists spread the word.

Later that month, 68 professors at the university wrote a brief opposing the ban. It read in part: "The attitude which the Toronto Police Commission has assumed towards the public discussion on social and political problems makes it clear that the right of free speech and free assembly is in danger in this city."

The Globe, in an editorial the next day called it "a brief for the communists" and advised the pros to stick to their work.

The Mail and Empire added: "The representatives of decent elements in the population should not ally themselves with any movement to aggrandize the very limited communist minority in our midst, and to facilitate their propaganda."

The Globe wanted to know if this represented opinion at the university as a whole. The Varsity complied, conducting a poll that showed the staff supported the professors 3 to 1, and the students 5 to 1.

The Progressive Arts Club, a U of T drama group, came up against the police commission a couple of years later when they attempted to produce a play called "Eight Angry Men". The play had a lot to say about the Canadian prison system, and the police commission had decided that the public shouldn't hear it. A hatchet man from the provincial Treasury Department politely informed the manager of the theatre that was to host the performance that his theatre would be closed if the play opened.

There was no specific charge made against the play. "We just don't want it, that's all," the man said. Further pressing of the issue revealed that the action was initiated by everybody's friend, the Toronto Police Commission, in another attempt to protect the public from things the police didn't want to hear.

E. Cecil-Smith, secretary of the club said, "We're not going to take this lying down." Horizontal or not, their play didn't open.

The police in the 1930's were truly worried about both students and labour leaders, but broke into a cold sweat when there was any possibility of the two forces getting together. In the winter of the 1934-35 school year, police broke up a campus meeting that was being addressed by A. E. Smith, secretary of the Canadian Labour Defense League and an unpopular man in stanch Toronto. After the meeting, he was charged with sedition for some interesting comments about government collusion in the attempted murder of Tim Buck, a labour leader who was at that time a prisoner in Kingston Penitentiary for his efforts on behalf of workers.

This sheds light on an interesting "domino" theory of radicalism that the university subscribed to. To prevent the students from making any trouble, all that had to be done is remove the possibility of differing opinions and the students wouldn't think for themselves. This policy continued throughout the 1930's with continually disrupted meetings. The last of that specific brand of censorship occurred in 1940 when university police were posted outside the doors of a meeting that was to present a speech entitled "Hepburn Must Go," referring to the then premier of Ontario. One wonders from which level of civic or university government the no meeting order came.

It was about this time that a great deal of student energy and attention were directed away from problems at home and on the campus. The arrival of the Second World War brought a long period of silence, lasting almost a decade.

War and the campus

The 1940's, although an unquiet time in all other parts of the world, were fairly peaceful on the U of T campus. It's probably true that most students at the university were just thankful they

...continues
on page 10

...continued from page 9

weren't fighting, and remained silent about other things. The focus of student and newspaper attention was on the war in Europe and its effects. Some of the biggest problems of the university in the late forties were in accommodating several thousand veteran soldiers returning to school. They were an aggressive group who caused many grey hairs for the administration with their demands for proper treatment.

The increasing ugliness of the Cold War had its effects on the students and in the early fifties the campus was beginning to recognize the threat to free discussion posed by the backlash against Communism.

The Varsity devoted three issues in 1953 to a discussion of civil liberties. It elicited little student response. The students, however, mysteriously arose the next week — after the paper decided to drop the sports page. One athletic student shouted agitatedly at a SAC meeting, "A couple of days ago The Varsity discussed civil liberties and now they're telling us what to do." The sports page returned shortly thereafter.

Not too much later, the Civil Liberties Club (in sheep's clothing) had a motion put before them to ban a certain number of Communists from their group. Club president Murray Chusid (a name you might know), stated: "We should make it clear that our purpose is to construct and not to subvert." The motion was defeated.

The February 20 Hart House debate probably best described the state of student opinion at the time. The resolution passed read "We fear militant Stalinism, but in destroying it we may destroy our right to criticism."

Things became more active in the following school year, when some Vic students burned in effigy Senator Joseph McCarthy (America's most beloved bigot at the time). They were reprimanded severely in three U.S. papers, one of them asking for a look into Canada. In fact, the next concerned editorial came from The Varsity over the visit to Canada of Senators McCarran and Jenner, both aides in the McCarthy battle and the former responsible for the McCarran Act (an immigration law with great potential for political manipulation).

A model of it was already considered by the Canadian Parliament, the infamous Bill 93 of Varsity editorials that year. They were indignant, especially about the visit. "Perhaps our own Immigration Department could do something more about detaining carriers of the big smear from getting their claws into Canada," said one editorial.

The most surprising incident that year came with the detention of two U of T students at a Florida border under the provisos of the McCarran Act. On their way back from Christmas break, they were told by the guards that they were "Communist sympathizers" and that their names were in a "Communist black book". To the rescue came then-MP Roland Michener and they were freed with an apology from the Americans, with no explanation of the odd behaviour of their border guards.

Nathan Phillips came to Hart House in 1955 and was embarrassed by a picture of a nude couple. He called it "objectionable", and it was removed from the wall for a short time. The Varsity the next day thanked the mayor "for proving beyond a reasonable shadow of doubt that four-star, triple-plate, gold-spangled, 19th century pompous bigotry is still firmly entrenched in Ontario." There was no rebuke from SAC for that specific remark; most on campus were upset over the intrusion of a civic official into university morals.

Hungary and then Québec

Russia's military intervention in Hungary in 1956 received a large amount of attention from U of T students. There were demonstrations of support for the students of Budapest and the students asked the university to receive, tuition-free, refugees from Hungary. On January 7, 1957, 128 students arrived here ready to take up studies, and they were warmly received by a sympathetic population.

Although a quiet year at the U of T campus, 1958-59 was an unquiet year for other campuses.

A new movement was rising in Quebec and many student newspapers were running into trouble over editorial policy, especially the French-language newspapers in bilingual colleges. La Rotonde, the Francophone paper at the University of Ottawa, clashed with their student council and continued to do so at least twice a year into the sixties. Many editors later, the paper was still confirmed in separatist editorial policy, despite frequent intervention by the student council. Editors at Acadia University and the University of British Columbia also were fired that year.

Remark on the relative peace at the university that year, a late Varsity editorial read: "It no longer seems the worst of times for Canadian universities. Those great, dark forces of authority which haunt the minds of children and journalists, seem to be more aware of the problems facing students than we could hope possible."

They must have been asleep that year.

The year 1959-1960 bought the topic of racism on the campus to the forefront of attention. It was first mentioned early in the year when a black girl complained that she had been asked not to seek membership in one of the campus sororities, presumably so they wouldn't have to turn her down. SAC, after studying the institutions, decided to break any official ties with either campus fraternities and sororities. U of T students were looking south to the early civil rights movements and that issue was the most discussed all year. The Varsity ran numerous stories on racism, especially in university student housing.

The early disarmament movement was vocal and constantly seen on campus in 1959, especially when France set off its first test explosion. Students gathered in front of the French Consulate and the City Hall to protest escalation of arms stockpiling.

French-language student publications came under attack further the next year as firings took place at both Laval and the University of Montreal. The editors of the Laval paper were fired over an article presenting prostitutes in a good light and the University of Montreal staffers over a depiction of the Catholic Church decapitating students, a slap at provincial education policy. This is one of the prime fights of Quebec's early sixties generation, to throw off the last vestige of staunch Catholicism that had kept the French-Canadian culture in irons for so long.

The military blockade of Cuba by John Kennedy in 1962 brought a flurry of protest — both for and against Kennedy — in front of the United States Consulate. No arrests resulted. Demonstrations were still an oddity and had not really gained a capacity for violence at that point. Certainly, the numbers they attracted were smaller than today (even smaller than that pitiful turnout at the Ontario Legislature buildings three months ago.)

Even though disarmament were being discussed more, The Varsity that year showed of U of T students favouring their own nuclear arsenal, and United States had their side.

In 1963, students were from different campuses practising surveillance of One University of Saskatoon to his paper that he had agents to report on campus was dropped shortly thereafter word was heard from the course mean that they were at it).

Vietnam affects

The 1965-1966 school year was marked by a sense of crisis against the Vietnam War. The Varsity was especially critical of escalating destruction of systematic bombing raids. Students went to Washington their feelings to both editors were critical of hand in the war effort.

Students also appealed demanding the right of post-secondary education (That sounds familiar.)

Claude Bissell, somewhat ground, started the 1966 warning to students that lead to denial of intelligence anarchy that has been political and social darkness them that promiscuity chords.

That year, the "psychedelic new focus on activism or as if it had just been discovered interesting topic for month '67, a festival devoted to invited Allen Ginsberg, the Unfortunately, Leary was and sent packing quite University College student event, were incensed and nation of college principals

And, the Fugs were in Toronto hotels for their ment and "the Bomb" were often, a poll taken in 1967 that a great majority of Canada acquiring her independence felt "relieved" that the "lockpilot," "just in case," the upset by two reports that the RCMP was at Canadian universities. One student complained he had been approached by RCMP activities. The issue was after and not another RCMP (which might of been getting more efficient

of T

year saw increased dis- Vietnam War. The voices of Lyndon Johnson's es- of North Vietnam by ds. That year, U of T and Ottawa to relay governments. Varsity Canada's silent, helping ared at Queen's Park universal accessibility to n and a lowering of fees.

ow with his nose to the -1967 school year with a "radical romanticism can gence, to an emotional in the past a prelude to ness." He omitted telling ould weaken their spinal delic revolution" added a the campus, when LSD overed, became the most st students. Perception psychedelic anything, in- Fugs and Timothy Leary. s detained at the border ickly back to California. ts, who were hosting the demanded the resigna- Douglas Le Pan. turned away from three pecular appearance.

Universal accessibility to higher education remained a popular issue as SAC president Tom Faulkner led a demonstration of 2,400 to Queen's Park to protest the inequity of the Ontario Student Awards Program.

Staff members became vocal that year when 350 signed a letter sent to prime minister Lester Pearson protesting the war in Vietnam. This was one of the infrequent forays of staff members into comment on world affairs on a public level.

Such participation was to increase the next year with staff participation and leadership in the sit-in against napalm-manufacturing Dow Chemical at the Placement Centre. The sit-in, aimed at barring engineering students' way to interviews with company representatives, brought minor scuffles between lefties and Skulemen throwing snowballs when the demonstrators had the effrontery to carry their protest onto sacred Skule territory in front of the Galbraith Building. Dow was invited back to the campus shortly thereafter with hardly a peep from the students.

During his second year in office, SAC president Faulkner came under fire for his support of this demonstration in a petition signed by 800-900 students who complained that SAC no longer represented their interests. His main opponent, Bill Charlton, had something to say about Faulkner's politics: "The SAC this year has chosen to speak on certain issues, including draft-dodgers, Vietnam and Dow Chemical, and they have claimed to speak as the voice of the University of Toronto. His right is only a private right, he speaks for no one else." Faulkner resigned to run against Charlton in a by-election. The election, although it had a poor turnout, proved that more students felt Faulkner did speak for them. Faulkner was returned with an 800-vote majority.

Faulkner that year lent a strong voice to the student fight to see the implementation of the newly-released MacPherson Report, a report on curriculum in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences that had called for substantial "tokenism" and the dissatisfaction built into the next year as the faculty continued to drag their feet on implementing reports they had asked for.

After 87 years of official dependency, the Varsity officially cut its strings with outside influence when SAC accepted a motion that would place a Varsity Board of Directors in control of the paper. This certainly would never have been granted by many previous SAC executives, but increased activism on the part of both SAC and the paper had probably brought the two bodies closer together out of their mutual, distant suspicion of each other than had been tradition.

SAC had backed The Varsity earlier that year when the paper was verbally reprimanded by Caput over the reprinting of an article that had started a fight between the McGill Daily editors and their administration. The article's author was Paul Krassner — resident tasteless wonder at the Realist — who said it was the suppressed chapters of William Manchester's book, The Death of a President, in which Lyndon Johnson commits some fairly bizarre acts upon the body of the dead president.

"The Caput wishes to express in strongest possible terms its disgust and revulsion at the article," Caput announced. They referred the matter to SAC who backed up The Varsity, saying that the article was necessary to understand the situation at McGill.

Parity and curriculum restructuring

The next year's SAC, under Steve Langdon, continued the tradition of its predecessor, making public statements on the Vietnam War. A Vietnam rally 10 days later finished with 34 arrested after scrimmages between the lefties and U of T's own Edmond Burke Society were broken up by the beloved police horses. Allam Lamport, long a vanguard of City Council intellegensia, called them "troublemakers, bums, and anarchists".

The move for parity and curriculum restructuring gained a lot of headway that year. Course unions and staff-student committees were more numerous, acting on a small scale to implement the MacPherson Report. Student members were elected to the Committee on University Government, set up by Bissell to look into restructuring the government of the university and assist in the making of the new University of Toronto Act.

Provincial government leaders threatened to take university discipline into their own hands early in 1969. Bill Davis, looking to Quebec where students at Sir George Williams University had destroyed a computer, announced in March that he would call in city police to deal with any disturbance in Ontario universities.

This attitude was repeated early in the 1969-1970 school year in a report from the Committee of Presidents of the Universities of Ontario, of which Bissell was an active member. The report recommended that demonstrations be dealt with by "counter-violence" and gave the city police the right to enter the campus "on their own initiative" at any sign of danger "to life or property." The report was extremely vague in its differentiations between "legitimate dissent" and "illegitimate disturbances".

At this time, U of T's New Left Caucus was busy and tense meetings were taking place between freshmen administration and leftists as the NLC disrupted orientation proceedings in different parts of the campus in the first concerted attempt to politicize the freshmen. The administration and faculty were shocked at these disruptions of what was a normally quiet, sacred tradition of orientation proceedings, and Bissell announced shortly thereafter that "the disruption of any lecture, class, seminar or meeting sponsored by the university or any division of the university is a serious offense".

The NLC continued, later in the year, to disrupt political science classes and met some opposition from students who at one point forcefully ejected them from a classroom.

Greg Kealey and Bob Barkwell, two student members of the Interim Disciplinary Committee instituted as a replacement for Caput until the release of the Campbell Report, resigned when Bissell refused to retract the COPUO report he had signed. Students converged for a meeting the next day and SAC demanded that Bissell disassociate himself from CUPUO and release the Campbell Report on discipline as soon as he received it. Bissell appeared at a Convocation Hall student meeting smiling and saying the Campbell report "was the document on which the university should make its decisions on campus discipline". The Campbell Report, recommending a staff-student committee as an integral part of Caput, was released shortly.

The Commission on University Government reported back to the president in October, recommending restructuring of the university government to include student parity, and throwing official backing to a heated issue that most levels of university government could not accept.

The fight for parity — presently lost on most of the campus — became the most popular rallying issue of the year. Arts and Sciences students continually disrupted faculty council meetings, and faculty members promised the first of a long series of committee meetings that dragged down quite quickly. The students watched the administration sid their feet, decided to hold a parity festival at Dag Smith and called for a strike referendum that failed by a slim margin even though some students boycotted classes and occupied the faculty offices. The conservative side of the faculty, marshalled behind Jim Conacher and Bill Nelson, valiantly controlled the situation with vague promises of the ultimate committee. At one point in March, the faculty had to go underground for a meeting, but students managed to force their way past a locked door guarded by campus cops.

War Measures Act brings repression

The War Measures Act, instituted after the kidnappings by the Front de Liberation du Québec brought a moderate amount of response on the campus. Some students and staff were sufficiently disturbed by arrests and military government in Quebec to speak out and attend rallies although more preferred to think that what was happening 300 miles away was not their concern. The Varsity was censored three times at the printers when it attempted to print FLQ manifestos that had already appeared in newspapers across Canada. In March, one of the few demonstrations resulting from Trudeau's Quebec policies ended in hand-to-hand combat with Toronto police. Thirteen were arrested and five police were sent to hospital after demonstrators started to throw sandwiches and vegetables at the mink-coats entering the Royal York Hotel to attend a Trudeau fund-raising dinner.

The women's movement, mobilizing on campus after a few quiet years out of the public limelight, presented a brief to Bissell that year asking for a revision of the inequitable abortion laws in Canada. Yet, it was not until a year later that the university went as far as admitting women as members of Hart House.

SAC started the 1971-1972 school year with a demand that acting president John Sword resign, as a result of Sword's calling in of police that summer to clear out Wacacoe, the tent city that had occupied university territory.

Arts and Sciences organizers moved quickly in September to work up a slate of students that would run for the student on the faculty council on the condition that they would resign if not granted parity. The plan didn't manage to gain enough strength and students were put on another committee that broke up quite quickly. Faculty strategy, conscious or unconscious, was becoming quite efficient.

The Varsity had a short look at older days again in January of 1972 when a motion came before SAC to abolish The Varsity Board of Directors and once more bring the paper under SAC's wing. Feeling the situation to be a little too touchy, SAC rejected the motion.

The day-care movement was running into increasing difficulty with the administration that year. Having been moved out of their house on Willcocks Avenue, they found the university would not pay the $2,000 necessary for improvements on their new quarters. Demonstrations with the Day Care Marching Band, composed of under-fours, took place in front of Simcoe Hall. The refusal of the administration to provide adequate day care facilities for over two led the parents and children to establish the new Devonshire Campus Community Day Care Center (for over two) in the building they are still occupying.

Two months after John Evans was chosen as new president of the university, students started to mobilize on the issue of access to the new Roberts Library. A Library Council meeting in February was well-attended by students, who listened to the council's "no" on undergraduate and public admission. An all-night stacks party brought a further "no" from the council. The students, after a final "nyet" from the Senate, occupied the Senate Chambers. For the second time in nine months, John Sword called the police on campus.

A look at the history of student dissent on the campus provides a glimpse of many interrelated and unrelated issues. Reaction over the years has run in a peculiar ebb-flow pattern of interest and non-interest. Issues like the Vietnam war, parity and course revision have been some of the very few that have managed to last over a summer. Yet neither the parity nor the library problems have been solved with any degree of satisfaction, shoved away in a committee somewhere along with day care policy.

Students accept proposals

The Faculty of Social Work student union accepted a teaching faculty proposal Monday to set up work groups to discuss issues in dispute, but only provided certain conditions are met.

The faculty proposed work groups be established in four areas: the "nature of the education enterprise," formation of a faculty council, formulation of admissions policies and policy on "professional values."

The faculty proposals also stresses no preconditions be set on the outcome of these work groups, and that ratification of conclusions of the work groups be undertaken separately by students and faculty.

The faculty proposal came in response to a two-day boycott of classes by all 200 students, who are engaged in work at the graduate level.

The boycott took place after students decided faculty are unwilling to seriously consider a parity role for students in the department.

At a Monday meeting, the students stated: "The students accept the concept of the work groups as a form within which proposals concerning policy can be made."

However, the students specified the faculty must accept all its interim proposals on professional values, course flexibility, and a parity work group to deal with the issue of tenure, hiring and firing.

Failure to accept these proposals, said the students, "will require students to withdraw commitment from all work groups until such time as the issues in contention can be resolved through formal negotiation."

In regard to the proposal on professional values, the students passed a motion calling for a course on alternate values to be implemented as policy, until the work group on values brings down its proposals.

The students' position on flexibility called for student proposals for more flexible course choices be implemented as policy.

The meeting also passed a motion outlining four conditions for the operation of the work groups.

These include: four students and four faculty in the work groups, April 1 as the deadline for the work groups to begin, written position statements from students and faculty before the work groups begin, and the work groups to determine the role of outside constituencies.

The interim proposals were summarized to the faculty by Peter Crosby, who stated:

"The most persistent complaint among students this year has been that there is a climate of deadness in the faculty, that we are not engaged in the painful process of growth, but in the fulfilling of ritual requirements."

"If we are to be useful social workers we will be constantly examining, experimenting, questioning assumptions and going out on a limb."

Rochdale fights receiver at Supreme Court hearing building and the attitudes of the residents as a group makes the operation of the premises uneconomic."

The company lists the principal causes of its inability to rent accommodation as:

- "50 attack-trained dogs of the German Shepherd or Doberman Pinscher variety allowed by their owners to run loose, and constant evidence of defecation by such dogs in the public or common areas of the building."

- "the showing of movies with lower charges for those who 'cum naked,' which results in 'male and female residents proceeding from their own apartments thru the public and common areas of the building... in a state of undress.'"

- "nude summer sunbathing by male and female residents on the roof of the college."

- "Consumption of alcohol in public areas, and 'continuous incidents of drunkenness.'"

- "the prevailing odor of marijuana and hashish."

- "frequent false fire alarms."

- "the presence of graffiti of an obscene and anti-receive nature on the walls and doors of public areas."

"numerous incidents of objects such as beer bottles being thrown from the upper floors."

Boldizar says the charges are out of date.

He also points out the college still owns the building, and thus can not be party to its own eviction.

The college will also fight the second motion of the receiver, an application to borrow $200,000 to meet a deficit incurred operating the college, on grounds that money previously borrowed to cover costs was not authorized.

"We will bring in our own figures" to have the receiver dismissed, said Boldizar.

Boldizar claims there are five areas in which the receiver has violated statutes of receivership, which he termed "pretty egregious."

Boldizar wondered how the receiver could ask both to evict all its tenants, and receive an operating loan at the same time.

He suspects the receiver is trying to worm out of the agreement.

The receiver, Clarkson Co. Ltd. dealt with the bankruptcy of the Atlantic Acceptance Co., and is also handling the Robert Vesco/IOS affair.

HART HOUSE ART GALLERY GROUP SHOW

On display in the Art Gallery are thirteen paintings selected by the Hart House Art Committee.

It is hoped to make a purchase from among these to add to the permanent collection on display at Hart House.

Come and choose the picture you would like to see the Art Committee buy.

GALLERY HOURS: MON., 11 AM - 9 PM
TUES. TO SAT., 11 AM - 5 PM
SUN., 2 - 5 PM

Roots would like your next walk to class to be a part of your education.

We'd like you to learn a little about your feet—why they work as they do, and why they don't always work as they should. Did you know, for example, that if instead of banging your soles about on campus concrete, you were to go strolling barefoot on a beach, two things would result. First, your grades would drop. Secondly, your heel would make the deepest part of your footprint. This is because nature intended your heel to be the lowest part of your body. So in Roots your heel sits in the roots

NATURAL FOOTWEAR
1052 Yonge Street
(Opposite Rosedale Subway Station)

lowest part of the shoe. You immediately stand straighter. And when you walk, you use leg muscles you probably haven't used for years. All of this takes the load off other parts of your body, parts which all too often get overworked from incorrect posture.

If you're wondering whether all this can happen in good-looking well-made footwear, try on a pair for yourself. One look should persuade you that Roots is much more than a beautiful idea. It's also a very attractive shoe.

Centre for the Study of Drama
HART HOUSE THEATRE

Merrill Denison's

MARSH HAY

Thur. March 21 to Sat. March 30 at 8:30
Box Office now open 10:00 to 6:00
928-8688

unclassified

ENGLISH SPECIALIST familiar with current academic requirements is needed for the preparation of authoritative review material, related critical analysis and precise commentaries. Please respond outlining qualifications and previous writing experience, if any, to: Jeffrey Cole, P.O. Box 585, King City, Ont.

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING? Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674.

EXAMINERS WANTED - Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T", Toronto M6B 4A3.

WHY FREEZE? Used furs from $10. now from $89. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets, Muskies, Raccoon, Rabbit, etc., EXCELLENT SELECTION. Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGDER FURS, 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077. Open Thurs., Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

THESIS BINDING expertly bound. Just 2 blocks from U of T. One day special service. Phone 535-4924, leave message. Campus Bindery, 161 Harbord St., Toronto 4.

A SMALL BRONZE PLAQUE inviting worshippers to pray for the house and its members has been removed from the Hart House Chapel. Anyone knowing the whereabouts of this plaque is asked to return it to the Chapel.

ESSAYS AND THESIS. We can solve your headaches. We'll type your essays & thesis and deliver to you promptly. The rates are very reasonable. Call day or night. 439-6412.

FACTORY THEATRE LAB presents "SPACES" by Dennis Hayes at Bathurst St. - United Church, 736 Bathurst St. (Lennox St. entrance) Tues-Sat. 9:00 p.m. Sun. 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. Reservations 921-5989. Runs to March 24.

FURNISHED ROOM & BALCONY; share studios, congenial, well-furnished house; 25 min. TTC to Univ.; 1/2 blk. east of High Park; $80, Apr. 1, 532-9371.

TYPING OF THESES, ESSAYS in English, French, Spanish, German by professional secretary. IBM Selectric. 368-9001 days, 231-4919 evgs.

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4. 757-0621.

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Professor's wife. IBM electric with carbon ribbon. Campus pick-up/delivery. Have done dissertations, books, term papers, minor editing. Neat accurate, prompt service. 267-8721

LOST, A BADMINTON RAQUET in Sid Smith 2135 on March 7. Return would be greatly appreciated. Phone Rob McLean at 537-2775.

ACCOMMODATION AVAILABLE late March/early April close to Univ. First six weeks $150 including meals. Phone 954-1961 (9-5)

HOUSEHOLD MANAGER - Academic family needs person to run household while parents do research. Anytime to mid-summer or later. Live in or out, as family, central. Single person or student couple. 923-2639, Tuesday or Wednesday evenings, or weekends.

SURPRISE YOUR ROOM-MATE. Invite him/her for dinner in the Gallery Club. Hart House.

APARTMENT FOR RENT Available May 1, one bedroom, broadloomed, $179/month. On St. George Street Close to U of T and Subway. Call 964-2639 evenings.

POSITION OPEN AS RESOURCE PERSON for the Innis College Independent Studies Programme. Versatility, creativity, and ability to respond to student needs are essential. Reply April 1, 1974, with curriculum vitae, to Academic Coordinator, Innis College, University of Toronto.

MARX BROS. & FIELDS & WEST Fri., Sat. March 20 & 22 "Monkey Business," "My Little Chickadee," and "Duck Soup". Rm. 3153 Med. Sci. Bldg. 7:30

THE SON OF OCTOBERFEST RITES OF SPRING is coming. MARCH 22, 23 HART HOUSE 8 P.M. - 1 A.M. Advance tickets available. See our ad elsewhere in the paper.

ROOM AVAILABLE IN STUDENT HOUSE, May 1st in the Montmarie of Toronto. Share kitchen, bath, cooking with 3 others. Rent $70/month. Bus to Campus. Phone 537-2775.

James Bay lawyer sees no Indian sellout

By DAVID SIMMONDS

There will be no bargain struck between the Indians of Quebec association and the Quebec government over the controversial James Bay hydro project, believes James O'Reilly.

O'Reilly, the Indians' lawyer throughout their fight to halt the mammoth project, was speaking Saturday at a Trinity College seminar on native land claims, held at the Edward Johnson building.

O'Reilly said he was "pessimistic that the whole thing can be settled in the immediate future even with goodwill on both sides."

The reason, said O'Reilly, is the conflict between "two fundamentally different value systems".

The Indians and Inuit went to court not to bargain for a better settlement, but to preserve their way of life, said O'Reilly.

O'Reilly feels the native peoples have until 1978 to win their campaign, when the major flooding in the project is to take place.

"I'm worried about many things", he said "but I'm not worried about their determination.

"They mean what they say."

The Indians have publicly rejected an offer of a $100 million compensation made by Quebec premier Robert Bourassa.

Bourassa in making the offer broke a mutual agreement to keep negotiations confidential. Bourassa's move was widely interpreted as an attempt to shore up his own bargaining position by turning public sympathy against the native peoples.

Pressure on the native people's to make a settlement is also coming from federal Indian Affairs and Northern Development minister Jean Chretien, who recently threatened to remove his department's funding of the Indians' court case if the issue was not resolved soon.

Up until recently, said O'Reilly, Chretien "has been a big help to the Indian people." With his latest offer however he is "off on the wrong track".

After the preliminary decision in November by Quebec Justice Albert Malouf to grant an interlocutory injunction against the James Bay project, Chretien made no secret of his pleasure, calling it one of the "few moments" of satisfaction he had on the job.

Many observers feel Chretien has had to fight a rearguard action against more reactionary cabinet members to get even token federal government support for the Indians' case.

Under the BNA act, the federal government is responsible for the protection of native rights.

A report commissioned for the department of Indian affairs indicated the federal government could be held liable if it did not offer some assistance to the Indians.

Justice Malouf's decision, said

O'Reilly, gave the Indians a legal stick" by establishing the Indians had exclusive right of occupancy of the land, and therefore right to be granted an injunction.

Malouf's decision "showed Indian rights could be enforced" said O'Reilly.

Malouf's temporary injunction suspending work on the project was overturned just days later by the Quebec Court of Appeals, whose decision was also supported by the Supreme Court.

The decisions by the higher courts allowed work to resume on the project, but did not clarify the status of the temporary injunction itself.

Malouf spent several months studying testimony and precedents before making his decision.

O'Reilly noted Malouf's finding "that there was an exclusive right of occupancy has not been touched by any other Quebec court."

The Indians of Quebec Association can still press, for a permanent injunction to halt the project. If negotiations between the Indians and the Quebec government break down, this is likely to happen.

The Quebec Court of Appeals ruled last month the native peoples could not file for a permanent injunction until the status of the temporary injunction had been cleared up.

The Supreme Court Tuesday reserved judgment on an appeal by the native peoples against this ruling.

After Justice Malouf's initial judgement, the Bourassa govern-

The Varsity—Brian Yel

James O'Reilly sees "two fundamentally different value systems" at work.

ment made hurried arrangements to negotiate a settlement with the Indians, suggesting the possibility a permanent injunction might be successful.

O'Reilly outlined in considerable detail the legal precedents for establishing native land claims, going as far back as a royal proclamation of 1763 which recognized the right of aboriginal occupancy.

He cited the recent Supreme Court judgement on the Nishga Indians of British Columbia, which went against the Indians claim of occupancy right solely on a procedural point, as the spark which got the movement for Indian land claims organized.

The Trudeau government has been much more anxious to discuss settling native land claims since that decision was handed down. Trudeau remarked shortly afterwards the native case was much stronger than he had thought.

This was a complete reversal of the government's position in controversial Hawthorn report of 1969, which stated native land claims were far too vague and widespread ever to be considered seriously.

O'Reilly also cited the recent decision in the summer of 1973 by Justice Morrow of the North West Territories that there was "sufficient doubt" as to the validity of treaties covering the area as an impetus to the movement to establish land claims.

AUDITIONS

Poculi Ludique Societas
Actors and Technical Crew

PLS Office

398 Queen's Park Crescent East

Friday and Saturday - March 22, 23

2:30 - 5:00 p.m.

or phone 928-5096 for another time

PIERRE PATHELIN

a Medieval French Farce in Modern English to be performed in May come

HONKY TONK

with

VINCE TROY

Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.

meals under $2.00!!

HOUSE OF LANCASTER

147 Wellington (corner University)

869-0615

HART HOUSE ELECTION RESULTS

ART COMMITTEE

B. BARKER
C.A. CRANSTON
J.O. GIBBONS
P.W. JOHNSON
J. LOTH
A. RAO
M. ROUTLEDGE
M.C. WEBB

DEBATES COMMITTEE

C. BARTON
T. BERMINGHAM
A.K. CLARK
P.M. DUNCAN
A. GRUSHMAN
F. HAMPSON
M.J. HART

LIBRARY COMMITTEE

J.S. FLORAS
T.M. HURKA
M.C. MURRAY
S.R. PERRY
A. SHUBERT
E.J. WAITZER
J. WATT
M.S. WOLFISH

HOUSE COMMITTEE

J.V. PICKNELL
R.I. ROTENBERG
M.L. STADELMAN
R.S. YU

MUSIC COMMITTEE

P.J. DUNNING
R.W. KORTRIGHT
R.J. MACAULAY
W.R. McKEAN
R.A. WINESAKER

Applications are now being accepted
for the position of

STUDENT ADMINISTRATOR at the University College Playhouse

Term: Sept. 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975
Salary: $2200.

Applicants should have been involved with
some Playhouse activities during the past year.

Please send resumé and anything else of interest to:
ALLEN BOOTH
79 A St. George Street

Deadline for applications is Friday March 29

HILLEL HOUSE Campus Residence

186 St. George Street

Now Accepting applications for the 1974-75 Academic Year

The residence is an integral part of the Hillel program. Residents are expected to join the internal leadership in the Hillel program and to be responsible for various other tasks. The residence has a capacity of eight members.

Preference will be given:

- 1) To students who have been active in Hillel and
- 2) To students who have had previous experience as members and organizers in Jewish Youth groups.

Submit applications in writing, indicating background, references and reasons for wanting to join the Residence to:

BEN MAYER, Director

BBHF

186 ST. GEORGE STREET
Toronto, Ontario
M5R 2N3

Vic incumbent makes second presidential bid

Incumbent president Brian Gazley of VUSAC (Victoria University Students' Administrative Council) tries for his second term as tomorrow's balloting at Vic chooses next year's president, services' commissioner and five SAC reps.

Gazley, services' hopeful Sue MacDonald and SAC rep hopefuls Jeannie Greatbatch and Brian Clarence stopped by the Varsity offices this week to discuss their candidacies.

Gazley (III religious studies) admits his bid for a second term may be unprecedented, but stresses strongly the need for continuity in student leadership in the face of the new moves by Vic to launch a massive development project in the northeast campus.

Gazley is running against political newcomer Glenn Smith.

Gazley also sees a need for continuity in leadership with the ongoing struggle to get more student representation on the 43-member Vic board of regents.

Last fall, Gazley led student moves to increase student representation from the one seat offered. He says now that by September there will be four voting student seats on the board, but that took a year-long wrangle.

He also says he is looking for eight students seats on the board, and says so far the faculty have been offered six seats.

Gazley was involved in the Manulife development proposal at Vic which folded a year ago after strong opposition was voiced by student and community representatives.

He says his experience in the Manulife development proposal will be of great help with the current Vic moves with Project Planners, a company retained by Vic to study new concepts in developing the northeast campus.

Gazley says he wants to make VUSAC into a more representative body for the approximately 2,500 Vic students.

To get more input from students, he says he would seriously consider revising the VUSAC constitution especially with an eye for better representation from students who commute to VIC.

He also wants better contact with the men's residence council and the Annesley Addison student association. He also wants to pursue getting provisions for commuting students to be able to stay overnight somewhere at Vic if necessary.

Falling back on his Manulife experiences, Gazley says VUSAC should initiate action rather than reaction to developers' moves.

Depending on which way the Project Planners move, Gazley says VUSAC should consider hiring outside professional planners, lawyers or accountants if necessary to ensure Vic listens to students, the surrounding community and city hall.

MacDonald vies for Service

MacDonald, a second year linguistics student, is running against Janet Isles for services' commissioner.

MacDonald sees the services job as mainly one of utilizing facilities so students get the most from VUSAC.

Having helped to run the student pub this year, she wants to get together with the pub managers to ensure the Thursday and Friday pub has no licensing or staffing problems.

She also wants to get into setting

Brian Gazley is making his second try for the presidency of VUSAC.

up a used book store for Vic students. Her proposals includes buying and selling used books at half price with the sale price only increased by a 25-cent service charge

...continues

on page 15

MARX BROS.

* W.C. Fields & Mae West

1. MONKEY BUSINESS
2. MY LITTLE CHICAPEE
3. DUCK SOUP

Fri. Mar. 22 — 7:30 p.m. — Sat. Mar. 23 — 7:30 p.m.

Rm. 3153 Medical Science Bldg. U of T

$2.25 all 3 films

1.50 last 2 films

1.00 last film

Larry's Hideaway Hotel

121 Carlton at Jarvis

THIS WEEK

THE BRITISH ARE HERE

Mar. 18-22

Next big attraction

STAR

Mar. 22, 23

Victoria College Drama Club presents

ARKANSAS

a play by David Aitken

TODAY, THURSDAY & FRIDAY

U.C. Playhouse

1:15 p.m.

admission free

SUMMER WORKSHOPS

at
TORONTO CENTRE FOR THE ARTS
(formerly Toronto Actor's Studio)

JULY & AUGUST

ACTING
Movement & Voice

FENCING

JAZZ DANCE
Advanced Classes

MAKEUP

CHILDRENS' CLASSES

Ages 6-14

TECHNICAL THEATRE COURSE

For more information, write:

Toronto Centre for the Arts
390 Dupont St. — Toronto or call 967-6969

Superior Optical

Prescription
Eyeglasses

Frame styles to complement today's youthful fashions
in metal and shell

236 BLOOR ST. W.
(AT VARSITY STA)
PHONE 922-2116

the Villager* shoe shoppes

COOL CUTS.
$16.99

A GREAT FASHION LOOK — CUT TO SUIT YOUR MANY MOODS — BROWNS - TANS - NAVYS - BLACKS — GENUINE LEATHER

CALLY DINES PURCH
AT VILLAGE OF SUCCESS
101 Bloor Street West
115 Yonge Street
352 Yonge Street
774 Yonge Street

OPEN THURSDAY
AND FRIDAY NIGHTS.
MASTER, CHARGE AND CREDIT CARDS HONORED.

Bramalea City Centre
Oakdale Shopping Centre
Georgian Mall (Barrie)
35 King St. W. (Cobourg)
202 Princess (Kingston)

*Design and Word Trade Marks in Canada of the Villager Shoe Shoppes Ltd.

...continued
from page 14

to cover the cost of the service.
She also wants to check into the possibility of more pinball machines in the Terrace.

Greatbatch seeks SAC seat
Second-year anthropology student Jeannie Greatbatch is the only woman running for SAC rep from Vic and wants to get involved in the SAC women's commission.

She says she wants to work with the commission to investigate the health service to change it from "a pill-dispensing unit into a service we can trust to correctly diagnose our ills and give us sound medical advice."

She would also want to see a woman's reading room and women's lecture series instituted.

Greatbatch sees one of the biggest problems of this year's SAC being a lack of communication with the students it is supposed to represent.

Her proposal for changing the problem lacked communication inasmuch as she proposes a column in The Varsity for SAC without asking the paper if columns are within editorial policy.

Greatbatch wants to get SAC to push for adequate athletic facilities for students, and she is also in favor of student parity in decision-making.

She says she is opposed to the non-academic discipline code because it is "absolutely unnecessary," although she allows if a non-academic code were drafted which were "fairly liberal" and did not overlap the Criminal Code of Canada she might be able to accept it.

Clarence looks for re-election
Incumbent Vic SAC rep Brian Clarence (II-anthropology) is a candidate for re-election who has irons in many fires.

He is also co-chairman of the anthropology student union, and as such sits on three of the unions committees, and is a member of the Arts and Science Student Union.

He is opposed to the non-academic discipline code, which may sit on Governing Council's shelf until January, and feels students should have "nothing short of parity" on decision-making in the university.

Clarence feels SAC should lobby at the provincial government level to free funding for better student athletic facilities.

In addition he wants SAC to work with VUSAC in negotiations over whatever proposals Project Planners come up with for development for Vic property in the northeast campus.

Clarence supports the move for SAC to create a women's commission and thinks it could be used to inform and develop greater participation in student government.

Other Vic SAC rep candidates include: past VUSAC president and Governing Council member Gord Barnes, Robert Snell, Brian Gage, Robert Petrunka and Gary Simons.

Election probes SMC role

A big issue in the presidential elections for St. Michael's College Student union is the working paper on the federated colleges by university president John Evans, according to candidate Chris Driscoll (political science-II).

Driscoll stopped by the Varsity offices to discuss the issues this week and along with the Evans' working paper on the colleges, Driscoll sees student representation on the St. Mike's college council a big issue as well.

The council, which has about 120 members, now consists of college faculty and seven students. Driscoll wants to increase the student figure to 20 by the end of the term and possible work for more representation in the future.

Driscoll sees the increase as necessary to get students on the council committees where most of the actual council work is done.

The biggest problem with the Evans working paper and St. Mike's is the potential threat the current draft of the paper presents to the existence of the college Driscoll says.

Driscoll says one of the big items he would pursue as student union president would be to inform college students about the implications of the paper to raise student awareness.

He says the Evans paper, in its present form, would leave a number Political Science student Chris Driscoll is running for St. Mike's president.

of crucial issues unresolved for the college.

Who would select professors to teach at St. Mike's is unclear, and Driscoll asks would the selection be done by a central U of T administration or St. Mike's?

Driscoll also says the paper does not indicate whether U of T or St. Mike's would control money for courses, and it does not indicate if professors at St. Mike's would be part of a college "mini-department" or some other body.

Driscoll comes down strongly on the side of college autonomy, wanting to see St. Mike's retain control of both the money for courses and autonomy in selecting staff and course determination.

Driscoll says the student union should form a "united front" with students, faculty and St. Mike's college council to ensure St. Mike's position is not lost in Evans' manoeuvring.

In student services, Driscoll wants orientation expanded, and also to set up a formal liaison officer between the union and residences to overcome what he describes as a lack of communication this year.

The course evaluation, which he hopes should be done by the end of March, he wants to be more than a shopping list.

Driscoll would also want to re-introduce noon-day forums, a St. Mike's feature dropped two years ago.

YOUR ESSAYS CAN WIN YOU $$$

ESSAY CONTEST: $100 CASH PRIZE for the best essay in EACH of the following categories: Humanities; Social Sciences; Science. $50 cash to runner up in each category plus many $10 honourable mention prizes. No restrictions on subject matter, length, number of essays submitted in any category. Essays will be judged on originality, quality of writing and research and must be typed with footnotes & bibliography. TO ENTER: send essays, together with a 5-line content summary to Essay Services, 57 Spadina Ave., Suite 105, Toronto, Ont. We will acknowledge receipt of your essay(s) and refund postal expenses over $1.00. Contest expires June 30, 1974. All entries become the property of Essay Services.

REAL YOGA MEDITATION!

Call Yoga Forum
of Canada
12 MacPherson Ave.

923-4439

$10 DISCOUNT TO STUDENTS

SWAYAMBHUNATH STORE

OCCULT BOOKS

GALLERY
ASTROLOGY CLASSES

469 Church Street

THE ENGINEERING SOCIETY PROUDLY PRESENTS ANOTHER CROSS-CAMPUS PARTY

Octoberf (JUST A MINUTE,
THAT WAS
LAST OCTOBER)

MARCH 22-23 8 PM - 1 AM
$2.00 HART HOUSE FREEMUG
REFRESHMENTS WILL BE SERVED

TICKETS AVAILABLE THROUGH THE ENGINEERING STORES, SCARBOROUGH STUDENTS' COUNCIL & S.A.C.

Five new student members on council

Students will be represented by mostly new representatives on

Vic votes on GAA labour unit

An eligible 49 Victoria College teaching assistants will wind up three days of voting today which will determine whether they wish the Graduate Assistants Association (GAA) to represent them as their bargaining agent.

The pre-hearing vote requires a majority of 50 per cent plus one for certification. The ballots however are not counted until after the certification hearing before the Ontario Labor Relations Board, expected by mid-April.

GAA president Michael O'Keefe is confident the vote will be positive. He could not, however, predict the hearing's final decision.

The labor board will zero in on the technical soundness of the bargaining unit. "We're safe on that," O'Keefe noted.

The GAA applied in February for certification of the Vic TA's as a separate bargaining unit from the main campus following months of campaigning and obtaining the required 35 per cent of the potential bargaining unit.

However the GAA anticipates more difficulty in obtaining certification for more than 2,000 teaching assistants on the main campus.

The GAA applied for certification for this group earlier this month. On Friday it is to go before the Ontario Ministry of Labor to request a pre-hearing vote.

The university and the GAA are at odds in determining who should be eligible.

"The bargaining unit is so hard to define," O'Keefe said, adding at Vic there are "not that many different types of jobs."

The university must supply the ministry with a list of eligible TA's. "If the U of T wanted to prevent a pre-hearing, it could," O'Keefe pointed out.

He added he has no indication of what the university will do Friday. O'Keefe said 100 of about 900 TA's who signed up are "questionable."

Governing Council next year.

Results from the recent balloting released Monday show five new student faces will be sitting on the 50-member body. Two student incumbents were returned.

The closest race was in the full-time undergraduate constituency for arts and science students where three candidates vied for two seats.

Shirley French and Peter Jarret were the winners with 1,072 and 955 votes respectively with Howie Stein pulling a close third at 912.

In the full-time undergraduate constituency covering students not in arts and science SAC vice-president Steve Moses easily defeated Terry Ruddy, 651-225 with incumbent David Shindman taking the other seat by acclamation.

In the graduate student constituency, Kitty Hoffman rolled in with a 276-106 victory over Daisy Perry.

In the part-time undergraduate student category incumbent Arlene Dick and past APUS president Bill Whelton were elected with 860 and 427 respectively, while Gary Hightington polled 336.

In the faculty races, the protest candidacy of physics professor Jim Prentice went down to defeat by incumbent chemistry professor John Dove, currently chairman of Governing Council's powerful academic affairs committee.

The 75-46 margin against Prentice was a stronger showing for Prentice than expected in the faculty constituency which includes St. George faculty in astronomy, chemistry, computer science, geology, mathematics, physics, botany and zoology.

Overall, the average turnout in student, faculty and staff races was 14.4 per cent of 45,146 eligible. Total voting was 6,488.

Predictably, the lowest turnouts were for the student seats on the non-parity body.

Non-academic administrative staff, of which 6,132 were eligible to vote, had 30.2 per cent mail their ballots in to elect Keith Bowler, a founder of the U of T Staff Association.

Bowler drew 804, with incumbent John Parker losing his seat by running second with 664. Library worker Drew Millar polled 254 and university press' Edward Beaven had 129.

Other results included medical professor M.W. Thompson defeating biochemistry professor D.O. Tinker 317-123 in the medical faculty constituency with 30.2 per cent of 1,446 voting.

Two incumbent faculty members, professor W.B. Dunphy of St. Mike's and electrical engineering professor H.W. Smith returned to their seats acclaimed in their respective constituencies, federated universities and the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

Three alumni were also elected for three-year terms each ending in June, 1977. They are incumbents Gus Abols and William Broadhurst plus new member D.M. Walden.

It's McDonald's Mad Munchies fries Free beeeeeeeeeee!

WHEN YOU'RE BUZZING LIKE A BEE
DOWN YONGE ST. AND THE MAD MUNCHIES HIT-HEAD FOR McDONALD'S AT 750 YONGE ST., JUST SOUTH OF BLOOR.

750
YONGE!

YOU DESERVE
A BREAK
TODAY!

FREE
FRENCH FRIES!

Complete Educational Research Service

Termpapers Unlimited of Toronto

752A Yonge Street
Toronto 5, Ontario
(416) 984-7328

Hours: 10:30 - 5:00 (Mon.-Fri.)
10:30 - 4:00 (Sat.)

Interesting diamonds

Beautiful Ceylon gem, blue sapphire, and two diamonds engagement ring 14k white gold $325.00
Latest styling cluster marquise Burma gem, blue sapphire, and eight diamonds 14k white gold $225.00
An expert place to buy diamonds to have a ring remodelled, or custom made to your personal specifications.

D. E. (Jim) Mountcastle -
Certified Diamond Appraiser

Interesting Jewellery
685 Yonge Street, South of Bloor.
923-5744

DETACH THIS VALUABLE COUPON AND BRING IT INTO McDONALD'S AT 750 YONGE ST. BEFORE OCT. 15th AND GET A REGULAR FRENCH FRIES ABSOLUTELY FREE!

LIMIT ONE PER CUSTOMER -
GOOD ONLY UNTIL OCT. 15th, 1973

NWT Indians are 'fighting for survival'

Canada's north is being treated as a "warehouse of natural resources for the use and exploitation of people in the south," the president of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories charged Saturday.

James Wah-Shee was speaking in a panel discussion which formed part of Trinity College's weekend seminar on native land claims.

Since development will destroy the ecology and wildlife of the north, it will also kill the people, leaving the native peoples no choice but to "fight back."

"We are fighting for our survival. That is the issue," said Wah-Shee.

Wah-Shee's views were echoed by Tagak Curley, president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada.

"Whenever the land is interfered with, it affects many of the aspects of the life of the native people," said Curley.

Any disturbance as a result of resource development, no matter how small, will affect the traditional northern life style of hunting and trapping, he said.

For example, no amount of careful planning could fail to affect an animal's sense of smell, which would lead it to avoid an area where resource development was taking place.

Wah-Shee cited the dispute between the Northwest Territories native peoples and the federal government over title to the Territories as a crucial part of the campaign to protest native people's interests.

"We feel we own the land, and I don't think the federal government will accept that," he said.

Although two treaties covering the area have been signed between the native peoples and the government, a recent court decision cast doubt on whether the treaties actually constituted surrender of title to the land.

The Northwest Territories Indians are fighting the Mackenzie valley gas pipeline on the grounds that title to the land has not yet been settled.

Last March, the Indians filed a caveat asserting title to the land in the Mackenzie River valley.

If the caveat is accepted — its status is presently in doubt — anyone buying or acquiring the lands runs the risk that Indian claims will have priority at some time in the future.

A successful caveat would have the effect of scaring off resource developers, unless the federal government manages to negotiate a settlement acceptable to the Indians; hence the anxiousness of the government to settle native claims.

Both Wah-Shee and Curley called for active participation by native peoples in the development of the north, provided native land claims are settled first.

Both also endorsed the concept of self government for native peoples in the north as a way to ensure participation, and development with the interests of the native peoples in command.

Also speaking in the panel discussion were conservative Indian affairs critic Flora MacDonald, and Judd Buchanan parliamentary secretary to Jean Chretien, the minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and chairman of the Commons standing committee in that area.

MacDonald attacked the "inherent conflict" in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, noting it could not be expected to do justice to both Indian and development interests.

Query floors tory, grit

By DAVID SIMMONDS

Although the current rage is to lump the Liberals and the NDP together, you can still get a Liberal and a Conservative to jump in the same direction if you ask them the right question.

That was proved conclusively Saturday when Liberal parliamentary secretary of Indian Affairs Judd Buchanan and Conservative Indian affairs critic Flora MacDonald were asked if they would consider a complete five-year moratorium on northern development pending an investigation of its effects on the native population.

"It won't be realistic," said a startled Buchanan, "The majority of Canadians won't go for it."

"We can't stop all development," said MacDonald, adding she was, however, "in favor of some moratorium."

She would not commit herself on how long a moratorium she would recommend.

Buchanan and MacDonald engaged in amiable sparring throughout the panel discussion on native land claims, chaired by CBC announcer Bruce Rogers.

Much of the discussion centred on the role of the National Energy Board (NEB) which opens hearings tomorrow on an application by Canadian Arctic Gas Ltd. to build a pipeline in the Mackenzie valley.

The consortium has produced hundreds of pounds of documentation supporting its case, presumably to convince the board it is quite capable of large scale environmental destruction without having set a foot in the area.

The NEB is certain to approve the proposal, said MacDonald, since its mandate does not concern social, economic or environmental impact, and is limited to concerns of engineering and efficient energy use.

Moreover, she said, the recent statement by Jean Chretien, minister of Indian Affairs Northern Development, that the government intends to build the pipeline makes the supposedly independent board a "farce."

Buchanan replied the NEB was an independent body, and it would be foolish for it to ignore wider concerns such as environmental impact given the status of public concern.

The NEB has the same status in government as the CRTC, whose recent decision to grant Bell Canada a rate increase was overturned by the federal cabinet.

Buchanan was criticized from the floor for not allowing adversary groups the chance to oppose the pipeline application at the hearings, since government funding for these groups has not been forthcoming.

"But how would you control it," wondered Buchanan, apparently appalled at the prospect of any old activist group in the street wandering into his office to ask for money to fight a pipeline.

MacDonald pointed out only three groups — Pollution Probe, the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, and the Committee for an Independent Canada — had been approached by the government to prepare briefs at the hearings.

Despite the fact they all returned proposals for submissions, none of the three groups heard any reply from the government, she said.

"There won't be any meaningful, informed criticism of the proposal," said MacDonald, noting the oil consortium had already spent millions preparing its brief.

LENT

St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel
The Newman Centre
Hoskin Avenue at St. George St.

24 March

Fourth Sunday of Lent

"A time for planting, a time for uprooting what has been planted"
Sunday Afternoon: Time for Retreat from 2-5 p.m.
"Rid yourselves of all your sins; and make a new heart and a new spirit"

31 March

Fifth Sunday of Lent

"A time for keeping silent, a time for speaking"

3 April

Communal Penance Service

"The time has come and the kingdom of God is close at hand. Repent and believe the Good News."

7 April

Palm Sunday

"A time for giving birth, a time for dying"

Sunday Mass at 10 a.m. and 12 noon
Weekday Mass at 7:45 a.m., 12:10 p.m. and 4:30 p.m.
Tuesday Evening Mass and Supper: 5:30 p.m.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Toronto Arts Productions
in co-operation with Toronto Island Residents Assn.

DEATH AT 150 YEARS?

TORONTO ISLAND COMMUNITY AND ITS STRUGGLE FOR SURVIVAL

PANELISTS:
D. Arty Goldrick - Alderman, Chairman Tor
Hosking Work Group, B. H. Metcalfe - Rep. of T.I.R.A., K. M. Mallette - Scarborough Countroller, Chairman T.T.C., W. J. Archer - O.C.
Alderman

MODERATOR:
Bruce Rogers - Broadcaster

Wed. Mar. 20, 8 p.m.

ADMISSION
FREE
EVERYONE
WELCOME
LAWRENCE
Centre

FRONT ST. E.
10th & 11th

ARE YOU LOOKING FOR A JOB? WE CAN HELP:

'74 GRADS IN SEARCH OF PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT

REGISTER AT THE CAREER COUNSELLING AND PLACEMENT CENTRE (ROOM 412) FOR OUR INDIVIDUAL JOB REFERRAL SERVICE.

ALL STUDENTS INTERESTED IN SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

CHECK THE LISTINGS ON OUR SUMMER JOB BULLETIN BOARDS IMMEDIATELY AND REGULARLY AFTER THAT SINCE JOBS ARE BEING RECEIVED DAILY.

And while you're at our place, why not speak to a counsellor? You can get help in mapping out your own job hunt, writing resumes, preparing for interviews and obtaining general and specific career information.

CAREER COUNSELLING AND PLACEMENT CENTRE, 344 Bloor Street West, 4th Fl.

TERMPAPERS

We Research All Subjects
High Quality
Fast Service
Very Reasonable Rates

Call:

QUALITY RESEARCH

653-3693

Weekdays - 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
Saturdays - 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Pink
Whiskers
Boutique

Fashion is fun at Pink Whiskers.

924-1974

1 Bedford Rd.
(St. George subway - Bedford exit.)

Dashing trackmen perform feats in Yipsilanti

By BRAD MORLEY

U of T and UTTC athletes took part on Saturday March 16 in the fourth annual eastern Michigan relays at Yipsilanti, Michigan. In the 80m hurdles Mike Hart (UTTC) finished fourth in his heat in 10.6 and Eric Little and Ron Nastuk finished fifth in their heats in 11.2 and 11.8 respectively.

In the 500 yd dash Gerry Freaney finished a very strong second in 57.1 behind NCAA 600 yd champ Stan Uinson. Dave Colbert was fourth in 58.9 and Chris Birz (UTTC) was fifth in 59.1. Rick Cunningham finished with a time of 61.9.

The shuttle hurdle relay team of Hart, Cunningham, Little and Nastuk finished fourth in 32.5. In the mile run Joe Sux set a new meet record of 4:11.2 with a devastating kick to the finish line while Greg Lockhart (UTTC) ran fourth in 4:17.10.

In the 220 intermediate hurdles Hart and Little were fifth, 25.4 and seventh, 26.8 respectively. Dave Fujiware ran a good two mile to finish in 9:42.

The three mile was run in 13:54.2 for second place by John Sharp (spelled: s-h-a-r-p). Dave Kerr (UTTC) was fourth in 14:05 and Mike Dyon 7th in 14:23.8. Mike McVarnish finished fourth in the high jump with a 6'4" height cleared also by Carl Georgosky who finished fifth.

Nastuk was 7th in the pole vault at 14'0". U of T ran a very strong mile relay (Howes, Colbert, Birz, Feeney) to finish second behind Eastern Michigan in a time of 3:21.4.

On the same weekend four UTTC athletes completed at the Canada-France meet with excellent performances. Dave Watt was third in the triple jump with 49'9". Sue Bradley won the 60 yd hurdles in 6.6. Doug

The Varsity—Dave Lavender

Sticks go into the air as Waterloo discovers puck is in the Sir George net. (See story, opposite page.)

Carton was third in the 800 m in 1:52.8. Eleanor Mahall ran on the winning sprint relay team.

TERMPAPERS

Quality, Originality, Security

$2.75 per page

Catalog. Available $2.00

Mon.-Fri. 12 noon-8 p.m.;

Sat. 12 noon-5 p.m.

ESSAY SERVICES

57 Spadina Avenue,
Suite 105

Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Telephone: (416)366-6549

BE INVOLVED

Work for Office Overload
When you need us,
We need you

office
overload

A CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL COMPANY

BRAMPTON	151 BLOOR ST. W.	451-4290	924 6844
SCARBOROUGH	431 1420	431-1420	ISLINGTON-BLOOR
404 MILLS	491-2880	491-2880	KELLS-FINCH
WILLOWDALE	751-5135	390 BAY ST. W. (LEGAL)	LONG BRANCH
DOWNSVIEW			OKAYVILLE
			WESTON/REXDALE
			249-6409
			364-9024

Looking for Office Work?

Temporary and Permanent

Call
The Personnel Centre

Ask For
Edith Geddes or Lynne Heaman

924-6274

HOLOCAUST REMEMBRANCE WEEK March 29 - April 3, 1974

in commemoration of the Six Million who perished under the Nazis

"SHABBAT IN MEMORIAM" — March 29-30

...the Sabbath is the celebration of the world of time while other days celebrate the world of space... this Sabbath marks the 30th year since the end of the Holocaust... Readings from this period: Ch. Kaplan, Ringelblum, Steiner, Schwartz-Bart, Wiesel...

reservations taken until Weds., Mar. 27 No charge for meals or accommodations.
Call 923-9861.

"THE VANISHED WORLD OF THE SHTETL: THE WORK OF ROMAN VISHNIAC"

March 30, 1974 — 9:00 PM (Saturday) Shaarel Tefillah Cong. 3600 Bathurst St.

a biologist, physician, and master photographer, Dr. Vishniac will be showing his slides taken 1938-40 in Eastern Europe which depict shetl life just before its destruction. The slides are a beautiful and Vishniac's commentary brings one as close as possible to a world of the past.

"TRANSPORT FROM PARADISE" — March 31 (Sun.)

adapted from his prize-winning novel, ARNOST LUSTIG will introduce his film and then discuss its implications with the audience. Lustig teaches theatre art at American Univ., Washington, DC. He is a survivor of several death-camps and a member of the Bergen-Belsen Assoc.

7:30 PM - Room 2172, Medical Sciences Bldg., University of Toronto

"THE SHOP ON MAIN STREET" — April 1 (Mon)

winner of Academy Award for Best Foreign Picture, this film starring Ida Kaminska raises the question of human moral responsibility... Discussion following.

7:30 PM — Room 3153, Medical Sciences Bldg., University of Toronto

"THREE FILMS OF THE HOLOCAUST" — April 2 (Tues.)

1. "I NEVER SAW ANOTHER BUTTERFLY" — the paintings by children age 8-15 who were held in the Terezin concentration camp prior to their transfer to Auschwitz.
2. "DENMARK 43" — the courageous stand of the Danish people to protect their fellow Jewish citizens.
3. "OUT OF THE ASHES" — depicts the brutality of the Nazi Plan of 'JUDENREIN'

Each film is ½ hr. in length. Following all three, a discussion will be held.

HILLEL HOUSE — 186 St. George
7:30 P.M.

"THE BLACK FOX" — April 3 (Weds.)

an excellent film, narrated by Marlene Dietrich, covering the entire Holocaust period. The film will be introduced and discussed subsequently by PROF. EMIL FACKENHEIM

7:30 p.m., — Room 1017
New College — 40 Willcocks

THE HOLOCAUST REMEMBRANCE WEEK is made possible by a grant from the Bergen-Belsen Association and was created by Bnai Brith Hillel Fdn. — Toronto

Waterloo Warriors capture CIAU 6-5 in overtime

By PAUL CARSON

The pundits were in fine form Saturday as Waterloo Warriors overcame Sir George Williams Georgians 6-5 to win their first CIAU hockey title before about 4,000 excited spectators at Varsity Arena.

The result of the only overtime game to date in CIAU championship play resuscitated the reputations of the many press experts who'd been somewhat red-faced when Waterloo replaced Blues as OUAA champions. The score also proved a sad ending to an unexpectedly productive season for the Georgians and their horde of over 1,000 vocal fans who infected the Arena with their enthusiasm and their debris.

The pundits predicted that SGW would have to contain Waterloo's top line centered by captain Mike Guimond with wingers Ron Hawkshaw and Russ Elliott.

The Georgians didn't and the line produced five of the six Warrior goals including the tying goal midway through the third period, plus both overtime goals. The line also collected eight assists and completely dominated play whenever it was on the ice.

Many experts also predicted that Waterloo would enjoy a wide margin in the play and in shots on goal. This too proved accurate as Warriors dominated the initial period and had compiled a 15-2 advantage in shots on goal by the ten minute mark of the second period.

However, Warriors then went to sleep for a few minutes as the Georgians rallied for two quick goals and a 3-2 lead after 40 minutes.

Warriors were still asleep early in the final period when a deflection made it 4-2 but soon produced a rally of their own to tie the score and the OUAA champions dominated play for the remainder of the game, finishing with a 57-33 advantage in shots.

SGW goaltender Bernie Wolfe was expected to be the dominant Georgian in the game but again, many experts feared his well-known weakness on shots to the glove side might prove embarrassing.

Wolfe produced an outstanding game and was clearly the best Georgian on the ice as he won the game's most valuable player award. However, the glove side nemesis remained as he misplayed Elliott's long shot after only 30 seconds of the overtime period.

Guimond scored on a deflection two minutes later and Georgians never really recovered.

Georgians also failed to match Waterloo's hitting game and succeeded only in drawing a series of foolish and costly penalties, including three during the 10-minute overtime. Overall, SGW took 23 minutes in penalties compared to Waterloo's 12.

Hawkshaw opened the scoring early in the first period but Rory McKay tied it on a deflection. However, before the period ended Hawkshaw set up Guimond perfectly and Waterloo led 2-1.

Wolfe's acrobatics kept the Georgians in the game during the middle period until diminutive winger Brian Morin tied the score on a perfect shot from a bad angle that Waterloo netminder Jake Dupuis appeared to misplay.

Depending on which expert you listened to, it was either the Georgians' first, second or third shot of the period.

Morin had been inaccurately listed on the SGW lineup but fortunately the game officials noticed the discrepancy a few minutes before his tying goal. Otherwise the rabid Sir George fans might have buried the officials in garbage. As it was, they celebrated the goal with a ten-minute display of garbage.

Marcel Lapierre converted an errant Waterloo pass into a 3-2 lead and Maurice Desfosses made a clever deflection for the fourth Georgian goal.

Warriors comeback received a boost when sloppy defensive play at the Georgians blueline enabled Rob Madeley to get a clear breakaway on Wolfe; he scored and it was 4-3.

A few minutes later, Hawkshaw put a perfect pass on Elliott's stick from behind the net and the score was tied.

Wolfe came down to earth in the overtime and Waterloo combined solid defensive play and some inattention by the referee into their victory. Alain Vendette made it 6-5 but Georgians couldn't get the equalizer.

In other activities connected with the championship game, Varsity center Don Pagnutti was named to the all-Canadian team selected by the college coaches. Wolfe was named all-star goaltender and Varsity captain Warren Anderson gained an honorable mention on defense.

WOMEN

Do you have
NLS or Award of Merit
or Instructors?

Do you want to make
some money next year?

Apply to lifeguard at the Benson Building Pool
for the academic year 1974-75

Application forms are
now available in Room 226 or 230
of the Benson Building

Anyone interested in

ROWING

for the University of Toronto next year is encouraged to row at the Argonaut Rowing Club or any other private club during the summer.

This is also applicable to persons weighing less than 120 lbs., as they may become coxwains.

Please leave name, address and phone number in the Intercollegiate Office, Hart House, Room 101.

Women's hockey finals

Women's interfac hockey held its championships this week. In the A division playoffs, PHE beat Erindale
2-1. Bray scored for Erindale.
McDonald scored one goal,
McDougal scored one and assisted on one, and Shankey assisted on two.

PHE lead 1-0 at the end of the first period and 2-0 at the end of the second. Erindale managed to score in the third.

In B division play, New (10) downed PHE 1-0. McKinney was assisted by Jarron for New's only goal.

Discover
the freedom of
CONTACT LENSES

BRADDOCK

OPTICAL

170 St. George St. 925-8720
2917 Bloor St. W. 233-2611
Cantony Plaza 282-2030
Bayview Village Centre 222-5791

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE
280 BLOOR ST WEST 962-2020

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55%...

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer.
Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers
Vainqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity. Vainqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling.
Also available in American Arrow

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE	RETAIL
AMER CAN ARROW MARK II	149.00	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1	149.00	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW S1	159.00	103.00
VANQUEUR OLYMPIC	149.00	112.00
VANQUEUR	149.00	97.00
LA PERLE	149.00	97.00
VOLKSCYCLE	159.00	103.00

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment.
Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dynamo electric lighting with generator, back carrier, padded seat, chrome chain guard, and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE	RETAIL
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW S1 HAVE SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS	159.00	112.00
VISTA	149.00	97.00
GLX200	89.00	55.00
TIGER	119.00	83.00
LA PERLE	99.00	81.00
SAFARI OR CAPRI	79.00	60.50

- give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept charge.

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #36C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

FREE

Get this sturdy tote
bag FREE, Reg.
$3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario

Phone: 749-6171

Your Chargex card is accepted

sports

Lawrence Clarke
923-4053

Law overcome three goal deficit - tie SMC 5-5

By DAVE STUART

Division I

In the first match of the division I championships, Law I and SMC clashed at Varsity Arena on Monday night. The game ended in a 5-5 saw-off.

Play in the first period was even. Sibbitt opened the scoring for SMC at 7:41. His centering pass from the corner deflected off a Law defenseman in front of the net and dribbled past a helpless Durno, the lawyer net-minder.

Less than a minute later, Law's McDonald fed Morrison who unleashed a blistering shot from just inside the blue line to tie it 1-1.

Borosso scored SMC's second marker and then watched from the penalty box as Law's Morrison again tied the score on a power play effort.

The priests handled all the scoring in the second period. Goals by Sibbitt, White and Tate gave the Mike's a solid 5-2 lead. Several of the goals were of the soft variety, but Durno got little defensive support from his teammates.

Cornier play during the period was ferocious and the officials responded with nine minor penalties, mostly for roughing. As the buzzer sounded to end the stanza, Law's Zimmerman and SMC's Rogers started swinging. The other players on the ice joined in the brawl and SMC's Brown received a game misconduct for being the third man in.

In the final period, Law decided to do some scoring of its own. Goals by Palumbo and Zimmerman put Law back in the game. Several minor penalties to SMC kept the 37 rabid fans on the edge of their seats as Law buzzed around the Mike's net. With one minute remaining, and SMC A celebrate a goal as Law A's goalie hangs himself on the net in despair. They tied 5-5.

SMC's McKenzie taking a coffee break in the sin bin, Law capitalized on the penalty. Zimmerman fired the puck from the point into the net to tie the score with only ten seconds left in the game.

Law outshot the fathers 26-22. Both teams suffered from some shaky goaltending.

Division II

Pharm A easily handled Law II in the second game of their total point semi-final round Thursday night. They defeated Law 3-2 to gain a berth against Jr. Eng in the Div II finals.

Pharm A walked away with the game from the opening face off and never looked back. They pumped shots at the lawyers' net almost at will in the first period.

Law netminder Vorps stopped a lot of rubber in the opening stanza, and held the druggists to only one goal by Walt from Walker. and period play was much the same. Hetherington picked up an unassisted short-handed goal for Pharm while Alexandrei got the other. Armstrong finally cracked the scoreboard for Law.

The lawyers bounced back in the third period to make a game of it.

Their hustle paid off at 7:52 on a goal by Armstrong, his second, assisted by Phillips.

Law pulled their goalie in the last minute in a vain attempt to tie the score. The lawyers hit the post twice but couldn't get the puck past Pharm net minder Newman.

Pharmacy won the opening game 3-2 giving them a 6-4 score in the series.

Intramural basketball playoffs continue

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

Interfaculty

In the division II interfaculty basketball playdowns, PHE C, Dent B, Jr Eng and Innis opened with victories to advance to the semi-finals. PHE C dumped Trin B 50-31, getting good shooting from Nedoszytko (17 points), Mehew (16), Visca (14) and Thompson (11). Gallant last gasps from the aristocrats at the guillotine came from Ledger and Smith (16 each), McCrae (13) and Crasweller (11).

Dent B won the right to play PHE C in the semi-finals when they handed a 70-63 defeat to SMC B. The dentists pried the victory from the jaws of defeat with the point-getting of Wichert (22), Morris (19), Barnes (14) and Witt (13). Dollinger led the mikes with 16 points (14 in the second half), followed by Gescon (11), and Baresi with eight.

Jowanoy and George each had a hot night, scoring 17 and 15 points respectively, as Jr Eng skipped to a 60-54 victory over Pharm A. Sarracini and Fogliato added another nine points each to spread the engineers' scoring around.

Pharmacy was led by Valcus' 16 points, with Grillanda adding 13. Another Pharm player-cum-writer, one Pritchard, carried on a fireworks display of his own, hooping three points.

Innis cannonaded For A 85-40 as they scored 56 points in the final half to add another chapter to human misery. Rotstein delivered 27 points to the Innis scoreboard while High-Yo Silver got away another 16 for the Innis mob.

Trying to stave off ecological disaster for the tree-cutters were Clark (21), Butler (seven) and Gordon (six).

Now we move on to the semi-finals, intrepid reader, where PHE met Dents and Jr Eng clashed with Innis in a three game series.

PHE C took a 74-55 decision over the dentists in the first game, when Mehew delivered 25 points and Thompson and Visca each netted 16 more. Parnes and Witt each dropped 14 points in for the losers while Wichert managed another 10.

Dents made a game of it in the second meeting between the two but lost a squeaker 61-59 Nedosenko had a hot hand and 20 points with Carey suppling 17 and Thompson 12. Wichert scored 19 with Parnes and Witt each hitting 12 for the Dents.

In the other semi-final, Innis blasted the Jr Eng team 73-43, getting 31 points from Rotstein and 21 from Zadczynsky. George (12) and Fogliato (10) led the engineers.

In the second game, however, Jr Eng turned the tables, dropping Innis 75-68 and thereby staving off elimination. George (23), Harris (17) and Sarracini (16) led the renaissance for the plumbers while the omnipresent Rotstein connected for 27 and Silver mined 18.

The teams met in a deciding game last night but it was after the press deadline and we don't know the outcome. Whoever won it will play PHE C in the finals beginning 5:30 pm Thursday.

Intermediate

The intermediate basketball playoffs continued this week, with Wycliffe, Knox I, Architecture and Knox A capturing semi-final berths.

Med D, who had won a quarter-final spot previously when Eng V defaulted, could put off the day of judgement no longer as they were slain 57-27 by Knox A. The knoxsters led only 18-15 at the half but the Angel of Death presumably got the doctors' number for the rest of the game.

Cathrae led the Knox warriors, scoring 19 points, with Dandy hooping 14 and McCormick adding 10. Onrot led the interns-to-be with 12.

Knox A will now meet Wycliffe in a one game semi-final that should be nothing less than a holy war. Wycliffe had earlier defeated Vic III 32-28 to capture the semi-final playoff spot. Their game with Knox begins tonight at 7 pm in Hart House.

Knox College must be a hotbed of basketball because their other intermediate team, Knox I, also got into the semi-finals. Knox I trounced Eng III 47-14, salting away 40 points in the second half while the engineers could only manage four.

Weaver sank 16, Corley added 12 and Blair hit 10 to lead Knox A's carnage while Smith with eight points led the engineers.

Another engineering team, the Optimals, hung up their sneakers for the year as Architecture defeated them 41-26. Sickle led Arch with 15 points, followed by Amborski with 11 and Bettio with 10. Mills shot eight and Olarnyh added four for the less than optimal engineers.

Knox I meets Arch tonight at 8:30 with the winner meeting the team that triumphs in the Wycliffe-Knox series.

And a little child shall lead them...

By GUESS WHO?

Newly elected SAC president Seymour Kanowitch scored the tying basket as the SAC all-stars tied the Varsity all-stars 74-74 last Friday.

Leading scorers for SAC were Kanowitch (10) Paul Axelrod from OFS (10) and George Ferguson from Strachan Folies (10).

Leaders for the Varsity were Bob "century" Bettson (16), David Simmonds (10), Linda McQuaig (14) and Gene Allen (10). Bettson scored two from centre court, stunning the crowd.

Innis player rises for a shot against Jr Eng in a playoff game.

Faculty pressures Conway to stop SDS

Committee favors Gov Council parity

By BOB BETTSON

The U of T Act review committee narrowly agreed yesterday by a vote of 5-4 to recommend parity representation on Governing Council between students and faculty.

The three student committee members Jim Martin, Howard Levitt and Norma Grindal were supported by alumni Graham Cotter and Harry Riva.

Three faculty members including SMC president father John Kelly, Professor William Dunphy, and Professor J.W. Smith were supported by Edward Dunlop, a government appointee.

Though Levitt, in his exuberance, proclaimed the decision a "momentous day in the history of the university", the motion will have to pass a majority of Governing Council which includes only eight students among its 50 members.

In his summary Smith made a veiled threat similar to that of 1971 when the faculty threatened the legislators. He said "It is a shame one estate has to lose for the sake of another."

Smith claimed the teaching faculty would "lose confidence" in the Governing Council if there was parity.

But the committee's recommendation has a long way to go if it is to be implemented. It will have to go to the executive, the Governing Council, then the legislature and the ruling Conservative party cabinet, never a favorite of students.

The rambling two-hour discussion repeated many of the arguments put forward by both students and staff during the 1971 U of T Act debate at the legislature.

Then, the senior faculty were able to scuttle staff-student parity by threatening to disrupt the university. The government had indicated it might accept parity through a gradual increase in student representation in five years until it was equal.

Smith made the strongest arguments against parity as the faculty members said they would accept more student representation but not parity. He said he had not heard one good argument for parity other than a symbolic equality between staff and students.

However, in an impassioned speech Levitt argued equal student faculty representation would be necessary because students have different perspectives and there should be a need for consensus with faculty on an equal basis.

He added in the present system the inequality had resulted in students having to devote their resources to fighting measures they opposed. This has left students feeling their opinions are "not taken seriously" by the Governing Council.

Polarization and student alienation from council could be avoided by equal representation which would require the faculty to compromise. In the last two years he explained, students have had substantial differences on the Forster report and the discipline code.

Levitt was supported by Cotter who said that psychologically students must feel they are represented as full adult members of the largest estate in the university.

He said a partnership would be helped by equal representation and students could be more effectively represented on committees of the council.

He added faculty members should be able to learn from students as equal partners in the teaching learning function. "It is important to show we are taking into account the views of the biggest constituency (in the university)."

Dunphy said he had not heard any arguments in favor of parity that were convincing. "The crucial question is the actual effectiveness of the student governors."

He added he failed to see the reasons behind the psychological and symbolic demands for parity. Martin replied that he on the contrary had heard no arguments against parity and asked the faculty to make some. There are rational arguments for an equal say in decisions making, he said.

Administrative staff representation John Parker was a non-voter since committee member Gwen Russell was unable to attend. He said trust and partnership could not be achieved by numerical equality and later submitted a recommendation for staff, student-administrative staff-parity which failed for lack of a second.

The Board of Stewards, reacting calmly to Conway's subtle suggestion Wednesday, expressed unanimous agreement that the SDS could in fact use the facilities of the House. (Conway is a voting presidential appointee to the Board.)

The SDS was able to get through on a technicality, since an officially recognized campus group, the Arts and Science Student Union (ASSU), booked the room on behalf of the SDS.

Conway's appeal to the Board of Stewards was based on a letter dated March 20 sent by campus services co-ordinator Lois Reimer to Bill Schabas of the SDS.

Reimer's letter stated: "Under the guidelines established governing the recognition of campus organizations which were established by the internal affairs committee in September 1973, a copy of which was subsequently sent to the Students for a Democratic Society, I write to advise that recognition has been suspended in the case of the SDS. This decision will be reported to the internal affairs committee at its next meeting on March 25."

A copy of Reimer's letter was received yesterday by Schabas, one day after Conway made her appeal to the Board of Stewards. However, copies of the letter were sent to central room allocation offices, the warden of Hart House, and the director of the international student centre.

Had Conway's appeal been granted, "freedom of speech" would have been denied on this campus. Ironically, only last week the administration acted after some conservative faculty demanded that "freedom of speech" and "academic freedom" be preserved.

Reimer said yesterday the SDS had violated section 3(b) of the mechanisms for the recognition of campus groups. The section states: "That eligibility for recognition be assessed against the following (technical) constitutional areas rather than ideological ones: the objectives and activities of groups seeking recognition should be seen as attempting to contribute to the educational, recreational, social or cultural values of the university."

Reimer was unable to define the boundaries or the meaning of the phrase "the educational, recreational, social or cultural values of the university."

Reimer also said the decision to suspend recognition of SDS was "an administrative decision" and the further approval of the internal affairs committee was not needed. No further explanation was given for the suspension. According to section 3 (above) suspension was not done on ideological grounds.

Rev. Graham Cotter (centre), that nice man from those Star sex columns is once the Governing Council, where he's nice too—he voted for parity. At left is hard-working Howard Levitt, who introduced the motion at the subcommittee.

Student member Grindal said the ideal number would be 14 teaching staff and 14 students. She added the lack of student representation has put too much burden on the small number of student representatives.

ECO 100 students to hold vote on grading

By MARINA STRAUSS

Dissatisfaction with a departmental policy on grading came to a head Wednesday as representatives of Economics 100 decided to hold a referendum in the course Monday, zeroing in on the issue.

Students are to be asked Monday if they favor a "floating" scheme of a 60-40 weighting of term and final exam marks, instead of the present 50-50 break-down set by the Political Economy department.

"Floating" refers to a 60 per cent weighting to the better of the two marks.

The department has rejected the student request, saying all students in the 13 sections of ECO 100 were warned of the "contract" in September and departmental policy maintains a final exam be worth half the year's mark.

But ECO 100 student section representatives are demanding "operative agreement" in determining their evaluation.

In a letter sent to department chairman J. Stephan Dupre, Wednesday five student section representatives of the course write:

"...We wish to negotiate our evaluation rather than having it arbitrarily imposed.

"This is done in the belief that education, and therefore evaluation, is a joint co-operative venture and cannot be dictated by either side."

The students argue they were never consulted in the department decision, and "a contract implies negotiation and mutual consent."

The Faculty of Arts and Science only requires the term mark be based on at least one-third but no more than two-thirds of the final mark.

Student section representatives are further enraged that a body of students and faculty members, set up within the department in February to discuss such issues, has no power to implement its decisions.

As one student in this group put it: "When it comes to central issues (the group) disowns itself and tells the students to go to the chairman."

Department undergraduate secretary Peter Silcox, a member of the body, insisted it was only set up "to discuss improvements in first year economics courses" and advise the chairman.

"We're a discussion group," he explained. "We're not legislating. We're exchanging experiences."

The group, consisting of five ECO 100 student, section reps and five of the course's professors, was set up following a request by the Political Economy Course Union (PECU) to iron out pressing problems in the course.

The group has already made some suggestions to the chairman, but its faculty members refuse to continue discussion on the issue of evaluations, said the student member interviewed by the Varsity who prefers to have his name withheld.

Although the department has already acted on some recommendations of the group, its faculty members have hedged away from proposing changes in evaluation, telling the students to speak directly with Dupre.

"It took us five weeks to find out we have to go directly to Dupre for action," complained the student rep.

Silcox maintained "if the group comes across a good suggestion we hand it to other faculty members" to get their reaction.

He argued the group must reach "a consensus" on any issue. "But that doesn't stop the students from going to the chairman themselves," he added.

Silcox refused to comment on the issue of grading, showing all responsibility to Dupre.

The ECO 100 student rep, however, said Silcox never asked for consensus during meetings.

He pointed to a poll he took in his 11 am Trinity section taught by Ian Drummond. "Students voted 40-1 for a de-emphasis of the final exam."

He added students also voted overwhelmingly to maintain such an exam in ECO 100.

The students say in the letter that although they "strongly" hope their request is not denied this year if it is turned down:

"We respectfully submit that the Department grant the representatives of this committee equal time next September to make this situation clear to new ECO 100 students."

"Therefore, what we feel to be legitimate student requests will not be trod upon as easily as they have been in the current year."

Mac students vote to strike

HAMILTON (CUP) — Students at McMaster University have voted to strike.

A general meeting of students yesterday decided to take the strike action unless the university administration agrees by this afternoon, 24 hours after the meeting, to hold an emergency Senate meeting within one week.

Last night, U of T's SAC at a general meeting voted to throw its support behind the McMaster students.

The motion was passed 1,024 to 640 at the general meeting in the packed McMaster Phys Ed Building. Nearly 3,000 turned out for the meeting, a record number for a McMaster student union general meeting.

The original motion concerning the senate meeting had an amendment calling for discussion of parity in the French department and the whole issue of security on campus.

The strike vote came after negotiations with university president A.W. Bourns broke down following the arrest Tuesday of seven students who had occupied Bourns' office.

After the students were arrested on petty trespassing charges, about 500 students entered the registrar's office and Bourns later agreed to meet with them to discuss students' demands for the dropping of charges and for parity.

Mac's French students have been boycotting classes since March 8. They took over humanities dean Alwyn Berland's office March 11 and two days later moved into Bourns' office.

HERE AND NOW

The last Varsity of this term will be published a week from today. All Here and Now announcements for events taking place before noon on September 11 must be submitted by next Wednesday at 1 pm.

TODAY

Jobs for students and grads
"74-Graduates should register today for Permanent Job Referral Service and other students desirous of summer jobs should check the Summer Job Bulletin Board Career Counselling & Placement Centre. Captain Beeheart and his Magic Band will be in concert at Convocation Hall on April 7th for two shows at 7 and 10 P.M. by the Rovy and SAC. Tickets are 4.50 & tax but there is a special student discount only at the SAC office.

8:15 am

Friday—all day—"Beyond The Theology of Karl Barth," a theological colloquium sponsored by the North American Karl Barth Society. All lectures in Room 3 of the New Academic Building at Victoria University.

1:15 pm

Muslim students may note that regular Friday congregational prayers are held in the South Stirling Room, 3rd floor, Hart House.

Victoria College Drama Club presents "Arkanoid"—a play by David Alken, UC Playhouse. Admission free.

2 pm

The African Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, University of Toronto presents a seminar sponsored by the Department of Political Economy led by Professor Henry Bienen, Senate Chairman, Department of Politics, Princeton University on "Military regimes and development: the Nigerian experience in comparative perspective," in Room 3050, Sidney Smith Hall.

2:10 pm

Free Quebec film: "Quebec, Duplessis et après" by Denis Arcand, a controversial political film on contemporary Quebec. UC 106.

2:30 pm

Auditions! "Pierre Pathelin": a medieval French farce in modern English to be performed in May. Pochi Ludique Societas, 39B Queen's Park Crescent East. Until 5 pm.

3 pm

There will be a lecture at Scarborough College in room H215 by Professor Jerry Kubrzycki of Carleton University. The title is "Minorities in Australia."

3:30 pm

The Friday Afternoon Pub is running again today in the Junior Common Room of University College. Wine and beer. Free popcorn.

4 pm

Centre for Renaissance Studies announces Professor Eva Kushner speaking on "The Renaissance Dialogue: Work of Art or Instrument of Inquiry." Lecture Theatre, Robarts Library.

5 pm

A meeting of the Christian Science Organization at the University of Toronto in Woodger Room, Old Vic. All welcome.

6:20 pm

Licht Benchnen today at Hill House.

7 pm

"The Ruling Class", starring Peter O'Toole, will be the next feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club. Please note time change: the early show is at 7 pm. Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

"Slither" with James Caan and Sally Kellerman will be shown in the Medical Sciences Auditorium tonight at 7 and 9:45. Admission is 95¢.

7:30 pm

Mark Brothers Festival with W.C. Fields "My Little Chickadee," "My Little Chickadee," and "Duck Soup." Room 3153 Medical Sciences Building.

8 pm

Benefit Dance in support of persons arrested during the Artistic Woodwork strike at St. Paul's Church, 121 Avenue Rd. Two bands. Admission $2.

"Coffee Pub" sponsored by the Toronto Polish Students' Association. Join us for some music, culture, and drinks; or just to relax and chat. At the SPK Hall, 206 Beverley St. Free admission.

"What is God's plan for Man?" Come to an informal Bible study session by "Christians on Campus," and share your living Christ with us. It's happening at McLennan Physics Building, Rm. 111. Free admission. All are welcome.

Rites of Spring is here. It's time for one last bash before the agony of exams. Let the Son of Oktoberfest help you forget your woes. March 22, 23, 8 pm-1 am. Hart House, be there.

8:30 pm

East Indian Dance Evening at the Ontario College of Art in the Nora E. Vaughn Auditorium at 100 McCaul Street. Tickets are 50¢ for Adults and children under twelve are free, and are available at the door.

SATURDAY

2:30 pm

Auditions! "Pierre Pathelin": a medieval French farce in modern English to be performed in May. Pochi Ludique Societas, 39B Queen's Park Crescent East. Until 5:30 pm.

7 pm

"The Ruling Class", starring Peter O'Toole, will be the next feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club. Please note time change: the early show is at 7 pm. Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

8 pm

U of T Hispanic Club. We will have a Fiesta from 8 pm to 1 am in the Sir Daniel Wilson Residence, Junior Common Room (basement). Come to enjoy yourself and practice your Spanish. Live entertainment. Sangria. Admission: $1.50 couples, $1.00 singles.

9 pm

Hillel's Grad Club is presenting two entertainers in concert. All welcome to attend.

SUNDAY

10 am

The Lenten focus at the Newman Centre for this Sunday is: "A time for planting, a time for uprooting what has been planted." Happens in St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel (and Newman Centre) at 89 St. George St. Mass again at noon.

2 pm

Chance for an afternoon of Lenten prayer and people reflection with the Newman Centre community. All are welcome to share in the experience. Newman Centre is found opposite Robarts Library at 89 St. George St. Until 5 pm.

6 pm

The Muslim Students Association invites all the regular Quranic Tafseer ("Quranic Exposition"), held in the Morning Room, International Students Centre, 33 St. George St. Lecture is followed by informal discussion and refreshments.

7:15 pm

The Sunday series feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be Vittorio de Sica's "Umberto D." Admission by series ticket or $7.5 at the door. Also at 9:30 pm.

8:30 pm

The New Chamber Orchestra of Canada in The Great Hall, Hart House, the 5th concert in its series. Soloist will be Gerard Kanarijan, violinist, performing the Leclair Violin Concerto, and works by Haydn, Grieg, and Hindemith. Kanarijan is the former concertmaster of The Toronto Symphony. Tickets available at the door or in Hart House, Mar. 18-22, 1-4 pm Adults $4, Students $2.

MONDAY

11 am

U of T Hispanic Club. There will be Mesas Hispanicas in Room 123, Sussex Court, 21 Sussex Ave., from 11 am to 2 pm. Come to eat your lunch and practice your Spanish.

4 pm

The Recorder Club to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street. Advanced players from 5 to 6 pm, beginners from 5 to 6 pm.

The South Asian Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, University of Toronto presents a talk and film by Miss Pragna Thakkar, Department of Sanskrit and Indian Studies, University of Toronto on "Kuliyattam: a surviving tradition of performing Sanskrit plays," in Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall.

The East Asian Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, University of Toronto presents a lecture by Professor Robert Ruhnman, Professor of Chinese Literature, The Sorbonne, Paris on "The Muckraking Novel in Early 20th Century China: a sociological and literary analysis of Li Pao-chia's novel 'The Bureaucrats'" in Room 202 Galbraith Building.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshier supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

8 pm

Hillel's Movie Series is presenting "The Owl & The Pussycat" at Hill House. All welcome to attend. No charge.

TUESDAY

10:30 am

The East Asian Studies Committee of The International Studies Programme

presents a seminar by Professor Robert Ruhnman Professor of Chinese Literature, The Sorbonne, Paris on "Muckraking revisited: a study of Li Pao-chia's novel 'A Short History of Modern Times'" in Room 202 Galbraith Building.

3 pm

The African Studies Committee of the International Studies Programme presents a seminar by Professor Omar Jah of Abdallah Bayero College, Kano, Nigeria on "Al Hajj Umar: a 19th century Muslim thinker and revolutionary," in Room 225, Faculty of Library Sciences, Robarts Library.

4 pm

Faculty of Management Studies General Seminar Series presents "The Defeat of White Collar Unionism, The ACTE Case." Guest speaker, Mr. J. McGee, Consultant, Hickling Johnston and Co. 7th floor, 246 Bloor West.

5 pm

La Troupe Cafe-Theatre a la plaisir de presenter "La Vie Heureuse de Leopold Z" dans le sous-sous-sol de la bibliotheque Pratt, college Victoria, a 17 heures. Vous eles priés d'y assister — entree gratuite.

5:30 pm

Small informal gathering at the Newman Centre (found opposite Robarts Library at 89 St. George St.) to celebrate Mass and then continue together with supper. All welcome to drop in and join with us.

6 pm

A Hart House evening extraordinaire: Equinox. Concerts, films, dancing, art exhibitions, debate, tournaments, etc., all evening long, Tuesday, March 26. This spectacular event begins at 6 pm. Join us at Hart House.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshier supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7 pm

Intermediate Conversational Hebrew at Hill House.

Hillel's Guitar Workshop for beginners only at Hill House.

8 pm

Dramatic presentation of fantasy, suspense, horror in the Edgar Allan Poe genre by Montreal actor/writer, David Slabotsky. Free. Leaside Library, 165 McRae Drive.

Intermediate French Classes to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street. Conversational Hebrew for beginners only at Hill House.

Hillel's Guitar Workshop for advanced at Hill House.

8:30 pm

The Toronto Chamber Music Society presents an evening of chamber music for French horn, violin and piano. Featuring music by Beethoven, Brahms, Prokofiev and Buczynski. Admission is free.

WEDNESDAY

noon

Free Speech and Academic Freedom: A forum featuring history professors Michael Cross and Kenneth McNaught, U of T vice-president Jill Conway, civil liberties lawyer Clay Ruby and SGU president Ali Chalton. Discussion from the floor Convocation Hall. Sponsored by SAC, GSU.

Professor Jonathan Pearl, a professor of History at Scarborough College, will talk on Current Historical Research on European Witchcraft in the 16th and 17th Centuries in room H215.

4 pm

Students and professors of the graduate English department are welcome to a poetry reading of the GEA; New College, Room 2008. Poets, lunatics and lovers are equally invited.

4:10 pm

Latin American Studies Committee, International Studies Programme, University of Toronto presents a lecture by Professor Egon Schaden, Latin American-Residence at the University of Toronto on "The Image of the Brazilian Indian." This will take place in Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall, 100 St. George Street.

6:30 pm

Hillel's Koshier supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

7:30 pm

Films at OISE: "Play it Again Sam" with Woody Allen at 7:30 and "The Bank Dick" with W.C. Fields at 9:30; $1.25 at 7:30 or $1.00 at 9:30; 252 Bloor West.

THURSDAY

6:30 pm

Practice for the Recorder Club to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

Hillel's Koshier supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by today.

HART HOUSE

ART GALLERY - GROUP SHOW
VOTE FOR THE PICTURE YOU WOULD LIKE PURCHASED FOR THE HART HOUSE PERMANENT COLLECTION
GALLERY HOURS: - MONDAY, 11 AM - 9 PM.
TUESDAY TO SATURDAY, 11 AM - 5 PM.
SUNDAY, 2 - 5 PM.

NOON HOUR CLASSICAL CONCERT

YOON CHANG, violin
TUES, MAR. 26
MUSIC ROOM, 1 PM.

DEBATE
"RESOLVED THAT
BEHIND EVERY MEDIOCRE WOMAN IS A MAN"
HONORARY VISITOR: LAURA SABIA
TUES, MAR. 26
DEBATES ROOM, 8 PM.

EQUINOX IS COMING
ON TUES, MAR. 26
RESERVE THE WHOLE EVENING

HART HOUSE SQUASH CHAMPIONSHIP FINALS

COVENTRY CUP
NOVICE CHAMPIONSHIP
WOMEN'S CHAMPIONSHIP
TUES, MAR. 26 AT 6 PM ALL WELCOME

NOON HOUR JAZZ CONCERT

THE BOB ERLANDSON QUARTET
WEDS, MAR. 27
EAST COMMON ROOM, 12-2 PM.

LIBRARY EVENING

WITH MARSHALL McLUHAN
TUES, MAR. 26
LIBRARY 8 PM.
Limited number of tickets available from the Hall Porter

St. Michael's College and the Faculty of Medicine present the third in a series of three lectures on

"Science and Medicine: The Moral Dimension":

Genetic Screening and Human Values

by PROF. J.M. GUSTAVSON, B.D., Ph.D., Professor of Theological Ethics,
University of Chicago

8:00 p.m.

March 28

Medical Sciences Auditorium
Admission Free

Would You

- like entrée to a management career?
- like to take some more university courses?
- like to get a Master's degree?
- like to have some money too?

Then investigate the

CO-OP MBA

McMaster University's Faculty of Business now has a new option for students interested in obtaining an MBA degree in the CO-OP option; students alternate between four month periods of study and four month periods of relevant, paid work experience. The job opportunities are arranged by the Faculty of Business. Admission is open to those who have proved potential and commitment sufficient to complete a demanding program. Graduates of any discipline can apply. For information about a course that is both academically and financially satisfying, send us this coupon. Full and part-time programs are also offered.

TO: Assistant to the Dean
School of Business
McMaster University
Hamilton, Ontario
L8S 4M4

Please send me details about your MBA program
() Co-operative
() Full time
() Part time

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
Province _____
University attending _____
Degree expected _____
When? _____

Mortuari... et cetera

The Varsity breathes its last (for this year) with the issue of March 29. The advertising deadline for the last Varsity is noon, Tuesday, March 26. Deadline for the Here and Now column is 1:00 pm, Wednesday, March 27.

Mallette, Archer heckled for island stand

A packed house heckled and jeered Scarborough controller Karl Mallette Wednesday night as he tried to defend Metro council's decision to evict the residents of Toronto Islands on August 31.

The heavily pro-island audience at the St. Lawrence Centre debate also cat-called Ward 6 alderman Bill Archer who again argued in favor of evicting his own island constituents.

Archer and Mallette spent part of their time justifying their position by misquoting city and Metro figures about the islands.

At one point Archer claimed islanders only pay $50 per month in rent, but the city planning board's September report, which Archer helped put together, indicates the average rent is $103 per month plus taxes.

Archer also said usage of the islands is increasing, but Metro parks figures indicate the number of island ferry boat passengers, effectively the admission rate, has been level for two years.

Mallette fell into the same trap, pulling out various Metro planning reports trying to show sub-standard housing on Ward's Island would result in a high cost of upgrading the housing stock, plus the additional financial problem improving services such as sewers and street lights.

However the city planning board report indicates the vast majority of the houses can be upgraded to minimum standards for less than $5,000, and regardless of the cost, the money would come from the homeowners and not taxpayers.

The city report also indicates it would be cheaper to the taxpayers to provide the services for the existing housing stock than build new housing for the same number of people.

Archer is a member of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, one of three such private clubs on the island which take up a total of 33 acres of prime parkland.

The RCYC occupies the best slice of land adjacent to heavily-used Centre Island. Not once did Archer or Mallette suggest evicting the yacht clubs.

By comparison, the island residences take up 29 acres of what city planning report considers little used land in the eastern portion of the island complex.

The Queen City Yacht Club on Algonquin Island is slated to take over part of the land island residents use for housing after August. The club is to double its land-holding and still pay half the rent rate island residents pay.

After Mallette and Archer survived the crowd's heckling, Bill Mallette of the Toronto Island Residents Association presented a slide show of island life which Mallette refused to watch.

Ward 3 alderman Michael Goldrick, chairman of the mayor's task force on housing which is recommending preservation of existing housing stock, criticized Mallette for being inflexible on the island issue.

He pointed to Mallette's dramatic change of opinion to one of opposition to the Scarborough Expressway after Mallette became chairman of the Toronto Transit Commission.

Goldrick asked Mallette if he would change his island views if he became admiral of the island ferry fleet.

Goldrick said in light of the current housing shortage and escalating rent situation that destruction of the island homes would only serve to increase the housing shortage.

College library fate undecided

By CHRIS PROBERT

The fate of the New College library remains undecided after Tuesday's academic affairs committee meeting.

At the end of last year, Governing Council passed a resolution calling for the eventual removal of the book collections of University and New Colleges to the Sigmund Samuel Library.

The two colleges were to present their responses to the Council's move.

As yet, however, only New College has replied. UC is waiting for the report of president John Evans' task force on the relation of the colleges to the university.

New College offered two possible proposals. The first was to retain 2,000 reference books and an estimated 5,000 to 6,000 non-circulating volumes from the library's current collection of 25,000 volumes.

About 2,000 new books would be purchased to fill out the collection.

The second proposal was to send all of the present New College collection to Sigmund Samuel and purchase an entirely new collection, amounting to some 10,000 books.

The reason the second proposal was considered at all is the high cost of cataloging and decataloging books.

Removing only part of the present New College collection would mean more complicated cataloging procedures for the libraries involved.

It actually costs $3.50 to decatalogue a book, and $10.00 to catalogue one.

As one faculty committee member said: "Card have to be pulled out of five or six filing cabinets, and by someone who knows what he is doing. You can't rely on temporary help to do the job right."

If proposal two were adopted, New College plans a simple card-catalogue which would not be integrated with the university collection, to cut costs.

The academic affairs committee, finally decided to endorse proposal two, although with the proviso that if the U of T budget committee could not find the money to buy the new books, it would be content with proposal one.

This stand was condemned as "passing the buck" by student rep David Laughton, who wondered what the committee had been talking about for an hour if it was only going to issue a recommendation.

Laughton moved an amendment which would have removed proposal one from consideration, on the grounds that the university is better off buying new books than paying for cataloging.

The amendment was defeated.

New College at present offers a course oriented library to its students. The stress in its revamped library, regardless which proposal is finally accepted, will be on "general subject-oriented books".

SAC, GSU to hold free speech forum

Plans for a rally which proponents said would show student support for "free speech" fell apart early this week when the organizers refused to work with each other.

Meanwhile, the Students' Administrative Council is proceeding with plans for an alternate forum on academic freedom and free speech March 27.

Rally organizing began Sunday when several students approached the SAC executive to seek help with their idea of a rally. Executive members agreed to co-sponsor the meeting if they and the students could agree on suitable speakers.

The students were mostly students of political science professor Allan Bloom, one of the most vocal in claiming the disruption of Edward Banfield's lecture constituted a fundamental threat to academic freedom.

They demanded no speaker could appear the rally platform if he talked about other threats to "free speech" besides the Banfield disruption.

Their proposed speakers included history professors Michael Bliss and Desmond Morton who reacted to the Banfield incident by demanding strong disciplinary measures to ensure "free speech".

The SAC executive wanted speakers to include faculty members who would talk about the continuous lack of academic freedom within the faculty hierarchy.

The group of students refused to allow a representative from students councils or the U of T administration to speak and they agreed to only one faculty member acceptable to SAC.

The idea of SAC co-sponsorship was dropped.

But SAC agreed to rent Convocation Hall for the students and pay publicity costs.

On Monday morning some of the students issued a leaflet condemning U of T president John Evans, SAC and The Varsity for being equally complicit in a conspiracy against "free speech" on campus.

Other students who had approached SAC about the rally were disgusted with the leaflet, and amid confusion and disagreement the rally was cancelled.

SAC and the Graduate Students Union currently plan to hold a forum on free speech and academic freedom March 27 at noon in Convocation Hall.

Speakers will include history professors Michael Cross and Kenneth McNaught, U of T vice-president Jill Conway, civil liberties lawyer Clay Ruby and GSU president Alf Chaiton.

Hax use franchise

At 1 pm today the last Varg election of the year (promise, last one) takes place to elect the intrepid senior editorial positions to support our peerless new leader next year.

City editor, news editor, layout editor, photo editor, sports editor, review editor and features editor are all up for grabs.

All Varsity staffers are urged to attend to vote, "cause if you don't, Igor will elect himself to all positions and institute one-dog management.

College elections

Elections were held this week and last at most colleges. At Trinity, SAC representatives this year walked away with the top two positions as Morry Ewing won Head of College and Hilary Pearson won Head of St. Hilda's college.

Michael John Sabia (of debating fame) and Sally Couts were elected SAC reps. Ian Ross was elected Head of Arts, second in command at Trinity and Joanna Kidd was elected Head of Residents at St. Hilda's.

For the college council the heads already mentioned as well as six other students are elected to fill student seats. Elected were Dave Mills, Barbara Shenstone, Anne Britton, Jun Neilson and Nick Braithwaite from arts and science. Theo Ipena was elected from Divinity.

At Victoria, an unprecedented second term as president of Victoria University Students' Administrative Council (VUSAC) was won handily by Brian Gazley who beat Glenn Smith 264-122.

The only other VUSAC race was for services commissioner where Susan MacDonald rolled to an easy victory over Janet Isles, 115-144.

Acclamations at VUSAC included: productions chairman—David Dixon, university government commissioner—incumbent Kathryn Winegard, social activities commissioner—Charles Ramsey, VUSAC vice-president—Ross Gardner, finance commissioner—incumbent Michelle Harvey, education commissioner—Wayne McComb, and communications commissioner—Chris Humphrey.

Deep Throat 3 charges dismissed

Three U of T students charged with showing an obscene film October 12 beat the rap Wednesday when a preliminary hearing ended in dismissal of the charges due to insufficient evidence.

Taras Babiak (II-Med), Lawrence Weisbrod (UC SAC rep) and David Galbraith, SAC education commissioner, face no further legal action from the showing of Deep Throat at the Medical Sciences Auditorium.

For the purposes of the preliminary hearing, the defence admitted the film was obscene, but the defence won on two technicalities.

The court ruled none of the three could be proven within the rules of law that they had prior knowledge of the character of the film.

In addition for Galbraith and Weisbrod, the court ruled there was not sufficient evidence they had possession of the film.

Only Crown evidence was presented at the hearing.

Ironically, police evidence indicated police had ordered a showing of the film after they informed the accused an arrest was to be made.

Evidence by police showed they had first viewed what was the second showing of Deep Throat at the auditorium.

Following the showing, they informed the accused an arrest would be made, and evidence in court indicated the accused did not want to make a third scheduled screening.

However, police "directed the showing" of the film for a third time, because they were frightened there might be a riot by the 350 "excited students" if the film were not shown.

Banfield disruption defended by lawyer

By BOB BETTISON

Toronto lawyer Charles Roach told a packed audience last night the right of free speech had come in conflict with the right for all races to be treated equally during the Banfield disruption last week and as a result free speech must be cut off.

At a peaceful forum sponsored by the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) last night Roach told the audience of more than 150 the American professor should not have been allowed to speak because his theories and ideas violated the basis of society.

He said this is the right of all racial and ethnic groups to be safeguarded from racism and hate.

Roach said it was dishonest to allow Banfield to speak just to determine whether he is a racist, because his books are available to decide this.

Roach maintained there was no more fundamental principle in Canadian society and this is shown in the Bill of Rights, the Ontario Human Rights Code and the Anti Hate Literature Bill.

All these make it an offence to discriminate on the basis of race, sex, creed, or religious belief, he said.

"No man has the right to preach theories of slavery or genocide," he said. This breaks the basic social contract society is based on, said Roach.

Roach was supported by a survivor of Nazi Dachau concentration camp Remigio Pignin, who said social science should not be allowed to preach racism under the guise of free speech.

He said fascism and racism must be stopped before they have a chance to take hold as they did in Nazi Germany.

Pignin said much of modern social science has been used by people such as Banfield to justify poverty and racism.

John Grobovaz, editor of the Italian weekly, Il Giornale di Toronto, said he agreed with the SDS action in stopping Banfield. "I can't accept academic freedom when it interferes with other peoples' rights."

He said there was a conflict when Canadian governments support multiculturalism programs to help the Italian community but allow racism in the university with speakers such as Banfield and the alleged racist theories of Dr. Ian Hector.

Disrupted again

CHICAGO—For the second time in a week, members of Students for a Democratic Society have prevented controversial American urbanologist Edward Banfield from speaking on a college campus.

Late Wednesday afternoon about a dozen SDS members took over the small stage of the Oriental Institute at University of Chicago and after a scuffle with about 18 faculty members prevented Banfield from speaking.

SDS occupied the stage of the 200-seat auditorium for an hour and a half before the Banfield lecture was called off.

Banfield was a professor at University of Chicago between 1948 and 1959. He later became an urban advisor to US president Richard Nixon.

THE Varsity

TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors
Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Slotnick
Tom Walkom
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

Just as The Varsity is packing it up for the year, things got interesting on campus. Maybe that's an indication of something... Anyway, fellow travellers' tonies included: Gilda Oren, Don Cruickshank, Marina Strauss, Maurizio Ceccarelli, 'Citydesk' or bust! Bolton, Art Moses, Chris Probert, and Cetera.

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Daisons Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

Campbell Report may help solve disruptions

On Monday the internal affairs committee of the Governing Council will take up an item on its agenda called: "Security Mechanisms for the Preservation of free speech on campus: Resolution of the Executive Committee, March 14th, 1974."

Although the executive committee meets in closed session, one might suspect the internal affairs committee will bring forth legislation designed to appeal to last week's demands by conservative faculty members for the protection of (the vague terms) "freedom of speech" and "academic freedom."

Members of both the internal affairs committee and the Governing Council would be sorely negligent if they did not seriously consider the "Discipline and Demonstrations" section of the 1969 Presidential Advisory Committee on Disciplinary Procedures, otherwise known as the Campbell Report. Although the report is five years old, its principles are still relevant, especially when compared to the bastardized Code of Behavior.

The Presidential Advisory Committee on Disciplinary Procedures was a parity body with now-Scarborough principle D.R. Campbell as its chairman.

The report stands out as a sensible document to study at a time when most of the campus is over-reacting to the false issue of "freedom of speech."

Chapter VII of the report says in part: "On campus non-disruptive demonstrations need no justification. We believe that the university should actively accommodate such protest and protect demonstrators, forcibly if need be, from those who would interfere with their rights." The report then provides a range of examples of non-disruptive demonstrations.

"Disruptive demonstrations," the report states, "or protests on campus are those which block access to buildings or rooms, which create such noise or inconvenience as to hinder or prevent persons from working in the buildings, which prevent classes or meetings from taking place, or which involve the intimidation of students, teachers, speakers, or administrative personnel...With these disruptive activities there may also be threats of violence and destruction of facilities and property and the carrying out of these threats."

The SDS actions of last week, that is the disruption and intimidation of a speaker may fit the Campbell committee's definition, but the university community will not know until the administration creates a climate of openness in which witnesses to the "Banfield incident" can be heard.

SDS not guilty yet

Even if the SDS actions were proven to fit the Campbell committee's definition that same parity committee felt "it is important to realize that disruptions in universities are not simply due to a conspiracy of a small group of revolutionaries. At times small groups have attempted to halt the functioning of a university, but their actions have been successful only when combined with much wider discontent within the university."

Therefore, if some of the faculty were correct and Banfield should have been permitted to speak, this position would have gained the ascendancy within the university community and the SDS would have been discredited for its actions. On the other hand, if Banfield had not been welcomed by the university community (indeed, he was not invited by the university community, but by the American Studies Committee), the SDS would have generated support for their position of driving him from the campus without hearing him speak.

There would, therefore, appear to be little "reason" for the same faculty members' hysterical outbursts. The faculty comprise only one part of the university community—a minority. While they should not submit to the "tyranny of the majority" or, as some of them might see it, "mob rule", the faculty have to realize that they have no more right to demand a university president's resignation or the imposition of harsh penalties (as they did last week) than a student does. A faculty member is an equal with respect to discipline, not a superior.

The Campbell report felt that "all action, official and unofficial, must be directed to the resolution of conflict through non-violent means", and continued, "this applies to all members of the university." The committee's recommendations also presupposed "a university structure in which students and faculty are consulted or represented at all levels of operation."

The Campbell committee reported that "it is difficult to lay down procedures here because each situation has its own logic." It did, however, suggest some general principles.

The committee believed it is possible to distinguish two general types of disruptive demonstrations—those that are violent and destructive in character and those that are simply obstructive.

Disruptive demonstrations

"In disruptive demonstrations that endanger the safety of persons or destroy valuable property of the university or its members, there is no responsible way that the university can avoid quick and effective means to end such demonstrations. These means could include the requesting of the police to intervene, the seeking of court injunctions and the laying of appropriate charges in the regular courts."

There is no evidence to date that members of the SDS endangered the safety of anyone, unless threats and verbal intimidation (as yet unproven) could be considered under such a category. However, one woman has laid a common assault charge against a faculty member. If the administration were to have called in police to protect Banfield, does the faculty think Simcoe Hall should call in police to protect students from faculty? Are not faculty and students equal under the law?

The Campbell committee also agreed "any request in the name of the university for police intervention is the prerogative only of the chief executive officer, his delegate, or the representative governing body of the university. This prerogative should not be exercised without consultation, wherever possible, with a quorum of the principal governing body of the university. (The Campbell report also assumed a representative Governing Council.)

By this principle, faculty have no right whatever to exert pressure, and much less, make demands on the president of this university to discipline students. The faculty has a right to share in the decision-making by virtue of its representation on the "principal governing body", but that is as far as it can go.

The Campbell Report feels there should not be "any automatic or set procedures in responding to disruptive demonstrations that do not clearly endanger the safety of persons or do not destroy the valuable property of the university or its members."

However, if "such disruption occurs," Campbell believes, "several points should be considered basic."

First, since a given "disruptive demonstration may prove to be justified, negotiations concerning a demonstration should be addressed as much as possible to the substantive issues of the demonstrations and not just to the disruptiveness." In effect, this means negotiations over last week's disruption should involve the question of racism at this university.

The SDS has carried on a campaign

Academic racism poisons the mind.

against racism at this university since the beginning of the present academic year. Having met with rejection and disappointment at the Governing Council for its call to an investigation into racism at the university, the SDS must have felt the "existing channels" had been blocked and realized they would have to resort to other methods to raise the controversial issue. Many people, including the Varsity staff, have disagreed with the tactics of the SDS, but from their point of view there may not have been much choice.

SAC must deal with racism

The SAC-sponsored mass meeting next Wednesday must deal with the question of academic racism at this university. It is the root cause of the disruption and the reason why "freedom of speech" or "academic freedom" was challenged. Up to this point SAC has not become involved with the issue; it now has to face it head on.

The Campbell report also argues, however, that "the university cannot fulfill its obligations if it allows a minority of its members to disrupt repeatedly or for a prolonged period of time its essential educational functions. The university must consider the rights of the majority in these situations." There is nothing to indicate that the SDS "disrupted repeatedly or for a prolonged period of time" the functions of this university. Banfield had already spoken on a couple of occasions before the SDS prevented him from mounting the platform.

Third, the committee felt "when a demonstration is directed against an individual or group, the persons concerned should be given the opportunity to participate in all deliberations." Although initial investigations and interviews have been carried out concerning last week's incident, neither Banfield or the SDS have been asked to participate, to the best of our knowledge, in this initial stage. However, faculty members have continuously had access to the administration's offices in the past week.

The report also states "Negotiations on behalf of the university should be conducted by representatives of the democratically-constituted governing body (in this case the undemocratically-constituted Governing Council is implied)". This consultation has also not occurred in this incident.

Fourth, the Campbell report believes that "if a demonstration cannot be resolved by such negotiations (and this incident is not likely to be resolved), the use of injunctions from a regular (that is, Canadian) court might be considered; or it might be feasible to hold a referendum on the issues involved in the demonstration." The SAC mass meeting next Thursday will provide for a test of a "referendum-of-sorts" that neither faculty nor administration would accede to.

Finally, the report says "a resort to force by the university should occur only after other reasonable alternatives have failed. The decision to use force should be made by the democratically-constituted governing body (again, the undemocratically constituted Governing Council.)"

These principles, taken in their entirety could serve as a modus operandi for dealing with demonstrations of the kind witnessed last week. However, the Governing Council would have to be replaced by a parity body (as outlined in the procedure above) for the disciplinary measures to have any legitimacy.

Although this last step is not likely to occur, the Campbell report can be used as a basis for settling disruptive demonstrations on the U of T campus.

Question is who has access

Our leader Bill Nelson of the faculty association has sounded the rallying cry. All loyal professors rally round and stomp on SDS! "Free speech" will be a good chant to stomp by. And the proof that SDS deserves any punishment that President Evans can be stamped into meeting out? That Professor Banfield is a distinguished scholar, author of widely read books, who has taught at Harvard (ooh-ah) and the University of Chicago (ooh-ah).

The cry is confused. Not that free speech is unimportant. It is an important issue (at least half as important as racism), and one on which CPL and SDS have often seemed to me wrong. I have disputed it with them many times in the past years, sometimes bitterly. But Professor Nelson's invocation of the libertarian slogan is so misdirected as to turn it into its opposite.

SDS isn't about to silence Banfield. Professor Banfield's ideas are widely read and widely taught, as SDS was informing us before Bill Nelson did. The effect of the SDS confrontation, like that of the teaching on racism, will be to stimulate more people to read Banfield, not less—but to read him more critically. All SDS has the power to do is wage ideological struggle against him, and that is what they have been doing. Had they understood this better, they might have chosen better ways. Ideological struggle should be waged ideologically. In particular, they might have avoided ways (such as the preventing of Wednesday's meeting) which carried the appearance of muzzling Banfield.

But the reality of muzzling Banfield was absent. Real tyrants, Bill, really muzzle dissent. Fighting them is real defence of free speech. But it also doesn't come so cheap. Real tyrants have the guns on their side—and the laws. You cry for us to close ranks as if to resist an oppressor, but what you are actually demanding is quite different: the calling down of state power upon the perpetrators of a fairly small non-violent demonstration. Shame!

But it's the same principle, perhaps? SDS's demand to "ban Banfield" is so heinous that it must be resisted long before the university considers granting it? Let's see.

Even were that rhetorical goal to be achieved, in what would the "banning" of Banfield consist? In different choices being made of speakers to invite to campus: In Banfield's joining the huge majority of humanity who do not receive such invitations. To a libertarian, such a ban would be an extraordinary step, but suppose for a moment that Charles Roach and John Philpot succeeded in persuading us—that is, the university community as a whole—that in this extraordinary case it was appropriate. The most extraordinary thing about such a decision would be that it would have been taken by the university community!

Decisions as to who gets access to our media do get made anyway, you know. Some get the platform and the microphone, the rest of the poor sobs are left to holler from the floor as best they can. There are various ways to get the platform in our society—mostly, by having the money and power to own or rent the media, or by saying what pleases those who do. At the university, there are committees which decide who shall address one occasion after another, from Convocation to a departmental seminar. They decide sometimes well, sometimes not so well, but rarely representatively. It is not an attack on academic freedom to criticize their decisions—quite the reverse.

In 1965, eight professors addressed to the Senate a protest against the invitation to Adlai Stevenson to address Convocation at a time when his principal public activity was defending in the UN the US interventions in Viet Nam and the Dominican Republic. Two of the eight professors were Bill Nelson and myself. We wanted, not that Stevenson be prevented from telling his lies in the UN (that was beyond our power in any case and was not at issue), but that the university community make a declaration: that it declare its revulsion at Stevenson's lies and the policy they defended; that it withdraw the honorary legitimization which an elite committee had given Stevenson. The Globe and Mail editorialists attacked us as they now attack SDS—more sharply, and in much the same vein. Then, they didn't want mere rank-and-file professors challenging invitations issued by duly designated bodies; now, they and Bill Nelson don't want mere students challenging invitations issued by duly designated bodies.

This is the heart of my objection to the Nelson statement. Not his fine words for free speech. Would that he could work up such passion on behalf of (say) the right of some dissident now excluded from universities to teach here. But the fact that his passion is directed only to defending free speech through existing channels. The right of those who have had access to our podium all along to continue (while our entrenched prestige-bestowing organs continue to anoint them) to occupy the podium; the duty of the students, awed by their legitimate prestige to SIT AND TAKE IT.

"Free speech" is still a good cause. I hate to see those words, in Bill Nelson's tract, keep such authoritarian company.

Chandler Davis
Professor of mathematics

HSU says profs outdo SDS

At Tuesday's general meeting of the History Students Union the following position was adopted:

The History Student's Union supports the principle of freedom of speech in the university community. We believe that even proponents of controversial views should be heard. We therefore view with great repugnance the provocative and unwarranted actions of the CPL-SDS clique. These people denied sincere, serious opponents of Professor Banfield's views an opportunity to debate these views in an open forum.

Even more deplorable, however, is the current atmosphere of hysteria and vigilantism that is being assiduously cultivated by certain members of the faculty. At last Friday's History department meeting a veritable Blüskrieg was launched which succeeded in temporarily limiting the representation of history students at that meeting. This was no doubt conceived as an attempt to stifle dissenting voices and votes when the resolution in support of the position taken by the council of the faculty association was read. Despite this, and despite the fact that a standing vote was required in order to further intimidate those present, dissenting voices and votes were heard. So much for the champions of democracy within the history department.

More ominous still is the campaign being waged by some elements in the faculty and administration to use the furor created by an infinitesimal and unrepresentative cabal to expedite the untimely approval of the discipline code. We feel that students must rally in defence of their interests and reject the attempted railroad of the discipline code without sufficient modification. If level-headedness and firmness do not prevail, students may be saddled with the stultifying effects of a draconian discipline code for years to come.

Wanda Stankiewicz
president

Faculty reformers commend Evans

With regard to the Banfield affair, there are four interwoven issues at stake—racism, free speech, right of protest, and discipline.

1. Racism: We feel that racism is a menace, and that those who espouse this or a similar view should be subject to public challenge. Those in the university inviting scholars who hold such views to speak are under a moral obligation to provide such a forum, in addition to whatever academic addresses, lectures, etc. are being given by that scholar. The part of the SDS in arranging a teaching on racism was commendable. We hold that some form of protest might have been set up at Professor Banfield's lecture, but that it is intolerable that he was not permitted to speak and state his views.

2. Free Speech: The doctrine of free speech for genuine scholars (provided they do not exceed the legal restrictions on sedition or hate-propaganda) is at the very foundation of academic freedom. This principle has been violated in the past—we mention the shouting down of Mr. Kerr and the Western Guard's breaking up of Mr. Kunstler's address as two examples. For the latter we recall that the university's response was to attempt to remove the lecturer from campus. As intolerable as violations of free speech are, they have not in the past generated ultimata from concerned campus bodies, but the situation was dealt with in its perspective, in each case.

3. Right of protest: We recognize the right and moral obligation of people to protest a speech by any person holding morally repugnant views. However, to violate free speech in this protest is both a legally and morally culpable act. Those who refused to allow Professor Banfield to speak must suffer the legal consequences of their action.

4. Discipline: The first response of those who have been threatened by an act violating their rights is to demand restrictive and repressive legislation to deal with the crime. On further consideration, it is usually realized that a more measured response is desirable and that overreaction is dangerous. We commend President Evans for his measured response to this matter.

We believe that those persons responsible for the disruption should be tried by a representative university body which will weigh evidence and the circumstances surrounding the act, and determine innocence, guilt and punishment of the guilty. We do not feel that the archaic Caput is such a body. It does not have reasonable representation from all concerned constituents of the university. We also feel that the present circumstances are not appropriate for the imposition of a permanent replacement. We therefore request the president of the university, the president of SAC and the president of the GSU to begin negotiations immediately and to come to a decision before the end of term on a more representative body to which Caput will delegate its disciplinary powers.

E. Mendelsohn,
Chairman

E. Barbeau,
T. Gardner,

J. Prentice
for the Steering Committee of the Faculty Reform Caucus

Suddenly they're for free speech

The current righteous concern for "free speech" among certain members of the U of T faculty who are touching, were it not so hypocritical.

The actions of the so-called SDS in physically preventing Edward Banfield from speaking March 13, repugnant though they were, hardly constitute the first threat to free speech and academic freedom on this campus.

Yet on so many other such occasions the faculty have been silent. In the spring of 1971 speeches by Québec labor leader Michel Chartrand and Montreal lawyer Robert Lemieux in Convocation Hall were disrupted by a mass attack from members of the right-wing Edmund Burke Society.

The administration responded with a regulation requiring all sponsoring groups to pay for any damage to university property caused during their meetings, regardless of cause. The faculty association was silent about this most serious impediment to free speech and freedom of assembly. Student organizations stood alone in challenging this regulation.

(It is interesting to note that the leader of the Burkers at the time, F. Paul-Fromm, wrote a letter in last Monday's Globe and Mail, condemning the SDS disruption in similar terms to those used by a group of faculty leaders in a letter appearing below his.)

This winter a popular professor in the Victoria College French department was fired. Students began organizing for a say in hiring and firing decisions to prevent similar occurrences.

They were told by their learned faculty that if they kept quiet about the firing, they stood a good chance of gaining seats on the department hiring and firing committee.

Just before a crucial meeting of the department an article about the firing appeared in the Varsity, and the faculty attacked students for speaking out. The faculty then refused to permit students on the staffing committee and made clear that if the students hadn't spoken out they would have fared differently. Where was the faculty association during that blackmail attempt against free speech?

Students organizing this year for representation on staffing committees quickly found that faculty members are reluctant to speak about how staffing decisions are made.

Several profs, either just eligible for tenure or recently denied tenure pending appeal, actually peered down corridors near their offices and shut normally open doors before they would utter a word on the subject to inquiring students.

Before faculty members in history and economics at this university holler about "academic freedom", they ought to ask themselves why certain respected schools of thought in their disciplines find no place in their course offerings here.

Genuine and absolute free speech and academic freedom have never existed on this campus. As the masses of faculty prepare to gather for the unusual rites of a general faculty meeting next Tuesday, they ought to probe their consciences as intellectual leaders and figure out whether their current righteous indignation is consistent with their past record.

We can only hope that John Evans isn't humiliated into yielding to their outrageous demands.

Art Moses
UC '72

Inviting Banfield was an outrage

As members of the teaching staff of the University of Toronto, we are alarmed at the position taken by the administration and the faculty association concerning the visit of Edward Banfield to this university. It is an outrage that the American Studies Committee invited Banfield to talk about his views to staff, students, and members of the Toronto public. This university could not exist without the labor and taxes of the large population of immigrants in Canada. Among the workers at the University of Toronto, immigrants do the dirtiest and hardest work, and are the worst paid for it. Banfield's spurious "academic" work constitutes a direct attack of blacks, Italians, and all working people.

In The Moral Basis of a Backward Society, Banfield writes that southern Italians are poor because of their culture—their laziness, their "amoral familism". Dr. Ian Hector of the Medical School puts Banfield's ideas into practice by accusing Italian workers from the same region about which Banfield writes of being "culturally predisposed" to "play a sick role". The result of this type of diagnosis is that there are thousands of fully disabled immigrant workers in Toronto receiving starvation level pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board. Banfield writes that the lower class in America, which is mostly black, lives living in slums. Banfield calls for benign neglect, doing nothing to improve social conditions since it is the culture and possibly the genes of the ghetto blacks which hold them in an inferior position in American society. His recommendations include cutting the minimum wage, placing the "incompetent" in closely supervised housing projects, and increasing police repression in the ghetto by giving policemen the right to arrest on "probable cause." As Chairman of the Presidential Task Force on Model Cities, and the Presidential Task Force on Urban Affairs, and as a member of the Research Advisory Board of the Council for Economic Development, he has taken steps to insure implementation of his recommendations.

During his visit to Toronto, Banfield demonstrated his unwillingness to defend his views. He refused to debate on or even to give an interview to the CBC program As It Happens. On the morning of March 12, in the Croft Chapter House, he evaded questions from the audience, and denied any responsibility for decisions made by the Nixon administration. The doubts of his critics were later fully corroborated when Banfield told reporters at the airport, "I don't feel called upon to explain my views." (Toronto Star, March 14, 1974, the Globe and Mail, March 15, 1974.) It is a serious abrogation of responsibility if an academic, who also works as a public servant, feels no obligation to submit his work to public scrutiny.

It is no wonder that more than 100 demonstrators—students from all ethnic groups, black workers, injured Italian workers, one of whom is a veteran of Dachau, and white workers, prevented Banfield from speaking. It is no surprise to us that the two largest Italian newspapers, Il Giornale di Toronto (March 14) and Il Corriere Canadese (March 15), and the National Black Coalition condemned Banfield's visit to the University of Toronto.

We call upon the University of Toronto not to victimize those men and women who prevented Banfield from speaking on Wednesday afternoon, but, instead, to censure the members of the American Studies Committee who invited him to speak here.

In the future, the university should pay full attention to complaints of racism, and do something to stop racism instead of attacking those who protest against it.

Professor J.D. Kaye,
Centre for Linguistic Studies,
Professor Paul Puritt,
Anthropology,
Susan Hurlich,
Teaching assistant,
Anthropology,
Professor M.S. Srivastava,
Mathematics,
Professor S. K. Sinha,
Mathematics,
Dr. R. Jhu,
Mathematics,
Vic Svacek,
Teaching Assistant,
Political Economy,
Professor D. Goldstick,
Philosophy

Free speech used as smokescreen

On the 12th and 13th of this month a speaker from the University of Pennsylvania invited by the American Studies Committee presented a series of lectures here at the U of T. On the 12th, Dr. Banfield, a former chairman of a presidential committee for urban planning, presented a lecture on the applications of the social sciences. During the speech there was a considerable amount of heckling by members of the audience with cries for Banfield to explain his books and "supposedly racist theories."

On the conclusion of his lecture, and questioning period Dr. Banfield and some of the faculty who are on the ASC prepared to leave. At this point some members of the audience encircled Banfield and proceeded to yell in his ear certain derogatory messages. Upset by these ill-mannered students, members of the faculty immaturity and without foresight physically hit these students.

As readers of the Varsity well know, these faculty members were later charged with assault.

On the 13th Banfield was again to speak. Although I was not present at this second lecture, it is to my understanding that the SDS with an equal lack of foresight and immaturity stopped Dr. Banfield from speaking by preventing him from approaching the lectern. It was at this point supposedly that all hell broke loose, the faculty members on the ASC stormed President Evan's office demanding that Caput be convened to punish the students, an emergency meeting of the Governing Council was announced for the following day, and SAC that evening made an offer later turned down to hold a rally of students to discuss the situation.

Over the years it had always been the faculty who believed that one could effectively and peacefully demonstrate by means of sharp criticism of speakers. Yet on the 12th of this month it was the faculty members on the ASC who were so upset by this as to bring violence onto the campus after so many years. These same faculty claim that in the interests of academic freedom the admittedly immature members of SDS should be punished by the Caput or the courts.

Cries for academic freedom, sound strange to me, from the same faculty members who refused to pass a resolution protesting the banishment of academic freedom in the universities in Chile after the coup! Indeed, Principal Russel of Innis College said at the time, in a speech at Convocation Hall, that he hopes that his academic freedom never depends on the U of T Faculty Association.

Earlier this week a Committee for Free Speech, consisting mainly of students who study under the same professors who demanded that Dr. Evans act immediately and without sufficient information to punish the SDS, asked SAC for money to sponsor a rally.

This so called "Committee for Free Speech" refused, however, to allow Dr. Evans, SAC, which granted the funds for the rally, SDS or any one else to speak, other than those hand-chosen by the "free speech" committee. They also refused to allow speakers to discuss any other aspect of university life, where free speech is prevented, except for the Banfield incident.

So SDS was wrong. Sure! But let's not use that as a smoke-screen to avoid some other facts which are equally reprehensible.

Why did the American Studies committee invite a speaker so certain to elicit protest? Perhaps because, knowing what would result, they felt it would be a good chance to back President Evans against the wall thereby gaining more strength, in a long-term sense to the faculty. They could use this strength, not merely to ram down the discipline code, but to dampen the legitimate attempts of thousands of students for parity, higher quality teaching, etc.

Normally the conservative faculty can muster little support for their repressive policies. But how many faculty, or even students, will oppose them when they use the issue of free speech as the nucleus of their effort. The U of T Faculty Association's record speaks to how unconcerned they really are with 'free speech' (witness the Chile resolution, and untenured faculty not getting tenure if they have unpopular views). Beyond questioning their motivations, I might further question the American Studies Committee's degree of academic integrity in inviting a speaker, the scientific merit of whose work is subject to such question.

Brian Gage
Vic II

'Freedom' can't justify slander

On Friday March 8, a large number of students and professors from the University of Toronto and members of the community at large attended a teach-in against racism. The overwhelming opinion of the more than 1,000 present at the afternoon session was that "academic racism" must be stopped.

People like Bernstein, Shockley, Banfield, Hector, etc. - all of whom hold theories victimizing one group or another on the basis of race or nationality - have no place in the university (or any other) community.

In spite of this mounting anti-racist campaign, the U of T proceeded to bring Professor Banfield to the campus to speak on the campus on March 12.

This was the cause of what is now called the "Banfield incident". Students and working people from the community - many of whom were black or Italian and are therefore directly affected by Banfield's theories - decided that this man ought not to be given a platform.

Academic freedom does not give license to slander. Racism - which is slander of whole groups of people - should not hide behind the veil of academic freedom. Particularly in a cosmopolitan city like Toronto, where people of all nationalities - Canadian, Greek, Portuguese, West Indian, Italian and many, many others - live and work side by side are such racist ideas totally out of place. We deplore the actions of U of T in bringing this man to speak.

Arguments like - "let him have his say and debate him" or "the university is meant to promote an exchange of ideas" fall short. Racism is not debatable. Notions like "blacks live in slums because they like to" or "Italians are poor because of lack of morals" should not be dignified by so much as a rebuttal.

One would think that the experience of the rise of Nazism, which was built on similar "racial theories" debated and discussed by "scholars" in the universities, would have laid to rest this thinking once and for all.

Banfield's only defense of his theories was that he was talking about "class" not "race" although he explicitly says that "the lower classes in the US are predominantly black". Either way, his comments are a slight on all working class people - racism can only serve to divide us up and allow one group to be set against another.

These views are voiced by a representative group of workers within the CSAO, a union incidentally comprising members of numerous ethnic groups in the Toronto area.

We urge, therefore, that in the future both the University of Toronto and the president of the university initially examine the repercussions which might occur when speakers are invited who are known to flagrantly distort the real issues by the use of racism. We urge that the administration take a firmer stand against academic racism in general.

We also feel that the students involved in the incident were expressing the opinions of the community at large and, therefore, to victimize or penalize them in any way would be a gross injustice.

J. Kestle
P. Cook
D. Cowan
P. Davison
O. El Hindy
J. Rodegar
N.M. Sergio-Castelveter

A Bliss-ful rejoinder

May I have space to defend myself against the various attacks made on me in the March 20 Varsity? There seem to be three issues raised about my present and past behaviour.

1. My stand on the War Measures Act in October 1970. Yes, I supported the imposition of the War Measures Act - expressing that support, incidentally, in an open forum along with several opponents of the Act. I did accuse the government of under-reacting to earlier evidence of terrorism in Quebec, but said that that was then a wise under-reaction. When the Varsity misquoted me the next day in the silliest possible way I very stupidly didn't bother complaining. Perhaps I was wrong to support the use of the War Measures Act; I believe the issue is still debatable. I find it hard to believe that the situation in which the War Measures Act was imposed is comparable with that in which Edward Banfield was not permitted to speak on our campus.

2. Cancelling History 262 on March 14 to read a statement. The class was formally cancelled, and I explained that a lecture would be dropped from the schedule containing material on which students would not be examined. Neither Mr. Carfagnini or anyone else in the class raised any objection to this procedure; several students left, as they'd been invited to do since there was no class. I read my statement and left, 20 minutes before the end of the hour. Presumably Mr. Carfagnini or anyone else then had the floor to criticize, discuss, attack, refute, or say anything they liked. I had said that I would be available in my office for discussion of any of the issues; three students came in. When I held the next 262 class on March 19 no one during or after the class raised any questions about the propriety of cancelling the earlier class, my views, or anything else. My cancellation of the class did not deny the 262 students any important course content, nor did it deny Mr. Carfagnini his equal right to free speech.

I did not, as the Varsity claims, refuse to teach classes until free speech is enforced.

3. The history department meeting of March 15. I asked that the constitutional position of the two undergraduates claiming, for the first time this year, to represent the History Students Union be considered. When it was decided that they did represent the HSU, I made no objection. After the vote I observed that there was a direct relation between the department's failure to receive unanimity and our constitutional confusion about student representation. I did not criticize anyone personally or by name.

Although it is unlikely that anything will stop the attempt to smear me as a right-wing "hard-liner", I should like it recorded that on March 19 (before being attacked in the Varsity) I wrote to the vice-provost urging that the administration "take the necessary steps to protect SDS's right to speak freely without disruption" at its forum scheduled for March 21.

Michael Bliss,
Assistant Professor,
Department of History

Bloom and Berns a real alternative

This letter is a response, of sorts, to your attacks on Professors Bloom and Berns in the March 20th Varsity.

Peter Busby
Trin III

ORDER YOUR 1973-74 VARSITY BOUND VOLUME NOW!
Only $18.00 for a year's worth of memories.
WRITE THE VARSITY, 91 ST. GEORGE ST.

You don't blow an extraordinary idea on an ordinary shoe.

Sport Root in leather
(New Earth); suede
(Sahara) $33.00

Open Root in leather (New Earth, White); suede
(Sahara, Blue) $23.50

By now you're probably aware that Roots are not like other kinds of footwear. The heel is lower to give you the natural kind of walk you'd get by going barefoot in sand. The arch is supported, so if you spend much time on your feet you'll now spend it in much greater comfort. The rocker sole helps spring you off on each footstep, so walking becomes a little less work than it ever was before.

But a big part of Roots' success lies in not how they're made, but how well. Only the finest grade Canadian hides are selected. These are hand-crafted into Roots, simply because, for much of our production, the most efficient machine is still the human hand. This is why, of all the reasons we could give you for trying Roots, none would fit quite so well as the shoe itself.

1052 Yonge Street
(Opposite Rosedale Subway Station)

Heap calls on public to fight lead pollution

Despite a court move by Canada Metal Co. Ltd. to prevent Ward 6 alderman Dan Heap from acting against alleged lead pollution from the company's Toronto plant, Heap is planning to fight back outside the courts.

In a letter to his constituents, Heap calls for "a great citizens' campaign in Toronto to move both the city and the province to take decisive action soon and let the courts go on at their own work at their own pace."

In a call for volunteers to help fight Canada Metal and all the other urban problems aldermen are called on to deal with, Heap says:

"All over North America people are fighting to make lead refiners modernize and protect the health of employees, residents and children.

"Toronto is in the front line of that fight. It's worth banding together to defend our city."

Heap is one of the three city board of health members the lead smelting company is trying to prevent from acting against the company's lead emissions.

While the board itself is defended by lawyers supplied by city council, Heap must defend himself personally and has set up a defence fund to help defray the cost.

Heap and the health board are only the latest in a series of organizations and individuals Canada Metal and Toronto Refiners and Smelters are trying to muzzle by court actions.

So far the board has refused to knuckle under to pressure and has hired three high-powered American experts on lead pollution who recommended the board begin an "aggressive program" to cut back lead pollution from three unnamed smelters in Toronto.

Dr. Bertram Carnow of the University of Illinois School of Public Health told the board "an abnormal number" of children living near the three Toronto plants have high lead levels in their blood.

He said existing data from the provincial government show the children's lead blood level is due to the plants and not from "the minor contributions in comparison" from automobile exhaust.

While the board did not reveal the firms' names, provincial data supplied to the City of Toronto Planning Board indicate three sources of lead pollution in the city are: Canada Metal Co. Ltd., Toronto Refiners and Smelters Co. Ltd., and Prestolite Batteries Ltd.

The reason the board was not given the names of the firms may be because the first two firms above have launched a legal action against the board hoping to prevent the board from taking any action against the firms for pollution while three board members sit on the board.

Sometime next week, the board is expecting a final report from Carnow and his two associates from the Illinois Institute of Environmental Quality, Dr. Richard Waddem and Dr. Paul Levy.

That will put the board within two weeks of a court hearing in which Canada Metal and Toronto Refiners will seek to paralyze the board from acting so long as Alderman Anne Johnston—board chairwoman, Heap and Dr. David Parkinson sit on the board.

Claiming the danger of lead pollution is highest in small children the Carnow team said any blood reading of 30 micrograms per 100 millilitres of blood or higher in children under five-years-old "should be or concern" because with higher readings "physiological abnormalities begin to occur."

In that five-and-under age group the Carnow team said at one of the plants 80 per cent of the children living within 500 feet of the plant had readings of 30 or more, with the figure tapering off to no children with the high reading living 1,000 feet or more away.

At the second plant, it was a similar story for the children.

About 60 per cent living within 500 feet had levels of 30 or higher tapering off to 30 per cent with the 30 reading, but that figure remained constant up to 2,500 feet away from the lead smelting plant.

The action by Canada Metal and Toronto Refiners against the board and three of its members is beginning to shape up into a David versus Goliath match.

Canada Metal is partially owned by Cominco of Vancouver, a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway—not exactly small-time stuff.

On the other hand, board chairwoman Johnston says there is no provision for her to have her legal bill picked up by the board—which does not have the money anyway—nor does the board have the protection of "privilege" enjoyed by provincial and federal Parliaments whose members cannot be sued for anything said or done in the Parliament.

However, Toronto mayor David Crombie has recommended to city council and Queen's Park that the city and province pick up the board's legal costs.

The Varsity—Mike Cowie

These kids live across the street from the Canada Metal plant.

WED., APRIL 10
Massey Hall at 8:30 p.m.
Maria PELLEGRINI
Dazzling Soprano Star
Royal Opera House, Covent Garden
In Joint Recital With
Louis QUILICO
Leading Baritone, Metropolitan Opera
MAIL ORDERS only:
$6.50 $5.50 $4.50 $3.00
Make cheques payable to Massey Hall,
178 Victoria St. and enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope

come
HONKY TONK
with
VINCE TROY
Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!!
HOUSE OF LANCASTER
147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0615

Larry's
Hideaway Motel
121 Carlton at Jarvis
THIS WEEK
STAR
Mar. 22, 23
NEXT BIG ATTRACTION
Mornington Drive
Mar. 25-28

MARX BROS.
* W.C. Fields & Mae West
1. MONKEY BUSINESS
2. MY LITTLE CHICADEE
3. DUCK SOUP
Fri. Mar. 22 — 7:30 p.m. — Sat. Mar. 23 — 7:30 p.m.
Rm. 3153 Medical Science Bldg. U of T
$2.25 all 3 films
1.50 last 2 films
1.00 last film

Complete Educational Research Service
Termpapers Unlimited of Toronto
752A Yonge Street
Toronto 5, Ontario
(416) 964-7328
Hours: 10:30 - 5:00 (Mon.-Fri.)
10:30 - 4:00 (Sat.)

Gay group claims bias at OISE

A gay activist group denied use of a room in OISE Wednesday night for a lecture is claiming "discrimination" while OISE is claiming a mix-up in procedure in room rentals.

In a statement, the Gay Alliance Toward Equality (GATE) claims OISE has "sabotaged Jean Le Deriff's visit to Toronto, and they have tried to stifle the gay liberation movement."

Deriff, author of Homosexual? Et Pourquoi Pas! (Homosexual? And Why Not!) and Homo Libre (Free Homosexuals), cancelled his flight from Montreal Tuesday night after learning his lecture at OISE could not take place because OISE had cancelled the room reservation.

Frank Quinlan, acting press officer at OISE, claims the room cancellation was due to an incorrect booking procedure used by GATE to reserve the room.

He said if the procedure had been followed, there would have been no problems. Yet he admitted the rules for a group to rent an OISE room for a lecture are not in writing.

GATE, however, charges OISE with "cowardice, bureaucracy and rank bigotry" in the last minute cancellation.

A GATE spokesman said the group will book a room for April 17 at OISE and invite Deriff again.

According to Quinlan, the problem began Monday when OISE officials realized the room booking had been done by a non-academic staff person at OISE but had been listed as an academic booking.

Events at OISE sponsored by an OISE academic department get the room free, Quinlan said. However since the GATE lecture was not sponsored by an academic department but was listed as academic, it was cancelled.

Quinlan said the error in booking should have been caught earlier than Monday since the booking was made two to three weeks ago. However he had no explanation as to why it took so long to spot the mistake.

GATE says it found out about the cancellation late Tuesday and by the time GATE representatives arrived at OISE to offer to pay for a room rental at $7 per hour they were told the person in charge of rentals had left and they would have to come back Wednesday with "proof".

Quinlan said in the last year a few groups have been turned down because they were unable to establish their non-profit status. He said a copy of a group's constitution usually fulfilled that requirement.

TERMPAPERS
We Research All Subjects
High Quality
Fast Service
Very Reasonable Rates
Call:
QUALITY RESEARCH
653-3693
Weekdays — 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
Saturdays — 6 p.m. - 5 p.m.

Funny, you don't look like a priest.

Most of the time, we don't. Our work takes us deep into prisons and neighbourhood bars and wretched homes (both rich and poor). The black cloth might make the people we talk to feel awkward. Life is awkward enough for the con, the suburban boozier, the hooker, the just plain miserable.

Those are our people. We try to help them.

Come help us help others to help themselves. You'll need intelligence, empathy, a tough and gentle spirit. A sense of humour. And to stand on, a rock-like faith in Christ.

Don't be surprised that the Redemptorists don't always look like priests. A fresh wind has blown through the corridors of the Church. The changes are many and all to the good. It's an extraordinary life for the right man.

Think about it. Then, if you'd like to talk, write or call us.

THE REDEMPTORIST PRIESTS

Gerry Pettipas, C.S.S.R.
426 St. Germain Avenue, Toronto
M5M 1W7.
(416) 466-9265

YOUR ESSAYS CAN WIN YOU $$$

ESSAY CONTEST: $100 CASH PRIZE for the best essay in EACH of the following categories: Humanities; Social Sciences; Science. $50 cash to runner up in each category plus many $10 honourable mention prizes. No restrictions on subject matter, length, number of essays submitted in any category. Essays will be judged on originality, quality of writing and research and must be typed with footnotes & bibliography. TO ENTER: send essays, together with a 5-line content summary to Essay Services, 57 Spadina Ave., Suite 105, Toronto, Ont. We will acknowledge receipt of your essay(s) and refund postal expenses over $1.00. Contest expires June 30, 1974. All entries become the property of Essay Services.

Queen's Park traffic lights work for cars

Finally the traffic lights at the north end of Queen's Park Crescent have been installed, but if the pedestrian is wondering just why those lights change at the weirdest intervals, rest assured there is a reason.

While the university pressed to have the light installed for the pedestrians' safety, the lights flash not for the walker but for the gas guzzlers.

Metro traffic director F.J. Sansom, in a letter to Ward 6 alderman William Archer, says the lights are timed to "produce a smooth flow—as far as possible—for the majority of road users", but he does not mention the lowly student for whom the lights were supposed to be intended.

To add confusion to what might otherwise be clarity, Sansom explains in detail what the lights are designed to do:

"For example, during the morning rush hour period, the southbound vehicular flow would be able to proceed through the Avenue Road-Bloor Street intersection and the Queens' Park-Queens Park Crescent traffic signals without stopping.

"Also, the northbound vehicular flow during this period would be able to proceed north from Wellesley Street through the traffic signals at Victoria College, Queens Park-Queens Park Crescent and from there through the traffic signals at Hoskin Avenue and Trinity College."

After surviving that glut of morning hour traffic, the newly-installed lights are then to revert to a different timing scheme for the middle-of-the-day traffic doldrums.

Once again, Sansom explains:

"During the off-peak period, the traffic signals at Bloor Street-Avenue Road, Queens Park-Queens Park Crescent, Queens Park Crescent-Victoria College and Hoskin Avenue-Trinity College would be co-ordinated to provide a northbound and southbound vehicular progression."

Of course, the evening rush hour is something else again, and Sansom did not fail to obscure what the traffic lights are to do then.

"Because of the oversaturated traffic conditions at the Avenue Road-Bloor Street intersection during the evening rush hour period, this signal has to be removed from the area signals to the south."

Just how one removes a signal from a busy street in the middle of rush hour is left unexplained.

However, rush hour gets even more exciting.

"While vehicle queues are inevitable at this location," Sansom continues, "the north to west vehicular flow around Queens Park Crescent will be provided with a progressive timing design."

"The southbound vehicular platoons would be re-structured at Queens Park and Queens Park Crescent and provided with a progressive flow movement south of this point."

After making all that perfectly clear, Sansom adds the scheme is "only a preliminary design, and as you can appreciate minor modifications may be required to the actual field signal settings based upon road conditions."

However, Sansom fails to mention when in all this the student is supposed to cross the street.

Maybe streaking would help.

Campus environment proposals approved in principle

The Campus Centre report released last week recommending more facilities to improve the campus environment was approved in principle Tuesday as a basis for discussion with the city and the community.

The report was approved by the planning and resources committee of Governing Council with the realization the recommendation to narrow St. George Street would probably meet with little enthusiasm from metro or the city.

Professor Chuck Hanly suggested the narrowing be negotiated in return for a reduction of parking on campus and cars on campus, which the city seems to want.

Chairman W.J.D. Lewis, director of Crown Trust, the firm-which owns many university properties, said he would like to make the campus more identifiable. He said this was much less evident on St. George Street than Hoskin Avenue and Queens Park Crescent.

The progress report discusses the Campus and Campus Centre report of 1971 and recommends priority be given to general aesthetic improvement of the campus followed by improvement of St. George, Willcocks and Huron Streets, additional service facilities and development of the Huron and Willcocks intersection.

The report recommended such amenities as banks, restaurants and snack bars as well as a post office. But a post office seems unlikely because there is one at Simcoe Hall already as well as one at St. George and Bloor and one at Sussex and Spadina.

There are also branches of most major banks at all corners of the campus although one might be possible in the Centre.

The committee also approved a resolution saying commercial uses on campus would not be objectionable under conditions set by the university.

Previously the now-defunct U of T Board of Governors passed a resolution saying they were not desirable although there have been two bookstores and a number of cafeterias as well as U of T Press.

Earlier this year the Governing Council backed down after SAC refused to remove Better Read Graphics from the SAC basement because it was a commercial operation. They had denied SAC permission to sign a contract but SAC signed anyway.

PENFRIENDS IN BRITAIN

Find out what life is REALLY like in the British Isles—perhaps have a holiday there with new friends! Write TODAY for details on the Club which specializes in transatlantic penfriends:—

ATLANTIC, Dept. CY1,
45 Mayesbrook Road, Dagenham
Essex, RM8 2EA, England.

Applications are now being accepted for the position of

STUDENT ADMINISTRATOR at the University College Playhouse

Term: Sept. 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975
Salary: $2200.

Applicants should have been involved with some Playhouse activities during the past year.

Please send resumé and anything else of interest to:
ALLEN BOOTH
79 A St. George Street

Deadline for applications is Friday March 29

HILLEL GRADUATE CLUB

is presenting

RICK KARDONNE & BRONA BROWN

in concert

DATE: SATURDAY MARCH 23rd, 1974
TIME: 9:00 P.M.
PLACE: HILLEL HOUSE
186 St. George Street

Admission: $1.50

Light refreshments
will be served.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS Toronto Arts Productions in co-operation with Cdn. Bar Association Ontario Branch

JUVENILES AND THE LAW

A DISCUSSION OF THE LEGAL STATUS AND RIGHTS OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS

PANELISTS:
Judge Beaulieu-Provincial Court,
Family Division, Niagara, Coter -
Youth Worker at DOMUM Harvy
Salem - Lawyer Staff Sgt. Gladys Jolly-
Metro Tor Police Dept. Youth Bureau

MODERATOR:
Lance Evans Q.C.

Wed. Mar. 27, 8 p.m.

ADMISSION
FREE
EVERYONE
WELCOME

ST. LAWRENCE
centre

3 FRONT ST. E.
TOR. 1656

PUBLIC AFFAIRS Toronto Arts Productions in co-operation with National Film Board of Canada

COMING HOME

COMING HOME is an unusual film where the filming itself is designed to help a family break through the communications barrier that separates the parents and two grown sons BILL RED, Director of the film and JEROME DIAMOND, Executive Director of Jewish Family and Child Service will be on hand for the ensuing discussion

Tues. Mar. 26, 8 p.m.

ADMISSION
FREE
EVERYONE
WELCOME

ST. LAWRENCE
centre

3 FRONT ST. E.
TOR. 1656

"THE MOST UNUSUAL AND PROVOCATIVE WORK OF SCIENCE-FICTION."

—Pat Collins, WCBS-TV

FANTASTIC PLANET

Fri., Sat., Sun. at 1:30, 3:15, 5:00, 6:45, 8:30 & 10:15

cinecity
YONGE @ CHARLES • 927-1394

Custom-made fade

Wrangler Fades

Remember the Wrangler

review

History in the making:

- the buildings —p. 13
- the books —p. 16
- the pictures —p. 17

The lowdown on those Trotskyists (or is it -ites) —see page 22

Major's Brecht: alienation becomes mild irony

Bertolt Brecht's The Good Woman of Setzuan is now playing at the St. Lawrence Centre through April 13. The show possesses all the external trappings of Brecht's theatre, thanks to Murray Laufer's superb set of corrugated rusted metal and the costumes, but is somewhat lacking in internal imagination and energy.

The Good Woman of Setzuan is a play of juxtaposing dualities. Shen Teh, a common whore, is judged a "good" person by three gods, who, on their travels, must find enough "good" people in order that the world remain intact. For their blessing, Shen Teh must uphold their Precepts and Commandments, leave street-walking and do good deeds. She finds that being good causes ruin, that man's basic nature is self-centered, that in order to preserve herself and help others, she must employ Shui Ta, the ruthless, unyielding side of her nature. Shen Teh is forced to become Shui Ta permanently but she knows she has only a few months left in her disguise, for she is pregnant. In the end, Shui Ta is taken into custody and put on trial before the new judges, who just happen to be the three gods. They are deaf to her cries that being good causes ruin, that she could only be good by being evil. They reveal themselves as gods to one and all and happily ascend to their heavenly domain, leaving Shen Teh and her friends in the mud of the real earth.

As is his wont, Brecht once again explores the human condition and the true nature of man. The Precepts of the gods, like the laws of the state, or like the pressures of the wealthy in business, all oppress the poor. The first law of man is to survive, then maybe you can afford to look around you. The gods come to earth and are horrified and afraid of man. They do not want to hear the cries of the multitudes in the streets. They are blind and deaf. They too, look out for themselves, for their positions. They are only too happy to leave the world of human existence, where ideals and straight paths lead to destruction. Good and evil, poor and rich, human and superhuman — outrageous extremes juxtaposed, sometimes humorously and sometimes subtly, one against the other until good and evil merge, as Shen Teh and Shui Ta merge. But, it doesn't really matter, for, as the gods observe: "All's well that ends."

The play is at once outrageous and delicate in style. There are easily recognizable types, such as the landlord, Mrs. Mi Tzu, or the pseudophilanthropist Mr. Shu Fu, as well as very subtly drawn characters, such as Wang, Widow Shin, Yang Sun, (Shen's boyfriend) and Shen Teh. Leon Major's direction neglects playing type against personality, the outrageous against the delicate. He loses much of Brecht's effective double-entendre and alienation (oh, that word) by opting for a very sedate, but competent, style. Alienation becomes mild irony. Major follows a very safe route. It works, but is not creative enough nor moving enough to match Brecht's script.

Ultimate performance honours belong to Denise Fergusson (second from right).

Don't get the wrong idea. There are some very fine scenes, reflecting some fine performances. Shen Teh's meeting with Yang Sun is wonderfully represented, ironically humorous, yet, somehow romantic in its anti-romanticism. The trial scene is superb, especially the leave-taking of the gods, which is hysterically funny.

Jennifer Phipps' Widow Shin is the perfect foil to Shen Teh's idealism. She possesses a finely detailed character, cynical, capable of undercutting any scene or busting anyone's balloon. James B. Douglas (Unemployed Man) supplies the best number in the show, "The Song of Smoke". Gerard Parkes, Claude Bede, and Richard Monette are a constant riot as the three gods — like Noel Coward comedians caught in a Mack Sennet situation. Gary Reineke lends the production a soft-spoken Yang Sun, very masterfully underplaying the role to reinforce the character's conceit and strength of purpose.

The ultimate performance honors of the night belong to Denise Fergusson. As Shen Teh, she possesses a flowing gracefulness, gentle voice and ideal outlook of the world which permeates her personality. As Shui Ta, her mannerisms become hard, her walk brisk and assuming, her voice bursting like machine-gun fire. The dual nature of the heroine is finely and competently drawn in the person of Fergusson, who, I might add, has been a delight to watch all season.

If you have a chance, catch this rarely performed Brecht. Leon Major's production of The Good Woman of Setzuan is enjoyable and, at times, outstanding.

debbie nathan

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55%...

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer. Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MA 11	149.00
WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER 10 SPEED	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51	149.00
WING NUT WITH SAFETY LEVER	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51	156.00
QUICK RELEASE NO CHROME	103.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51	169.00
QUICK RELEASE	112.00
VANQUEUR	149.00
NO SAFETY LEVER WING NUT	97.00
VANQUEUR	149.00
WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	97.00
VANQUEUR	159.00
QUICK RELEASE SAFETY LEVER	103.00

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers Vanqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity Vanqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dyna-mo electric lighting with generator, back carrier, padded seat, chrome chain guard, and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
YOLKSCYCLE	159.00
CHROME QUICK RELEASE	112.00
YOLKSCYCLE	149.00
WING NUT SAFETY LEVER	117.00
MODENA	159.00
SAFETY LEVER CHROME QUICK RELEASE	112.00
AMERICAN ARROW 51
ALUMINUM FRAME, PINKLESS SAFETY LEVER, QUICK RELEASE WITH CHROME FORK, CAMPANULO DERAILLEUR	195.00
10 SPEED	127.00

	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW 51 HAVE SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS
VISTA	149.00
WING NUT MEN OR LADIES 3 SPEED	97.00
G12000	89.00
TIGER	65.00
LADIES BUNTOUR DERAILEUR 10 SPEED	119.00
LAPERLE	82.00
DUOMATIC FOLDING BICYCLE	99.00
SAFARI OR CAPRI FOLDING BICYCLE	78.00
	89.50

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

- Open Mon.-Fri. 2 p.m.-6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-2 p.m.
- Brake cable and manufacturer's material defects.
- Warranty for three months on all brand names.
- Minimum service charge for assembling.
- We have a professional mechanic stand by to

- give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept charge.

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

FUN SPORTS LTD.

403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario
Phone: 749-6171

Your Charge card is accepted

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #38C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

Tubstrip: a unique union of gay subject matter and acting and production staff—and a popular success.

A Gay theatre: an idea whose time has come

The creation of a gay theatre company for Toronto's 100,000-200,000 homosexuals is an idea whose time has come.

Perhaps because of a greater liberalization of public opinion and its frequent dramatic impact, homosexuality was featured more prominently on stage this season than ever before. Productions such as Firehall Theatre's Total Eclipse, Taragon's You're Gonna Be Alright Jamie Boy, the York Centennial Theatre's Small Craft Warnings and the Drama Centre's Troilus and Cressida for example, all dealt with the topic of homosexuality or interpreted certain characters from a gay point of view. Incongruously, the lesbian relationship between Gertrude Stein and Alice B. Toklas was totally omitted in Nancy Cole's one-woman show Gertrude Stein's Gertrude Stein at OISE and the Glenmorris Studio.

Now the current popular success of Global Village's homosexual farce Tubstrip running until March 24, presents a unique union of gay subject matter, acting and production staff and largely gay audience that is pregnant with possibilities. Not since John Herbert's Fortune and Men's Eyes have aspects of gay life been so graphically depicted and satirized as in Tubstrip. A.J. Kronengold's play is set in a gay steam bath in which his nine male characters disrobe for their sexual encounters; love relationships begin and disintegrate and various characters are stripped of their social masks. The psychiatrist of a fat, baldish 50-year-old gay film mogul, for instance, is revealed to be the sadist of a comic sado-masochist duo. An athletic married Vietnam veteran who refuses to admit his homosexuality to his wife, disillusions an infatuated former schoolmate. The unexpected encounter in the steam bath of two lovers breaks up their relationship because of the "infidelity" of one of the two partners.

Jeff Moss' narrow, economic and inventive set surrounded by the audience at 180, is admirably suited to the frantic pace of Tubstrip. The back of Moss' set consists of four exits and entrances to the steam room, shower, private rooms and street exit off stage through which the characters pursue one another in their comic sexual quests. The action front stage centers around a large bath, one of the private rooms, a pool table, bar, and a small table and chairs. The set, lighting, black rock music and extensive male nudity all create an accurate reproduction of a casual steam bath atmosphere.

The importance of this Scorpio Five production from New York, besides the extremely controlled realistic and stylized "queensh" acting of its cast, lies in the frank direct dialogue the play establishes with its audience. None of the existing companies in Toronto playing to mixed heterosexual-homosexual audiences would have dared stage Tubstrip with its male nudity and homosexual relationships, including sado-masochism, without grossly distorting its subject matter. No gay audience would have accepted with such understanding and humour the comic criticism of some gay relationships in this play were it not presented by a largely gay cast.

The high, approximately 85 per cent attendance at Tubstrip reveals a definite need for a gay theatre in Toronto. According to publicity person Vicki Bradshaw, Global Village plans to run more gay shows in the future to fill this theatrical vacuum. With the high percentage of gay men and women in all aspects of the Toronto theatre scene, as in all the arts, one wonders, however, why gay people in Toronto aren't able to write and produce their own plays instead of relying on imports from the US. Public opinion is certainly more tolerant and legal protection for gay people more extensive in Canada than in the US. This explains to a large extent why Toronto is one of the gay capitals of North America. Gay men and women are nevertheless still afraid to declare themselves as homosexuals and end their self-repression for fear of losing their jobs and public recrimination. A local gay theatre could play a vital function in exploring the condition and self-identity of gay people and combatting the prejudices and misconceptions of straight society.

anton wagner

Vic student play:

Melodrama on the squash court

Arkansas an original work by Vic student Dave Aitken searches out man's lost values on a squash court. The play is a good attempt but unfortunately lacks dramatic tension.

A young female lawyer Monica Norwood is accosted by a disturbed young man named Will. What ensues is a strange dialogue between the two prospective squash players.

Will remembers smells and sounds of his childhood and plans a trip to Arkansas. Monica stands to the side criticizing and defending her position as liberté $20 an hour corporate lawyer. Nothing of particular note occurs except for the cruel murder of Will at the end with Monica's squash racket.

Debbie Jarvis as Monica looks the part of the in-shape winner and fits perfectly into the aggressive and independent female stereotype women's liberation has created for us. Geoff McKay as the Arkansas bound mental case unfortunately lacks presence. He moves his arms about a great deal reflecting a stage nervousness rather than the desired insanity.

The staging is simple and generally well-executed though the yellow spot-lit reminiscences are perhaps a little too melodramatic. Aitken seems to be following in the modern absurdist tradition—time displacement, little action, and great deal of strange conversation. There are a few fine lines and humorous sequences but the play is just too short for any sort of development. The length does however facilitate easy between class viewing. The last show is today—1:15, at the UC Playhouse.

cynthia mccarthy

Bromberg: rock's Mr Meek aims to top the CN tower

Wanted Dead or Alive
David Bromberg
Columbia: $7.29

David Bromberg is the Woody Allen of folk music. He has the image of a shy, awkward, bespectacled Mr. Meek, despite his six-foot plus height. It's an image he's cultivated from his first album, through the title of his second LP Demon In Disguise, and up to his newest Wanted Dead or Alive.

It's a good LP: not quite up to Demon In Disguise but it's close. Side one is made up of four Bromberg compositions, cut in the studio in San Francisco and boasts the back up talents of some Grateful Deaders - Jerry Garcia, Phil Lesh, Keith Godchaux and Bill Kreutzmann. The first track might sound familiar to Bromberg followers. It's a rerecording of "The Hold Up", which was co-written by George Harrison and made its first appearance on Bromberg's debut album. The vocal stays much the same as before and the music takes on more depth (and electricity) with Garcia and friends doing the chores.

Side two was recorded live at the Columbia Studios in New York as much of Demon was, and spotlights compositions from a variety of sources.

Bromberg takes every opportunity to present his quality music in the appropriate settings. A good example is "Somebody Else's Blues". It's a long flowing, easy, mellow blues with a tasteful horn background, cool electric licks a-la-Garcia and a lot of emotional acoustic six-string wizardry from Bromberg. As always that wry sense of humour is peeking out through the lyrics. I don't owe anyone any money

All my cavities are filled
If I pull my hand outside my pocket too fast
I might drop a couple of fifty-dollar bills.

I got more dope than I can smoke
I got more chicks than I can use
Somehow, when I woke up this morning
I must have had somebody else's blues.

"Send Me to The 'Lectric Chair" is a lighthearted dixieland tune that tells the story of the accused in a murder trial pleading with the judge for the "chair". There are lots of vibrant solos from Peter Eckland on trumpet and John Payne on clarinet. It's the kind of song that goes over really well in concert.

The Leiber-Stoller song "Kansas City", that Wilbert Harrison made famous in 1959, is revived beyond my wildest expectations. Instrumentation is gloriously handled and the horn section is in just dynamite form. My only complaint is that audience applause was faded out too quickly at the end.

Of lesser note is an almost straight version of the Dylan-penned country travesty, "Wallflower," that appeared on the Doug Sahm and Band LP of last year. This rendition has the advantage of being considerably more listenable than its forerunner.

The album finishes off with a solid banjo-fiddle rocker, called "The New Lee Highway Blues," written by Bromberg. If I didn't know better I would have sworn that John Hartford had a hand in the composition.

Wanted Dead or Alive is the "Take The Money and Run" (analogously not literally) for Bromberg. There are probably yet higher heights to hit. After all, the CN tower is bigger than the Empire State Building.

alan mandell

Singer Dave Bromberg's a shy guy.

all the latest in fashion
and custom-made eyewear

BRADDOCK
OPTICAL

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE:
280 BLOOR ST. WEST 962-2080

Chile under the Junta

Speaker:

Harald Edelstam

Swedish Ambassador to Chile. Expelled by the generals for his outstanding defence of junta victims.

AND: Andrew Brewin, M.P.; Dr. Floyd Honey, Gen. Secty, Cdn. Council of Churches; Dennis MacDermott, Cdn. Director, UAW; Most Rev. E.W. Scott, Primate, Anglican Church of Canada.

Friday, March 22, 8pm
252 Bloor Street West

PARTIAL LIST OF SPONSORS: Amnesty International (Toronto); Canadian Committee for Justice to Latin American Political Prisoners; Canadian Council of Churches Committee on International Affairs; Latin American Working Group; Atkinson College Students Association; Bethune College Students Association; Andreas Papandreu; Rev. T.M. Anthony, Secretary, Latin American Desk, Anglican Church of Canada; Senator Eugene Forsey; Andrew Brewin; United Church of Canada.

STUDENTS WITH OFFICE EXPERIENCE Register NOW!!

FOR SUMMER OR TEMPORARY
EMPLOYMENT

Dot Personnel Services

WEST
236-1133
3313 A Bloor St. W.

EAST
429-3706
797 Don Mills Rd.

CENTRAL
923-9801
30 Bloor St. W.

HILLEL HOUSE Campus Residence

186 St. George Street

Now Accepting applications for the
1974-75 Academic Year

The residence is an integral part of the Hillel program. Residents are expected to join the internal leadership in the Hillel program and to be responsible for various other tasks. The residence has a capacity of eight members.

Preference will be given:

- 1) To students who have been active in Hillel and
- 2) To students who have had previous experience as members and organizers in Jewish Youth groups.

Submit applications in writing, indicating background, references and reasons for wanting to join the Residence to:

BEN MAYER, Director

BBHF

186 ST. GEORGE STREET
Toronto, Ontario
M5R 2N3

When is an old house not an old house? (When it looks like one.)

By RANDALL ROBERTSON

St. George with its below College Beverly Street continuation must once have been one of Toronto's Grand Residential Streets. But now John A. Macdonald's house shelters Innis College; the former residence of F.W. Cumberland (the architect of University College) is the International Students' Centre; and, on Beverley, George Brown's old home is simply one part of a complex of buildings used by the Metropolitan Toronto Association for the Mentally Retarded.

There are better fates. There are worse. Go further down Beverly. Look at the Grange. It was restored.

The visitor to Paris knows what it is to turn a corner and see a famous monument like the Madeline for the first time. It is not necessary to leave Toronto to have the same emotional experience; one may have it when one looks north on John from Queen and sees the Grange for the first, or even the tenth time.

Eric Arthur, No Mean City

'A ruin will often stir the imagination; a restored building never.' True. But a restoration — and such a restoration as the Grange — while it fails to quicken anyone's imagination or historical awareness does succeed in arousing a certain social consciousness.

Ruins are reminders of the past simply because they have survived. A restored historical site however, cannot be such a reminder. It is a re-creation of the past by the present and so inevitably it expresses certain attitudes not only towards the past but also towards the present and the future.

Architecture is organically related to society. No one would dispute that. The 'new' city hall says something about our society that the old one does not. Or why did it built?

Architectural restoration too is organically related to society. The Victorians led by Pugin and Ruskin 'restored' so many Gothic churches to their original style because, as Pugin urged, "while we profess the creed of Christians, whilst we glory in being Englishmen, let us have an architecture the arrangement and details of which alike remind us of our faith and our country." The 'restoration' of University College is an attempt to make the buildings fit for the future and so is something of a condemnation of the past.

The Grange restored, then, says something about our society that the Grange as a house built a hundred and fifty seven years ago does not. Or why was it restored?

"The Grange (I quote from the brochure distributed to Grange visitors) was built in 1817 by D'Arcy Boulton, Jr., when Toronto was still the town of York. The house, constructed on the lines of an English manor house, was originally set in the hundred acres of land that stretched from Queen to Bloor Street. Under the Boulton family the Grange became the centre of the social and political life in Upper Canada. W.H. Boulton's widow, who inherited the house, married Goldwin Smith in 1875. The traditions of the Grange were continued and broadened by the intellectual pursuits of Smith, a distinguished Oxford scholar. As a result of their friendship with Sir Edmund Walker (later the Art Gallery's first president), Mrs. Goldwin Smith decided to will the house to the new Art Museum of Toronto and, in 1911, the Grange became the permanent residence of the Art Gallery. In 1973 The Grange opened as a living museum with the rooms restored to the period of 1835-40."

Gertrude Stein in her monolithic way once announced that the trouble with a museum is that you can't buy anything.

The trouble with the Grange as a "living museum" is that you are being asked to buy too much when you put down your twenty five cents admission fee.

The Grange was restored by a rather select element of Toronto society and it was restored in terms of that group's relationship to Canadian culture.

What's in a heritage?

Something that other people can seize and use.

The National Heritage Ltd. people were in the restoration business for the money. The AGO people are in it for the prestige.

The restoration and interpretation of historical sites — as much a part of our heritage as the historical sites themselves.

The Grange today says very little about the quality or the actuality of life in nineteenth century Upper Canada. The Grange today is a machine for remembering. Remembering a past that never really was, that is, as a means of restoring us to a present that very truly is.

Power corrupts; money corrupts; they corrupt one's sense of history.

The Grange today is simply another instance of the rich thinking of themselves in an institutional sense. It suggests that we should allow the rich to indulge themselves today for they are the best that we can give to tomorrow even as Goldwin Smith was the best that the nineteenth century could give to today.

When is an old man not just an old man? When he's a culture Upper Canadian: Goldwin Smith at the door of The Grange.

If they hadn't restored the Grange they would have had to have invented it.

"The Grange today," says Margaret Machell, the custodian of the Grange, in a publicity release, "is the culmination of a dream, the idea of an imaginative few who in 1967 commissioned a study of the possibilities for its preservation and continued use, supported a master plan of 1970, raised funds for the work, and finally saw it executed by many hands in 1971-73."

"The culmination of a dream." The interpretation of a history. The embodiment of a class.

Keats' famous doctrine of the necessity in poetic creation of negative capability — "that is when a man is capable of being in uncertainties, mysteries, doubts, without any irritable reaching after fact and reason" — when one is able to imaginatively project oneself not into any particular thing but into every particular thing — applies not only to poets but also, of course, on a much lower level, to tourists. And the restorers of the Grange have realized this.

There is a contrast between the Grange we visit and the house the Boultons and Smiths lived in. The house has been detached from its historical context in order to make it more acceptable. The home is "representative." Actual past history is being used now only to add local colour.

Tourists are not indifferent to history. It's just that they will accept any kind of history so long as it is sufficiently remote and sufficiently romanticized for them to easily project themselves into it. And it may be formulated as a general rule that the tourist will never project himself back into a lower social position than the one he already holds.

The visitor to the Grange is condemned to remain a tourist; condemned to passively watch others manipulate history.

And yet the social relationships and stratifications that existed in the past are being perpetuated even as that past is being manipulated. In fact through the manipulation of that past.

At the Grange it is not so much that history is being repeated as that what we think is a rehearsal is in fact a performance.

I have never been happy. I thought I was, but it has never really been so... And you have always been so kind to me.

But our home has been nothing but a playroom. I have been your doll-wife, just as at home I was papa's doll-child; and here the children have been my dolls. I thought it great fun when you played with me, just as they thought it great fun when I played with them.

Nora, in The Doll's House.

So who's stopped playing?

Certainly not the members of the Women's Committee of the Art Gallery of Ontario — the "imaginative few", in Machell's words, who raised the money for the restoration of the Grange.

The Women's Committee, whose members are corporate presidents' wives, bankers' wives, rich mens' wives, whose members include the wife of the U of T's own Malim Harding — inevitably with these women one defines them in terms of their husbands — is almost solely responsible for the restoration of the Grange. Only $50,000 came from the federal government through the National Historic Sites Branch. The committee itself raised over $500,000.

The Grange is very much a product of the Art Gallery of Ontario and the prominent Toronto citizens associated with it.

The Women's Committee, besides collecting money for the restoration of the Grange, also accepted appropriate donations of antiques.

Give me your old give me your world give me your threadbare (couches, chairs, chestfields, tables, picture frames, china, silver, linen, ...)

The result? Surprisingly unified — even if in the end the parts are greater than the whole. If you like a house "done" by an interior decorator you'll like the Grange. Both are instances of conspicuous consumption, both are instances of materialism raised to an art. At the Grange in particular one sees materialism discovering its meaning and its justification in its past.

The Interior Decorators of Ontario gave its second annual award for Architectural Restoration to the Art Gallery for the restoration of the Grange.

Peter John Stokes, the restoration architect, did not accept the award for the Art Gallery. Nor did Jeanne Minnick, who was in charge of the furnishing of the building.

The Award was given to Mary Alice Stuart — Mrs. Alexander Kyle Stuart — the second chairman of the Grange Restoration Committee, the subcommittee your old!

Give me
Give me
your worn!
(couches, chairs,
chesterfields,
china,
linen,...)

It was another age — or was it? The Grange (behind the Art Gallery of Ontario on Dundas Street) in better days of the Womens' Committee which specifically concerned itself with raising money for the restoration.

Money talks and once it starts talking it never shuts up.

"These people, all their lives are money, so why not let them collect the money for the restoration?"

A Grange employee.

The Laura Secord homestead at Queenston was restored recently by the Laura Secord candies concern (which is owned by Americans). A Laura Secord candy store was erected beside the homestead at the time of its restoration.

The Grange was restored by the Womens' Committee of the Art Gallery of Ontario.

What's the difference?

Candies? History? Canada anyone?

The Trelawney of the Wells cast held a press party at the Grange a while back. The actors attended in their nineteenth century costumes.

The head cook of the Grange, Ruth Keene, took some cookies she had made up to the press party.

"It was strange the way I felt up there — as if I should have been down here in the basement. I felt as if they were looking down on me.

"I really didn't belong up there.

"I felt out of place.

"They were dressed one way — as ladies and gentlemen — and I was dressed another way — as a working servant."

Life not only imitates art: it also imitates life.

A revealing order of priorities asserts itself in the present day operation of the house. The guides in the gentry rooms of the house are pleasant perhaps — it's their job — but they are faceless, uninteresting in themselves. They are concerned with protecting the things around them which are out on display. They are interested in things and they don't want us to get beyond the ropes to actually touch those things.

Downstairs however in the basement where the baking room, the larder and the pantry are the people are not interested in what they have but in what they are doing. Down in the basement the people are working. Downstairs anytime I have been there there is always at least one woman making bread, or bread pudding, or ginger parkins. There is always a fire going. Sooner or later there is a piping hot loaf of bread to be sliced up and distributed, wet with butter. The downstairs kitchen is the only place where a crowd accumulates — and stays.

Upstairs when the guides are not being too hortatory about what one must and must not do they are too self-conscious about the fact that they are dressed in period costume. And then they are so over-polite because they know their situation by any present day means of judgement is superfluous, is farcical. But at least they do know this, perhaps because they are only in this absurd situation from 9 to 5. For them at least it is just a job and not a way of life.

The house, Keene noted, "is only distinctly Canadian in the kitchen area. Only here do you begin to feel that you are in a Daily at the Grange the practice of customs of another age now raised into strange rituals.

ages?)

The Grange belongs to the Art Gallery of Ontario, but there's nothing peculiarly Canadian about it. Bourgeois comfort is pretty much the same everywhere. But then there's nothing particularly Canadian about the Art Gallery of Ontario anyway. In its ambition to be one of the great art galleries of the world, in its eagerness to accept and prominently display Henry Moore's sculptures the AGO has sloughed off many home loyalties.

I think of where I have most enjoyed a day at an art gallery. I think of the McMichael Conservation Collection of Art in Kleinburg. The Collection, devoted to the works of the Group of Seven and their associates and to Eskimo and Indian art, is housed in a sprawling multi-level log bungalow.

You look out the windows of the Grange and you are aware of yourself behind the curtains.

You look out the windows—the huge curtainless wall to wall windows—of the McMichael gallery—and there it is, the True North, acres and acres of trees running to the northern horizon under a vast incredibly blue sky. Only a few villages (relatively speaking) lie between you and the North Pole. And when evening comes you can turn from Tom Thompson's "Snow Shadows" or his "Sunset" to what inspired him.

"The sun never sets on the British Empire" So they used to say.

One of the glories of the Canadian landscape is her sunsets.

Thank God for Canadian sunsets.

Going unprepared and unmotivated into a "living museum" like the Grange or into an antiques store is risking self-annihilation. "The accumulation of time and light and handling that lies like sunlight on the antiques and all the faded lives that lie like the dust"—what room is there for present day hopes, present day egos?

Antiques represent so much accumulated experience. . . and yet, and yet in the end they represent only a certain amount of money that you must hand over if you want to possess them.

And you don't buy experience: you earn it.

Antique stores, museums, restored houses threaten to pacify a great desire for experience a craving that is good in itself, that is good only insofar as it is desire.

One can't help feeling that there is something wrong about this emphasis on buildings and artifacts connected with Canadian history—that one is laying oneself open to God knows what since Canadian history is itself such a sorry mixture of the histories and the cultures of other countries.

We need to preserve the Grange and buildings like it (and for that matter this university) only as indications of where we have been in the light of where we are going.

But where are we going?

In the end it is not a question of history versus one interpretation of it but a question of which interpretation—of a number—you will choose.

Amsterdam in the seventeenth century must have been unbearable. So neat, so clean, so industrious, so bourgeois. But Amsterdam in the seventeenth century produced Frans Hals, produced Ruysdael, produced Hobbema, produced Rembrandt. Nineteenth century Upper Canada was neat, clean, bourgeois too. But it produced Goldwin Smith, it produced D'Arcy Boulton, it produced William Allen.

Who?

It is cheating—and not a little—to present these men as sufficient justification for their age.

It is necessary to realize that the Goldwin Smith period—the period most referred to at the Grange today (even though the house has been restored to an earlier period) simply because it is the period about which most is known—represents the end of a tradition rather than the beginning of a new one.

Smith saw Canada caught between the United States and Great Britain. And rather than resolving that dilemma by rejecting both loyalties he urged that Canada align itself with the US.

O Canada! Yup.

Goldwin Smith came out to Canada, saw the country in terms of its society—and though it is a myth that he married Boulton's widow for her money—his success here was purely a social one. As the "Sage of the Grange" he devoted himself to telling the world, whether it was listening or not, his opinions on just about everything; as the master of the Grange he devoted himself to the complete satisfaction of his creature comforts. But Canada if it is anything is a perpetual challenge, an eternal wrestling with the land. If it is to be judged in terms of its cities—and the civilization they have created—God help her!

Before visiting the Grange I had always thought of Canada in the nineteenth century in terms of immigrants coming over in the crowded holds of ships, of houses in clearings, of lumber camps, of the segregation of the Indians, of sod cabins on the prairies.

In the end it is a question of which interpretation you choose. And you choose your images according to your interpretation.

Goldwin Smith? Perhaps he is the Lord Chatterly (in cultural terms) that Canada has always needed.

Stale food—Christmas cake baked weeks ago in the Grange kitchens and flat wine—this bread and this wine are dusted and stirred and laid again each morning on the linen-covered dining room table before the portrait of Mrs. D'Arcy Boulton Jr. Candles are lit. Fires ignited. And the votaries come. Out of the sunshine into the gloom. And two or three-being-gathered-together customs of another age now raised into strange rituals by the Levites of the upper classes of Canadian society are performed.

The history of the house, the interpretation of history the restoration represents, they are like a piece of the Christmas cake on the dining room table—stale and unpalatable. But there is a contrast between the house as a representation of a gentleman's home of the 1830's and as a house where the Boultons and Smiths lived, on the one hand, and the house as a place where people work today on the other.

The attic here after all is only full of air conditioning equipment.

Just so long as one knows and remembers though, that the contrast does exist.

A Grange guide spoke of one visitor "who came in, sniffed the air, smelt the bread cooking, and said to us 'pretty clever of you to have that smell piped in.'"

"It was then that I began to wonder what people thought this place was."

It's best to know.

new country."

The artifacts in the kitchen because they were more liable to breakage and because they were not expected to last for a long time anyway were made here in Canada and not imported as most of the rest of the furniture in the house was.

Here too would have come for storage and preparation Canadian game and produce — rabbits, ducks (two — freeze-dried — "It's cheaper than having them stuffed" — hang in the larder today), apples, nuts, rice, potatoes, corn.

Here today because of the lesser value of the artifacts the visitor is not confined behind ropes. He can wander around at will. And here he may end up taking break out of the brick oven or kneading it before it is put in. (Ruth Keene will ask for an engineer to do the kneading — "lawyers aren't very good at raising dough — engineers are better.")

The Grange is only one building. But there are a number of "pioneer villages" in Canada and the US. Black Creek Pioneer Village here in Toronto, and Upper Canada Village at Morrisburg; Williamsburg in Virginia, and Dearborn, in Dearborn, Michigan.

Is a pioneer village a company town — the company being made up of those on the top of the 'vertical mosaic'? Is it the Athens that a capitalist age erects to commemorate itself? Or is it a garden suburb like Forest Hill, like Rosedale a working class version (A working class garden suburb would of course only be open Mon 9 to 5).

Is a pioneer village a stratified society. "Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief," — a talisman that reassures the rich?

And the Grange? If the city is, as Lewis Mumford has it, "the point of maximum concentration for the power and culture of a community," what is the Grange? Is it too a talisman? The Grange as Christmas Creche?

Or is the city the new frontier and is the Grange a temporary colony south of Bloor? South of Bloor where the inner city schools are, where Toronto's slums and ghettos are? Is the Grange one colony and Bay Street another?

(We can at least ask these questions.

(Or is a pioneer village or a restored house simply another version of pastoral—acting out our regressive fantasies even as we in our daily lives think we are acting out the fantasies of earlier

Goldwin Smith? Perhaps he is the Lord Chatterly (in cultural terms) that Canada has always needed.

Historians still holding pince nez high

Canada 1896-1921: a nation transformed
by Craig Brown and Ramsay Cook

McClelland and Stewart, $12.50
The view from the Peace Tower in Ottawa is pretty good—if all you want to see is Hull or the E.B. Eddy match plant.

Similarly the view of Canadian history from the vantage point of Ottawa politics is pretty good—if all you want to examine are wars, diplomacy and the evolution of a national political state.

But if you want more from history—if you want to gauge the effects of those things called wars, diplomacy and politics on those people who didn't frequent the halls of the East Block—you must view the world through more than the pince-nez of this or that prime minister.

Unfortunately Craig Brown and Ramsay Cook, in this the latest addition to the prestigious Centenary series in Canadian history, are still holding their pince-nez high.

They promise us a book that will investigate the transformation of an entire nation during the years 1896-1921. It's a crucial period for Canada—a period of industrialization, of a shift in focus from the northwest to the north and from the British to the American economic empire. It's a period of major changes in class and social relations.

But Brown and Cook don't talk about this transformation; instead they concentrate on the tired old themes: national unity, the development of political independence from Britain, the battles of World War I—all way stations on Canada's teleological path to nowhere.

There are a few token pages to labour, to developing urbanization, to the women's suffrage movement. But most of the time we're treated to Wilfred Laurier's appearance at this or that Imperial conference, diplomatic moves to the Vatican over the separate school question, or Robert Borden's distaste for partisan party politics.

What's more, the treatment of certain issues is inexcusably superficial. For instance: Brown and Cook mention that in 1918 meetings of groups using "enemy" languages were banned by the Canadian government under the War Measures Act. They suggest the main impetus for this particular move was the rise of Canadian nativism during the war. In fact, the language ban was aimed directly at the socialist and working-class organizations—many of which had their basis in the non-Anglo-Saxon work force. That's why the banned languages included non-

Brown and Cook forgot about these people.

"enemy" ones like Finnish and Ukrainian. That's why all books published by Charles Kerr and Sons (the American publishers of Marx' Capital) were prohibited from entering Canada. But Brown and Cook don't mention that.

So it's the same stories, the same superficiality and (sometimes) even the same old language. In one of the four chapters devoted to World War I, we are told of the "terrible price" Canadians paid "to crush Germany's threat to civilization."

Jeez.
The footnotes though, are probably the most authoritative of any text written on the period.

tom walkom

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Latin American Studies Committee of the International Studies Programme University of Toronto presents two lectures by Professor Egon Schaden, Latin American-in-Residence at the University of Toronto.

Lecture 1:

Topic: THE IMAGE OF THE BRAZILIAN INDIAN

Date: Wednesday, March 27, 1974

Time: 4:10 p.m.

Place: Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall

Lecture 2:

Topic: IS THERE A BRAZILIAN CULTURE

Date: Thursday, April 4, 1974

Time: 4:10 p.m.

Place: Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall

HART HOUSE DEBATE

Resolved: "BEHIND EVERY MEDIOCRE WOMAN IS A MAN".
HONORARY VISITOR: LAURA SABIA - CHAIRMAN OF THE ADVISORY COUNCIL OF THE STATUS OF WOMEN.

TUES., MARCH 26 AT 8 P.M.

IN THE HART HOUSE DEBATES ROOM

LENT

St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel
The Newman Centre
Hoskin Avenue at St. George St.

24 March

Fourth Sunday of Lent

"A time for planting, a time for uprooting what has been planted"
Sunday Afternoon: Time for Retreat from 2-5 p.m.
"Rid yourselves of all your sins; and make a new heart and a new spirit"

31 March

Fifth Sunday of Lent

"A time for keeping silent, a time for speaking"

3 April

Communal Penance Service

"The time has come and the Kingdom of God is close at hand. Repent and believe the Good News."

7 April

Palm Sunday

"A time for giving birth, a time for dying"

Sunday Mass at 10 a.m. and 12 noon
Weekday Mass at 7:45 a.m., 12:10 p.m. and 4:30 p.m.
Tuesday Evening Mass and Supper: 5:30 p.m.

the filmed fable of "THE OWL AND THE PUS-SYCAT". No. 2 in Hillel's Monday-night-at-the-movies.

See Barbara Streisand as the Owl.

MAR. 25 at MAR. 25
Hillel House
186 St. George

8:00 P.M.
NO CHARGE

Canadian history in cartoons

SITTING ON THE POOR MAN ON THE INDUCEMENT OF EXEMPTION

A Caricature History of Canadian Politics; by J.W. Bengough; Peter Martin Associates; $10.00

Peter Martin Associates, one of the smaller but better Canadian publishing houses, has reprinted one of the Canadian classics, Bengough's Caricature History of Canadian Politics.

J.W. Bengough was the pre-eminent cartoonist of the post-Confederation period. His caricatures, or some of them, will be familiar to most of us, since they're frequently reprinted in Canadian high school history textbooks. This volume, however, brings many of them together in one enjoyable package. Originally published in 1886 under Bengough's editorship, it contains quite a few contributions by other cartoonists as well.

Bengough, however, stands head and shoulders above the rest, a fact that was recognized at the time. The New York Herald called him "the greatest cartoonist living on this side of the continent", while the British editor W. L. Stead considered him "one of the ablest cartoonists in the world."

His depictions of John A. Macdonald are the wittiest and best, but his other pet issues, such as Prohibition, provincial rights, nationalism, and women's suffrage, also stirred him to fine efforts.

He was also talented in other fields: he published several books of poetry, wrote songs, wrote articles on economics, politics, and literature, and served as a Toronto alderman.

The cartoons — as enjoyable in themselves as they are — are also useful in giving a picture of the times. The humour and the style are somewhat different from what we are used to now, however, and that, coupled with the fact that the current events being depicted are now distant history, might make the book less interesting for some. It's a matter of taste, I suppose.

sarah rothschild

"THE ORIGINAL" NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

WINNER
1970 1ST ANNUAL TORONTO
PIZZA AWARD
STAR WEEK'S JUNE 71
PIZZA CONTEST
620 YONGE
NORTH OF WELLESLEY

DINING ROOM OPEN 11 AM
1 AM MON-SAT
SUN 3 PM-1 AM
TAKE-OUT AND DELIVERY
DELIVERY FROM 4 PM-1 AM

925-1736

Award winning pizza as you like it

PUBLIC MEETING

THE TORONTO CHAPTER CANADIAN FRIENDS OF THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY
cordially invites you to hear

PROFESSOR AMNON BEN-TOR

Institute of Archaeology Hebrew University of Jerusalem

"MASSADA"

illustrated with slides

Thursday, March 28, 1974

8:30 p.m.

Temple Sinai - 210 Wilson Avenue

ABC CHARTERS to Europe

- Youth Fares
- Student Eurail passes

922-4161

SERVICE, LTD.

258 College Street

RONNIE HAWKINS

IS AT LOUNGE

Hades

MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY

BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.

OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW 8:30 P.M.

SAC Cinema

presents:

Friday
March 22nd,
7:00 & 9:45
only 95¢

KODETZKY & KANISIA
TOGETHER AT LAST.

SLITHER
PG METROCOLOR MGM

Double Horror Bill Friday March 29th Med. Sci. Auditorium

CURSE OF THE WEREWOLF

7:00 & 10:00

KING KONG VS. GODZILLA

8:30

Both for only 95¢

Carnal Knowledge

Joseph E. Levine presents a Mike Nichols Film starring Jack Nicholson, Candice Bergen, Arthur Garfunkel, Ann Margret and Jules Feiffer.
—U.S. Smith, Cosmopolitan Magazine

Mike Nichols, Jack Nicholson, Candice Bergen,
Arthur Garfunkel, Ann Margret and Jules Feiffer.

Carnal Knowledge.

□

An Avco Embassy Picture

Friday
April 5th
8:00 & 9:45
only 95¢

SPECIAL MIDNIGHT SHOWING

Friday April 5th
Saturday April 6th
Admission $1.50

Medical
Sciences Auditorium
Free Munchies!!!!
Last flick of the Season.

the ultimate trip

STANLEY KUBRICK'S
2001: A SPACE
ODYSSEY

Centre for the Study of Drama
HART HOUSE THEATRE

Merrill Denison's

MARSH HAY

Thur. March 21 to Sat. March 30 at 8:30
Box Office now open 10:00 to 6:00
928-8668

NEW MUSIC CONCERTS

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

SAT. MARCH 30 AT 8:30 P.M.

devoted to the fascinating and enchanting music of

Guest Composer: GEORGE CRUMB

Pulitzer Prize Winner

featured performers:

ORFORD STRING QUARTET, MARY MORRISON - soprano,
SHAMBHU DAS - sitar, WILLIAM KUINKA - mandolin

Edward Johnson Building,

University of Toronto

Adults $2.50

967-5257

Students $1.50

European-Escape with Citroën

Escape to Europe and rent a new Citroën. The economical Citroën 2 cv 4 seater convertible delivers 60 miles to the gallon. The spacious 55" covering 35 miles to the gallon, gives you an hour of fatigueless driving. Even the luxurious DS can be rented very reasonably. Other models are available, all new, all manufacturer-guaranteed and insured for all risks. The Citroën model you choose is yours on arrival in Europe. But you pay only for the period of use with no mileage limit.

For further information, without obligation, you can call any Citroën dealer or CITROËN (CANADA) LTD., 5445 Royalmount, Montreal, Quebec H4P 1S5. Tel: (514) 355-4481.

TV
CITROËN

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Prov _____

At some moment I did answer yes to Someone or Something, and at that hour I was certain that existence is meaningful and that my life in self-surrender had a goal. — Dag Hammarskjöld

The Christian Brothers
(De La Salle Brothers)

A life of prayer and service in community

Please send me a copy of your 16-page photo essay describing the life of the Christian Brothers.

Name _____

Address _____

Mail to:
Brother George Morgan, F.S.C.
5 Avonwick Gate
Don Mills, Ontario M3A 2M5

A satisfying trio of Rachmaninoff releases

Since 1973 was a "Rachmaninoff Year" the record companies predictably issued a huge number of records honouring the moody Russian. I say predictably because since the "Beethoven Year" (1970) the disc execs have discovered a huge market for complete editions and box sets of related works (complete symphonies, concertos and so on). In Rachmaninoff's case, we have a valuable legacy in the composer's own prodigious recorded output on RCA, mental peanut of the record industry.

Of Nipper the wonder dog still sits with his ear cocked over the gramophone, but if it's classical music he's waiting for, he'll be a pile of doggy bones first. RCA in Canada hasn't released a classical disc in a human's age (excuse the pun) so the "Complete Rachmaninoff Edition" on 15 discs won't make its way to this side of the 49th parallel. If we lack the composer's own interpretations, though, we still have some recent additions to the recorded catalogue from Angel and London, all featuring piano.

Vladimir Ashkenazy, the former champ of the Wunderkind division, has made a fine recording of Rachmaninoff's Variations on a theme of Corelli, coupled with the "Etudes Tableaux", a set of 9 pieces from the composer's years in Russia dated around 1911. Unless you frequent a lot of piano recitals, this isn't music you're going to hear too often. For a long time this composer has been out of favour with the stuffer musicians, who rejected his works as "too sloppy" or "over-romantic", not at all in keeping with the spirit of the century.

The complaint is easy enough to understand if you look at what else was being written at the time: Le Sacre Du Printemps, that seminal work of the twentieth century, was premiered in 1913; Scriabin's obscure and mystic sonatas were barely born; a young man named Schoenberg was writing some very strange music over in Vienna. Yet here was a composer who dared hide amidst melody and gushing sentiment (as his detractors had him pegged). Only one thing kept the man going — the audiences loved it. Now that the forces of the last decade's avant-garde are sinking in a tidal wave of explanatory essays about their highly theoretical (but none too musical) compositions, there's a visible reaction — here comes the Romantic Revival, gang.

Ashkenazy is very much the professional we've come to know on this disc. The tempos are swift in the fast etudes, but he makes the slow, moody variations shine with all the mastery at his command — and that's a lot. London has provided smooth sonics for this welcome addition to the Repertory. (London CS 6822, $6.98)

Angel has been keeping busy, too. Carrying the headline "In commemoration of the composer's centennial", they present selected preludes from Op. 23 and 32, played by a very able Russian, Sviatoslav Richter. Fans of this pianist will recognize their old keyboard-pounding friend on this disc, since the music is something for a player with tremendous technique and strength to bite into. This contrasts with Richter's last recorded task, Book I of Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier. That recording was phenomenally different from almost every other record Richter had made, and utterly unlike any other recorded version of the 24 preludes and fugues. The sound was distant, soft and altogether dream-like, an astounding break with established practice, and (fortunately) one which worked very well.

This disc, though, brings the slugger back out to the center of the ring with some amazing displays of finger dexterity and speed. The front-cover illustration shows Richter at the keyboard, facing a sheet of music fairly crawling with black notes; the stuff that pianists' nightmares are made of. Again, a flawless performance. Not all the preludes are high-speed romps, of course. But, even the adagio and andante portions demand strong ability for the pianist. Recorded by Melodya in Russia, Angel has gotten a fine performance from one of the age's finest musicians. (Angel/Melodya SR 40235, $6.98)

Finally we come to the concertos, the most popular works Rachmaninoff ever wrote. Whether it was the abundant melody or the sweeping orchestral line that first brought these works into the public's heart is hard to say, but in their relatively short lives they've never really been far from the concert programs and recording studios.

Angel enters the fray with a complete set played by Agustin Anievas a handsome young Mexican-Spanish fellow whose kisser decorates the cover of the three-record box set. We get the four concertos and the popular Rhapsody on a theme of Paganini in strong if slightly stolid renditions. The last-mentioned Rhapsody is the most memorable work of the bunch, based as it is on the infectious theme of Paganini's Caprice No. 24 in A Minor for solo violin. So gripping is this little theme that Liszt, Brahms and others succumbed to the urge to write variations on it.

Rachmaninoff, who was obsessed by thoughts of death for much of his life (the Rhapsody was one of his last works) incorporates the traditional "Dies Irae" theme into the 18th variation, casting a dark pall over the work. Stravinsky called Rachmaninoff "Six feet of Russian gloom", but don't let that put you off this music; it's strong stuff, but immensely enjoyable. The first and fourth concertos aren't as easily approached, but the second and third are masterpieces. It's hard to believe that although last year was the composer's centennial, he's only been gone thirty years. When one thinks of the parade of, twentieth-century composers who have crossed the same path of years, he seems even more a man out of his time. Yet his doom-filled music seemed suited to the times in more ways than one. And, after all, he did smile once in a while as the sparkling end of the Rhapsody does indicate.

The Anievas package has some stiff competition in the shape of Ashkenazy, whose rendition of the same works appeared on London last year. That set had the added advantage of a consistent orchestra and conductor: the very able Andre Previn and the London Symphony Orchestra. Ashkenazy just about tore the ivory off the keys in some of the fast movements, and on the whole displayed a far more exploratory attitude to the music than Anievas does, getting far beneath the surface, which is where I'm afraid to say the latter spends most of his time. Not that Anievas can't handle the music — on the contrary, he's possessed of a fine technique, but he's not quite in Ashkenazy's class just yet.

As well, the Angel set has to make do with three different conductors, with Rafael Fruhbeck de Burghos handling the majority of the music. While an argument can be made for a variety of approaches, the lack of consistency in approach does mar the overall worth of the package. If it's the complete concertos you're after, Ashkenazy is still the one to have.

All in all, a satisfying trio of releases. If RCA can ever be persuaded to get off their backs and come out with a classical record or two, then we might get to hear those remastered Rachmaninoff discs. If you're the complet collector, you can get the five 3-disc packages at the Book Cellar at Yorkville and Avenue Rd., and at a fearsome imported-item price. Happy birthday, Rachmaninoff.

dave basskin

Nipper the wonder dog still looks questioningly at miraculous audio apparatus... or is he just waiting for RCA's Rachmaninoff collection?

Only colour Deep Purple has is sickly green at the gills

Burn

Deep Purple

Warner Brothers/WEA; $6.29

There was a time last fall when it appeared that Deep Purple was going to break up. But lead guitarist Richie Blackmore, drummer Ian Paice and keyboard man Jon Lord chose to persevere, and, after hiring on singer David Coverdale and bassist Glen Hughes, went to work on a new LP. Hoping to revive some of the creative energy found on Machine Head, they headed for Montreux, Switzerland, once again, and the result is Burn.

The addition of new personnel has, in my opinion, weakened the band. It appears that the music of the band and the vocals, instead of complementing each other, are clashing on all but two songs. Further problems are created by limp, and overly pretentious lyrics as well as by the use of riffs and patterns which have appeared on previous Deep Purple records.

The record opens with "Burn"; a song that uses a riff from a previous release by Deep Purple, and has an irritating vocal coupled with the worst lyrics I've ever heard. There is no point to the song, which is stretched out by the inclusion of that worn out stand-by, the extended solo. And if that wasn't enough, then there's always something to make it worse. Not satisfied with one rerun, the band uses the same instrumental structure, beat for beat, from "Smoke on the Water", on a piece of trash called "Might Just Take Your Life".

Side one is filled out by two more message songs weighed down by poor taste and lousy playing. Both "Lay Down, Stay Down", a flaccid example of sexism, and "Sail Away" try to say something but unfortunately, or should it be the other way around, they fall flat on their faces. I get the idea that, somewhere along the way, Deep Purple has either forgotten how to play or that they used other musicians to do their work while they mimed.

The flipside follows the same old pattern, although the musical content does improve, with "You Fool No One" and "What's Goin' On Here", which suffer from the screechy vocals and just never develop into any solid form. I hate to sound repetitive but the lyrics on this record must have been written by someone with an IQ rating of minus fifty. The best song, which really isn't saying much, is "Mistreated" which has a pretty solid vocal, and the band sounds fully awake for once. Although it's well over seven minutes in length, it works out quite well because the words don't get in the way.

The album closes with a whimper as the band goes through the motions on an instrumental track called "A-200", which is representative of the overall concept of the band — lifeless. There doesn't seem to be much sense in beating a dead horse but I get the feeling that Deep Purple has become quite shallow in their musical abilities and the only color they have is a sickly green around the gills. They should take a hint from their own song title and lay down and stay down. So take heed and don't get burned.

serge schardt

Buchanan gave his audience at the Victory Burlesk a stunning array of licks and chops.

Buchanan plays the melancholy blues

The success of guitarist Roy Buchanan is proof of the continued popularity of the blues. It's a weird kind of blues that Buchanan plays, basically authentic, but definitely white blues and quite distinct in some ways from the traditions of the original black blues masters. There is a strangely melancholy cast to many of Buchanan's improvisations that is somehow alien to the spirit of black blues, which usually carries an undertone of humour with it, despite its lamenting character. In any case Buchanan's style is absolutely distinctive and if you have a taste for it, which I do, you're all set.

Roy Buchanan's recent concert for SRO productions gave many examples of the fine points of his playing. As with Rory Gallagher who played the Victory the week before, Buchanan's sound was much more appealing in the excitement and intimacy of live performance in a small hall than it is on record. He took the audience through a stunning array of licks and chops including nifty little things like a peculiar wailing sound Buchanan gets from manipulating his volume control while bending a note, and believe it or not, a fine blues lead done in the finger-picking style of an entirely different tradition. Buchanan was well received by the audience, although it was unfortunate that they often applauded in the middle of the lead solos at certain things that they liked, which would spoil the things that came after.

No less of a "star" than Buchanan is his keyboard man, Dick Heintze. Through two records and the concert I've never heard him play a solo that was less than fascinating. He has a way of taking classical materials (I'm sure he was originally classically trained) and bending them into a blues mold in a totally convincing way. It was a pity that he was mixed down in the sound so much that it was difficult to hear him.

One quarrel that I have with shows like Buchanan's is that they aren't total musical experiences. There's a bass, drums, and singer up there on stage as well as the lead player and the keyboard man. Too often they're used just for filler to back up the "stars" and as a result there is a failure to activate all of the musical possibilities. At Buchanan's concert the bass and drums didn't even get any solo passages. It was a pity.

Buchanan's new album, That's What I Am Here For (Polydor; $7.29) is tasteful blues structured much like his previous two, except that he has hired a vocalist to take over the necessary singing chores, because his voice isn't really suited to blues. On the album vocalist Billy Price is undistinguished, although I got the feeling at the concert that he's capable of much more, but doesn't get the chance for reasons previously mentioned. Of special interest is Buchanan's version of "Hey Joe" which he turns into a paean for Jimi Hendrix, infusing it with appropriate tragic feeling. Buchanan's other attempts at rock'n'roll are less successful, but if you like white blues you'll probably like Roy Buchanan.

nick schmidt

Bloor Concerts
300 BLOOR STREET WEST (AT KENNEDY), TORONTO
CHORUS OF BLOOR STREET UNITED CHURCH WITH ORCHESTRA
CONDUCTOR DONALD A. GILLIES

BLOOR STREET UNITED CHURCH CHOIR
and
EASTMINSTER UNITED CHURCH CHOIR
(Lorna Holmes, Director) present Mass in C by Beethoven

SOLOISTS
MINI GILLIES DORIS PRITCHARD
SHARON MACINTYRE
STEPHEN YOUNG
GLENN GARDINER

ORCHESTRA
CONCERTMASTER JOHN DEMBECK
GUEST ORGANIST DR. GEO BROUGH
CONDUCTOR REV. DONALD GILLIES

At 300 Bloor Street West
Sunday, March 31, 1974 7:30 p.m.

Collection 922-9847

Chargex Accepted * Student Discount

CONTACT LENSES
$79 complete with all fittings & service

SOFT LENSES AVAILABLE

GLASSES
large selection of imported frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.
354 Yonge St. 364-2607

ROUND RECORDS

COME UP AND SEE US SOME TIME.
ONE FLIGHT HIGH AT...
16 BLOOR ST. WEST
924-6555

XEROX
EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY
COPIES

7c EACH
1st thru 5th copies per original

5c EACH
6th thru 10th copies per original

2c EACH
11th and additional copies of the same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes, Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work)

• FREE collating

20%

ALSO AVAILABLE
• CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
• REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE 24 x 36"

college copy shop

76 CHARLES ST. W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-6:00 PM

NOTE
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

THE ENGINEERING SOCIETY PROUDLY PRESENTS ANOTHER CROSS-CAMPUS PARTY

(Octoberf) (JUST A MINUTE,
THAT WAS
LAST OCTOBER)

RITES OF SPRING

MARCH 22-23 8 PM - 1 AM
$2.00 HART HOUSE FREEMUG
REFRESHMENTS WILL BE SERVED

TICKETS AVAILABLE THROUGH THE ENGINEERING STORES, SCARBOROUGH STUDENTS' COUNCIL & S.A.C.

RESULTS OF GOVERNING COUNCIL ELECTIONS

TOTAL VALID BALLOTS CAST - 6,488 DATE: March 15, 1974

Administrative Staff - (one seat) — "Administrative Staff" means the employees of the University, University College, the constituent colleges and the federated universities who are not members of the teaching staff thereof.

Valid Ballots Cast — 1,851	Spoiled Ballots — 11
Candidates votes received:
BEAVEN, E.E.C. 129
BOWLER, K.R. 804 (elected)
MILLAR, D. 254
PARKER, J.H. 664

Full-Time Undergraduate Students — "Full-Time Undergraduate Student" means all students registered at the University in a programme of full-time study who are not registered in the School of Graduate Studies. Students at Scarborough College, for electoral purposes, will be considered full-time if enrolled in four or more courses.

Constituency I — (two seats) — all students registered in the Faculty of Arts and Science, including Erindale College and Scarborough College.

Valid Ballots Cast — 1,831 Spoiled Ballots — 52

Candidates votes received:

FRENCH, S. 1,072 (elected)
JARRETT, J.P. 955 (elected)
STEIN, H. 912

Constituency II — (two seats, one seat acclaimed) — all students registered in the Faculty of Dentistry, Faculty of Food Sciences, Faculty of Medicine, Faculty of Nursing, Faculty of Pharmacy, School of Hygiene, School of Physical and Health Education, Faculty of Education, Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, Faculty of Architecture, Urban and Regional Planning and Landscape Architecture, Faculty of Forestry, Faculty of Law, Faculty of Music, Faculty of Management Studies, Faculty of Social Work (with the condition that both members elected in Constituency II not be registered in the same faculty or school).

Valid Ballots Cast — 876 Spoiled Ballots — 14

Candidates votes received:

MOSES, S. 651 (elected)
RUDDY, T. 225
SHINDMAN, D. - (acclaimed)

Part-Time Undergraduate Students — (two seats)

— "Part-Time Undergraduate Student" means all students registered at the University in a programme of part-time study who are not registered in the School of Graduate Studies. Students at Scarborough College will be considered part-time if enrolled in less than four courses.

Valid Ballots Cast — 987 Spoiled Ballots — 7

Candidates votes received:

DICK, A. 860 (elected)
HEIGHTON, G.A.J. 336
WHELTON, W.J. 427 (elected)

Graduate Students — "Graduate Student" means all students registered in the School of Graduate Studies.

Constituency I — (one seat) — all students in Division I (Humanities) of the School of Graduate Studies; Division II (Social Sciences) of the School of Graduate Studies, with the exception of the Graduate Department of Educational Theory.

Valid Ballots Cast — 382 Spoiled Ballots — 4

Candidates votes received:

HOFFMAN, K. 276 (elected)
PERRY, D.E. 106

Teaching Staff — "Teaching Staff" means the employees of the University, University College, the constituent colleges and the federated universities who hold the academic rank of professor, associate professor, assistant professor, full-time lecturer or part-time lecturer unless such part-time lecturer is registered as a student. ("Lecturer" includes associates and clinical teachers in the Faculty of Medicine, and associates in the Faculty of Dentistry.)

Constituency IA — (one seat) — all teaching staff members who hold their major appointments in the federated universities.

Professor W.B. Dunphy - (acclaimed)

Constituency IE — (one seat) — all teaching staff members in the Faculty of Arts and Science who hold their major appointments in the Departments of Astronomy, Chemistry, Computer Science, Geology, Mathematics, Physics, Botany, Zoology (excluding those who hold their major appointments at Scarborough or Erindale Colleges).

Valid Ballots Cast — 121 Spoiled Ballots — 0

Candidates votes received:

DOVE, J.E. 75 (elected)
PRENTICE, J.D. 46

Constituency II — (one seat) — all teaching staff members in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

Professor H.W. Smith - (acclaimed)

Constituency III — (one seat) — all teaching staff members in the Faculty of Medicine.

Valid Ballots Cast — 440 Spoiled Ballots — 1

Candidates votes received:

THOMPSON, M.W. 317 (elected)
TINKER, D.O. 123

Chomsky's determination to change society before it slides into irreversible barbarism

If the American war against Vietnam had no other positive outcome, it has at least produced a minority of Americans who have the courage to stand against the policies of their government.

Outstanding among these is Noam Chomsky, leading scholar in the field of linguistics, who has contributed some brilliant works of politics and social criticism. His analysis is radical in the best sense of the word: It goes to the root of the barbarism that is engulfing the 'civilized' world. I think it is fair to say that the US has produced no better social critic, although a few, including Paul Goodman, might claim equal stature.

Four of Chomsky's books are available in paperback: American Power and the New Mandarins; At War With Asia; Problems of Knowledge and Freedom; The Russell Lectures; and now his latest, For Reasons of State. In these days of newer, bigger, better and faster, superlatives lose their value, but the fact remains that these are compelling efforts of the highest calibre.

His major pre-occupation has been the war in Vietnam, both the way in which it is being waged, and the repercussions it is having in the US. In prose that is powerful and bitterly ironic, he dissects the nature of the American war effort and the issues involved in the war. With a meticulous attention to fact and details, supported by amazingly extensive footnotes, he documents the fact of American aggression and way it has taken place. If anyone still has any doubt about American guilt in this war, they would do well to put their convictions to the test of Chomsky's arguments. And, of course, all too many people do remain convinced that 'Communist aggression' caused the war. As Chomsky points out, the vast majority of even those who opposed the war did so because of its costs of the US, not because they believed that it was wrong in itself. And few indeed are those who see in the war, not a 'tragic mistake', but a logical outcome of US interests in the world. Again, it is difficult to believe that such views could survive exposure to Chomsky's analysis of American policy-making in the essay 'The Backroom Boys' (in For Reasons of State) — but unfortunately books of this kind don't become best-sellers.

His earlier essay, 'Objectivity and Liberal Scholarship' is an analysis of the thinking of those, especially in the intellectual community, who did so much to make the war effort possible, whether by providing rationalizations of the need to defend the 'Free World' against aggression (including 'internal aggression', which is, as Chomsky puts it, 'an interesting phrase which refers apparently to 'aggression' by a revolutionary movement against a government maintained in power by foreign arms'), by their design of the 'pacification programs' that verge on genocide, or by their proposals for 'ghetto control' back home.

A Skinner box: fitting symbol of B.F. Skinner's behaviourism

Turning his attention to the relationship of intellectuals to social change, he comments, in the course of a valuable discussion of the Spanish Civil War, that 'If it is plausible that ideology will in general serve as a mask for self-interest, then it is a natural presumption that intellectuals, in interpreting history or formulating policy, will tend to adopt an elitist position, condemning popular movements and mass participation in decision-making, and emphasizing rather the necessity for supervision by those who possess the knowledge and understanding that is required (so they claim) to manage society and control social change.'

Among his other contributions is his lengthy essay 'Psychology and Ideology', in which he deals with B.F. Skinner and his behaviourism, and the theories of Richard Herrnstein, who has recently come under extensive attack. Skinner's theories are simply demolished: one cannot help but conclude with Chomsky that Skinner is on all important points either wrong, or presenting trivial tautologies, and that is either case he makes his extravagant claims dogmatically, without proof. (And if this statement is offered here without proof, it is because the matter is too complicated to cover in a short review, a review which in any case is written to encourage you to read the book.)

Herrnstein, he points out, rests his case on the assumption 'that without material reward, people will vegetate. For this crucial assumption, no semblance of an argument is offered.' Rather, Herrnstein merely asserts that if bakers and lumberjacks 'got the top salaries and the top social approval', in the place of those now at the top of the social ladder, then 'the scale of I.Q.'s would also invert, and the most talented would strive to become bakers and lumberjacks... an extremely implausible claim. I doubt very much that Herrnstein would become a baker or a lumberjack if he could earn more money wealth and intelligence fails to take into account, among other things, the fact that qualities such as greed are often rewarded more than intelligence or imagination (producing a strange kind of hierarchy of 'merit'), or that the present way of structuring society is not the only one.

There is a great danger in the attempts to scholars such as Herrnstein to prove correlations between IQ and colour. Chomsky notes. It is possible to find correlations between any two factors, say height and intelligence, or eye colour and wealth, but only racists and others who want to discriminate against one group or another will be interested in general correlations that have no bearing on individual cases. For example, it is possible that people over six feet tall might on the average have somewhat higher IQ's than people under six feet tall. This does not mean, however, that any given tall individual will have a higher IQ than some given shorter individual, and no one would propose a meritocracy of the tall. Yet some intellectuals are quite prepared to make racist proposals on the grounds that blacks allegedly have lower average IQ's than whites. (The IQ, of course, does not measure intelligence, at any rate, although it comes close to measuring how much the education and culture of the person taking the test resembles the education and culture of the person setting the test — if factors such as nervousness or aptitude for answering short-answer tests are ignored.)

The argument, often used by scholars involved in such studies, that they are not racists, but simply trying to answer 'scientific questions', would be similar, says Chomsky, to 'a psychologist in Hitler's Germany who thought he could show that Jews had a genetically determined tendency towards usury (like squirrels bred to collect too many nuts) or a drive towards antisocial conspiracy and domination, and so on... Were this hypothetical psychologist to disregard the likely social consequences of his research (or even his undertaking of research) under existing social conditions, he would fully deserve the contempt of decent people.'

At a time when so many of the academic community are degrading both themselves and scientific enquiry, it is heartening to see a man like Chomsky, who combines scientific rigour with libertarian convictions and a deep determination to change society before it slides into irreversible barbarism.

For Reasons of State;
by Noam Chomsky
Vintage $3.45.

ulli diemer

that way."

Chomsky points out that arguments that society tends to produce a 'meritocracy' of

The Vietnam war, a logical outcome of US interests in the world.

Trotsky and the 'vanguard party'

Trotskyists, for those uninitiated into the sometimes confusing and special world of left-wing politics, are followers of (naturally enough) Leon Trotsky, the man who with Lenin was a principal leader of the Russian Revolution, and who opposed the policies of Josef Stalin. Stalin, of course, was able to gain control of the Soviet state after Lenin's death, while Trotsky was driven out of the country and eventually murdered.

The result has been that the ideas of the Trotskyists (called Trotskyites by the Moscow-oriented Communist Parties and by the Maoists, the label being a term of abuse that is supposed to signify that Trotsky's ideas don't qualify as a coherent system of thought, as an -ism) have often been misunderstood or deliberately distorted.

It is only relatively recently that the writings of Trotsky and other Trotskyists have become widely and inexpensively available in English, and particularly in Canada. The widespread availability of Trotskyist materials and history in Canada now is due primarily to the establishment of Pathfinder Press in Toronto, which is dedicated to their dissemination and is pursuing an ambitious publication schedule to achieve it.

Still, the activities of 'the Trots' are fairly familiar to students on many Canadian university campuses; at U of T, they have been an institution for a number of years, with their candidacies for SAC elections, (two years ago they were almost acclaimed by default), their literature tables, their Vietnam demonstrations, and their call to "Repeal the Abortion Laws" campaigns to name only a few.

Given their long history, and wide range of practice (as well as their amazing variety of different sub-groups), this review will necessarily be brief and general, trying only to discuss some of the fundamental assumptions, theories, and approaches of this political current.

The story begins with the founding, by Leon Trotsky, after his expulsion from the Soviet Union, of what was called the Fourth International, which saw itself as the legitimate successor to the Third International (the Comintern), founded by Lenin, and destroyed by Stalin. This Fourth, or Trotskyist International, was to be the world-wide organization to which local Trotskyist parties would adhere.

However, the Trotskyist organizations, tiny to begin with, almost immediately began to display a tendency to disagree among themselves, and to split into even tinier rival factions and groups, each claiming to be the only true interpreter of Marx, Lenin, and Trotsky. As a result, in addition to the official Fourth International parties, there grew up (and continue to exist) a swarm of other Trotskyist groups, all claiming to be the nucleus of the vanguard party.

In Canada, for example, the official Trotskyist organization split only last month, and, in addition, there are at least four or five other groups calling themselves Trotskyist.

Nevertheless, out of this confusion, it is possible to draw some conclusions about at least the major currents of Trotskyism.

One of the main common assumptions is the Leninist theory of the vanguard party. Most Trotskyists accept Lenin's assertion, in What Is To Be Done, that the working class by itself could never go beyond 'trade union consciousness', or strictly economic interests, that revolutionary consciousness would have to be brought to it from the outside by socialist intellectuals organized in a vanguard party. If workers were to join the party, said Lenin, they would do so as intellectuals who happened to be workers. He insisted on a small rigidly-centralized and disciplined party as the only way to act effectively, and the only way to prevent opportunism and deviation in the ranks.

Significantly, he was unable to find any support in the writings of Marx and Engels for his views (they had often expressed contrary opinions). He did, however, support his arguments with copious quotations from the writings of Karl Kautsky, a German theoretician who shortly afterward was to come to reformist conclusions that Lenin and others denounced. Significantly, however, Lenin saw no need to repudiate Kautsky's theories about consciousness, while Kautsky also found it unnecessary to change them when he declared himself a reformist.

Lenin's own views were to undergo some significant changes, although he never again published a systematic work on organization and consciousness, with the result that some very different tendencies have laid claim to the label "Leninist", using different quotations to support their case.

Many of his 'followers', unfortunately, have ignored his warning that What Is To Be Done belonged to a different historical period, and should not be taken as a general theory of the party and of organization. It was this which his critic Rosa Luxemburg understood more fully when she warned that one of the main dangers of Lenin's and Trotsky's theories was that they threatened to make a necessity (dictated by special and backward conditions in Russia) into a virtue.

Trotskyists in particular have tended to fetishize what they believe is Leninism, and have displayed a remarkable inability to understand objections to their version of the 'vanguard party'. Even as well-known an intellectual as Ernest Mandel, for 25 years the leading theoretician of the Fourth International, retreats into caricature and distortion when dealing with critics of Lenin such as Rosa Luxemburg. Mandel invents a straw man that he labels 'spontaneism' — roughly the idea that revolution will happen spontaneously — which he then proceeds to 'demolish', he ignores the fact that none of those he pretends to be arguing against hold such a view, or anything remotely approaching it. In the hands of Mandel (whose stature as an intellectual is considerably overrated, to be sure) and the Trotskyists, a serious debate over the form that a revolutionary party should take, over the relationship between the party and the working class, over the relationship between organization and spontaneity, degenerates into the assertion — made without proof — that Leninism is the only alternative to anarchism. And that's a proposition that Luxemburg, a severe critic of anarchism as well as of Lenin, would not have taken too kindly to.

Beyond this, one of the main problems with the Trotskyist theory of the vanguard party is that it fails to understand that Lenin evolved his theories under very particular historical circumstances. He wrote for czarist Russia, where any socialist party was illegal, and where the majority of the population was peasant, which made the tasks of the working class in leading the revolution much different than they would be in a modern urbanized country. The working class itself was poorly educated and in fact largely illiterate — the problems of achieving 'consciousness' were therefore significantly different than in a situation where universal education and literacy exist. In such circumstances, the Bolsheviks were of necessity a small minority in the population, and had to play a different role from that of a mass party. Certainly Lenin himself never conceived of a vanguard party numbering in the millions, as the Communist parties of Europe now do.

Lenin's theory also differs markedly from Marx's concept of the self-emancipation of the working class. For Lenin, the proletariat, unable to develop its own consciousness and unable to form its own revolutionary organization, must be led by revolutionary bourgeois intellectuals. The working class therefore becomes the object and not the subject of history.

Critics have pointed out that what is at issue is not the incontestable fact that intellectuals have formulated ideas — obviously, any socialist since Marx has learned from him, for example — but whether this means that a division between people with different 'levels of consciousness' should be institutionalized, or whether structures should be set up that seek to overcome these differences. It is a question of which organizational forms best contribute to interaction and action.

Ever since Trotsky founded the Fourth International, the groups following him have tended to factionalism, each claiming to be the one true vanguard.

Trotskyists, for example, hold their policy debates in secret, so that the masses will be exposed only rather than be confused by seeing debate take place publicly and by being exposed to different positions on a question. This reflects a theory of consciousness radically opposed to Luxemburg's insistence that only through the widest possible public discussion and involvement in political questions would people be able to raise their consciousness. And since any revolutionary organization worth its salt is infiltrated by the police, the practice of not revealing debates in public means that the police know more about the workings of the vanguard party than does the working class.

And, of course, the insistence on having centralized authority at the top to guard against the less well-educated members of the party taking incorrect positions, ignores the ancient problem: who guards the guardians? In countless cases in the past, it has been the leadership that has taken organizations down the garden path over the protests of much of the rank and file. In any situation where some people know more than others, there will be leadership roles and therefore a danger of bureaucracy. The Leninist-Trotskyist conception of the party, however, with its centralization and institutionalization of leadership roles, increases the danger of the result of bureaucracy more than is necessary. Is it merely coincidence, or the result of external conditions, that all large parties based on the Kautsky-Lenin theory of consciousness, or the Leninist model of organization, whether they be social-democratic, Stalinist, Maoist (or the only large Trotskyist party ever to exist — the Ceylonese), have all become bureaucratic and conservative?

With its arbitrary and formal divisions between leaders and led, this kind of party becomes a divisive influence in the working class, and often a brake on spontaneous upsurges from outside the party. To a great extent, it represents an attempt to provide organizational solutions to political problems. The party becomes inbred, and increasingly isolated from the masses it tries to reach and represent.

The examples of this are innumerable. Those who have been active in student politics will be aware that Trotskyists are almost invariably considered outsiders in struggles, people who are trying to push their predetermined 'correct line' on others.

The same picture is frequently evident to anyone who has participated in labour struggles. The members of vanguard parties are considered people who are not part of the working class, but rather people who have separate and special interests of their own. When members of these organizations are elected to represent workers in unions, it is generally with the belief that despite their affiliations, they can be trusted to represent the general interests of workers rather than their own special interests. While the characterization is often unfair, the point is that the peculiar institutional forms of the vanguard party tend to breed these perceptions among workers and students, and thereby greatly hinder their political effectiveness.

Too often the Leninist party is blind to the effects of its acting as 'the vanguard of the working class' without the support of the working class itself. For example, last year, Toronto Trotskyists sponsored a Many Day March, featuring all of 65 people marching down Yonge Street on a Saturday afternoon, chanting slogans and waving red flags. Any sensible worker who participated in this farce would have been demoralized, if not by the size of the march alone, then by the portrayal of the left as a band of loonies, competing with Hare Krishnas and Jesus Freaks from sidewalk space, while thousands of working class shoppers stopped and gaped. Yet the organizers of the march wouldn't dream of thinking that there might be a qualitative difference, not just a quantitative one, between such a parade and one of 10,000. The party comes to see its actions as a substitute for those of the working class.

These problems are largely rooted in the Trotskyists' mechanistic conception of consciousness and of revolution. For instance, the 'economic' and the 'political' are seen as different spheres and different levels of consciousness, the one coming after the other. Or, for example, the "masses" purportedly progress from action to experience, while the "advanced" workers progress from experience to consciousness to action — a rigid schema it there ever was one.

So the crucial thing for a party to do, according to the Trotskyists, is to find the correct" slogans and demands, which will set the revolutionary process in motion. It's a model that has more in common with eighteenth-century physics than with Marxism.

Unfortunately (or fortunately) the schema doesn't correspond to reality. For example, workers showed themselves quite capable of evolving political and revolutionary consciousness and forms of organization on their own in any number of situations, from the English Chartists to the Hungarians in 1956 to the Cubans in 1959 to the French in 1968. The Trotskyist argument that there were 'advanced workers' around to lead the others is not only frequently untrue, but irrelevant, since Lenin's proposition wasn't the truism that people with less knowledge tend to learn from people who have more or that some sometimes act as leaders, but, much more: that only intellectuals organized in a vanguard party could bring about such consciousness and provide such leadership.

that of the proletariat which is not but over the proletariat — the "degenerated workers' state" — would seem to be a contradiction in terms — and all the more so in countries like Poland where the workers never seized power. Together with the insistence that bureaucracy poisoned the Russian Revolution — useful as an observation, but hardly an explanation of the fundamental question of the dynamic of the system, of what caused the bureaucracy — the concept seems a way of avoiding analysis of Russian society.

Of course, the question is not primarily the academic one of whether Russia should be considered a state capitalist country or a workers' state, but rather the political roots and implications of these views. And here, the willingness of the Trotskyists to defend Russia as a workers' state calls their entire conception of revolution into question.

Trotsky's own record is illuminating in this regard: he considered it entirely ding that it is important to relate to unions since so many workers belong to them, degenerates into endless (and generally fruitless) attempts to take them over, while much of the rank and file reject unions as tools of their bosses. A tactic becomes a strategy, and greatly reduces the potential and variety of political work in the workplace.

When they act on their own, the Trotskyist organizations seem to move to either one of the extreme poles of reformism and ultra-leftism. Of the two main Canadian groups, for example, the one the League for Socialist Action (LSA) and its youth wing, the Young Socialists (YS), organizes for years around single-issue reformist slogans that are never integrated into an overall strategic perspective, such as "Withdraw U.S. Troops" or "Repeal Abortion Laws".

The other, the Revolutionary Marxist Group (RMG) organizes around such 'realistic' transitional demands as "Oust the Generals — Workers to Power" (for Trotskyists on the U of T campus have been active in abortion demonstrations, Vietnam protests and student politics.

Mandel also argues that since revolutionary organizations formed by the coming together of local base groups from below, (advocated by many European revolutionaries as the way to build a party) have been unable to seize power in, say, Italy in 1969, that therefore they are unviable. But of course, Trotskyist parties have been similarly unsuccessful for 40 years; so by the same token they must be all the more unviable.

What is also interesting is the attitudes of the Trotskyists to Russia, which they insist is a "degenerated workers' state", in which the bureaucracy has to be thrown out of power, but which is nevertheless superior to capitalism. The Reason that it is considered a superior system (transitional to socialism) is that property (factories, mines, etc.) is no longer privately owned, and that the state plans the economy.

This idea would seem to be in violation of the Marxist position that economic relations are relations between people, not legal relations or relations between things, that a boss-worker relation remains that, whether or not the state formally owns the factory, or whether government bureaucrats plan the economy. In fact, the only essential difference between Soviet bloc countries and the private property countries would seem to be that instead of many capitalists, only one, the state, owns the economy. And both planning and state ownership are of course increasingly common phenomena in the West as well.

The concept of a workers' state itself, whether degenerated, deformed, or otherwise, is rather dubious. Marx's concept of the dictatorship of the proletariat was seen as a stage transitional between capitalism and socialism. But a dic-acceptable for workers' state to be ruled by the party on behalf of the workers', participated in the crushing of the workers' and sailors' rising at Kronstadt, advocated the militarization of trade unions, and insisted on the necessity of one-man management in industry rather than workers' control. Indeed, one of Stalin's most telling points against Trotsky's charges of bureaucracy was to point out that Trotsky himself was known as 'the patriarch of the bureaucrats'.

In the West, the Trotskyist strategy often hinges on their attitude to the "workers' parties" such as the Canadian NDP, the tactic generally being one of infiltration. Publicly, they advocate more socialist policies for these social democratic parties; although privately they more realistically hope to recruit the best people within them and leave at a future date. But unfortunately the tactic often becomes the entire perspective. Thus, in 1938, the Canadian Trotskyists resolved to "continue to concentrate their main efforts on work within the CCF, with a view to climaxing their activities by a complete programmatic and political fight at or around the national fall convention of the CCF, with a perspective of completing the experience within this declining reformist organization." Some 36 years later, the perspective remains the same, and the work within the NDP continues unabated. Of course, there have been rewards: the membership has approximately doubled from the 1938 total of 75. And who knows what rightward shifts might not have occurred in NDP policy if it were not for the work of this vigilant minority?

A similar tactic is adopted in the unions: demand more left-wing politics from the leadership, while trying to take the unions over. Here again, the correct understand-

Chile; "Only One Solution — Revolution" (for Quebec); and "For a Red Middle East". Predictably enough, its main orientation is to recruiting other leftists and students — mass work can wait, although occasional attempts, such as selling a newspaper filled with heavily theoretical and rhetorical articles to middle-class movie audiences, are made.

For all Trotskyist strains, the general practice seems to be to concentrate on a few selected issues — generally economic demands or third world solidarity — with the result that other crucial areas are neglected. Moreover their work makes it doubly difficult to interest ordinary men and women in socialist ideas and action.

A variant of this problem, this inability to evolve a strategy that takes into account the nature of the working class and other specific circumstances, was once debated under the label of "The Americanization of Bolshevism", when some Trotskyists became concerned that their party was working from models adopted from different times and places arbitrarily transplanted to the North American context, instead of rooting itself in its concrete situation. Evidently, it's a battle that has not yet been won in the Fourth International.

Documents of the Fourth International: The Formative Years; Pathfinder, $4.75.

The History of American Trotskyism; James P. Cannon; Pathfinder, $3.45.

Notebook of an Agitator; James P. Cannon; Pathfinder, $3.95

Ernest Mandel: The Leninist Theory of Organization: Its Relevance for Today; from International Socialist Review.

Wat'sup

movies

Tonight, for one night only, the Roxy is showing Fritz the Cat and Mondo Cane. Meanwhile, the Coronet opens Wanda, The Sadistic Hypnotist and The Filthiest Show in Town. At the Eve, The Affairs of Aphrodite and Who Killed Cock Robin continue. At the Eden, the sister theatre to the Eve, it's Last Tango in Acapulco and a companion feature. Two companion featurettes accompany There was a Little Girl at Cinema 2000. Little girls are also featured in The Exorcist at The University. Meanwhile there are three features at the Rio, Love Pili, The Italian Connection and Fire Creek. All of the above programmes, with the exception of the Roxy's, run through the week.

The Roxy, however, will present Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid and Heavy Traffic on Saturday, Cherry, Harry and Rachel, Mud-Honey, Vixen and How Much Loving Does a Normal Couple Need on Monday, Midnight Cowboy and A Streetcar Named Desire Tuesday and Wednesday, and Shame and The Passion of Anna on Thursday.

From Wednesday on, The Revue adds The Devils and A Clockwork Orange. Neither Wee Georgie nor The Projectionist will be shown this week.

bb

classical

Hi, there, O sweating nubbles!

With the rigors of crush-time upon you, music may be the last thing on your mind, but musicians gotta work, too! With the TSO gone and ballet and opera companies cleared out it falls on the shoulders of our very own local artists to produce soothing sounds for the excruciating exam/essay epoch encroaching on everyone's existence. By the way, did you know that Richard Wagner subscribed to virulent anti-semitic principles all his life? Are you listening, SDS? Surely you're not going to allow a racist to have his vile trash perpetrated on this campus! You just march right over to the opera school and demand that the singers stop learning his operas! Don't muck around—show 'em who's boss!

Back in reality-land, the faculty's own stars give recital right and left this week: today at 1:15 pm Jeffrey Wall, violin and Patricia Gray, piano share the stage, with flautist Elizabeth McBurney coming in for the 8:15 pm show. Monday sees three recitals: soprano Sharon Ionita at 1:15 pm, Yoon Chang, violin at 5:15 pm and Michael Perrault on the new organ at 8:15. Tuesday: James Spragg and Len Hanna at 1:15 pm on trumpets, soprano Marta Middleton at 5:15 pm and pianist Karen LaPointe at 8:15 pm. Last of the week on Wednesday—Jane Solose giving a Harpsichord concert at 1:15 pm and soprano Kim Rogers at 8:15 pm. All the above recitals are free, and no tickets are required. They're all in Walter (formerly the Concert) Hall of the Edward Johnson Building.

The reason yr. obt. svt. yaks about them so much is that these aren't today's concert stars, but they may well be tomorrow's. More than one internationally famous musician has come up through the faculty tutelage. Seeing these concerts is seeing Canadian music in action, as well as being the best lunchtime entertainment on campus, even if you have lunch at 8:15 pm in the Concert Hall.

*Nuff said.

Honest-to-goodness stars do come to our fair campus, though: Harpsichordist Igor Kipnis makes one of his infrequent visits Thursday night. There may be a few tickets left for this recital of Bach and other composers (details not available at press time, changed from the original all-Bach program) Regardless of what he plays, this brilliant American musician is a delight to hear, as his recordings show.

Word comes from those eager-beavers at the Canadian Opera Company: they've lined up a huge program for next season, and while it isn't quite box-office time yet (although the subscription forms are in the mail already!) the lineup deserves mention: a double bill of Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle" and Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnol"; Wagner's "Flying Dutchman"; Bizet's "Carmen"; Gounod's "Faust" and "Boris Gudonov" by Mussorgsky. William Wilder-

Cinema buffs of every persuasion are breathless with anticipation as they wait for the Toronto premiere of Wanda, The Sadistic Hypnotist this week.

mann, the star of last season's "Fidelio" and "Gotterdammerung" makes a welcome return.

books

Those interested in the history of Toronto to politics, especially reform politics, should have a look at Desmond Morton's slim volume Mayor Howland: The Citizen's Candidate; Hakkert; $1.95. It's the story of William Howland, Mayor of Toronto from 1886 to 1888, the man who fought corruption in the civic administration, backed Toronto's street railway men when they went on strike, and created our city's morality squad as part of his campaign against drink and other sins, and in process making Toronto the Good a leader in the institution of blue laws.

Morton's book is quite entertaining and at the same time gives a good picture of at least some aspects of Toronto social life in the 1880's. And it's well illustrated with cartoons from Bengough, who used to live up our Canadian history texts in high school. Morton has produced a piece of popular history that is as readable as it is instructive, so hopefully it will have a good sale.

From B.C., there's Martin Robin's controversial Pillars of Profit: The Company Province 1934-1972 (McClelland & Stewart, $12.95), the successor to his Rush for Spoils. Critics have alternately damned and praised his interpretation of British Columbia history. It would seem that his record of the exploitation of British Columbia, the machinations of power, the opposition from labour and socialists, is fundamentally correct, although not free from factual error. Certainly it is an important effort in the interpretation of B.C. history, and needs to be taken into account as a valuable contribution. The book is anything but academic in its style (although there are extensive footnotes and references) and it's lively and exciting, as well as enlightening. This is despite (or may be because of) Robin's writing style, which is very difficult to describe, but which is, well — odd. Like: "John Hart was enamoured of reckoning and figuring" or "When John Diefenbaker, who perceived the path of immortality to lead to Washington, flew to the White House..." But it's still a worthwhile book; in fact, the prose is often as entertaining as the content of the narrative.

Ecology is a big fad these days, with the result that our shelves are being polluted by an ever-increasing pile of books on the topic. One that isn't worth bothering with is Ecotactics: The Sierra Club Handbook for Environment Activists edited by John G. Mitchell, with an introduction by (who else?) Ralph Nader; Simon & Schuster; 95¢. The problem is important of course, but there are other books that discuss the questions more incisively, and provide a better understanding of political and technological alternatives. The emphasis is on personal solutions (put bricks in your toilet water tank so you'll use less water) legislative pressure (write letters to your congressman) and the rinky-dinkiest of rinky-dinky "from-the-group-up action" (believe it or not, "environment stamps" to paste into little books to save America).

theatre

"With Rudolf Nureyev gone, the hottest ticket in town is for Tubstrip," says one Toronto reviewer. Tubstrip, a play about nine homosexuals and the night they let it all out in a steam bath, continues next week at the Global Village. Also showing after the Varsity ceases publication for the year (alas) are such blue-chip goodies as Waiting For Godot at the Central Library Theatre, Arms and the Man at the Colonnade Theatre and Old Times at the Firehall Theatre. Old Times is Harold Pinter's latest play. Its strange triangle concerns two women who meet after a separation of twenty years but one of them now has a husband. As the three reminisce about old times, their memories, vivid but often contradictory, reveal layer after layer of private personality and the mystery at the heart of this bizarre triangle.

Opening March 27 at the Toronto Centre for the Arts (390 Dupont Street) is a production of E.A. Whitehead's The Foursome. The play concerns itself with young people caught in a trap created by their own sexual games. Another new show and yet another new theatre, the Red Light Theatre, open April 3, with a play called Entrances. Red Light Theatre, the second women's theatre group launched recently, presents a two-woman show based on anecdotes revolving around the professional and private lives of Sarah Bernhardt and Eleonora Duse. The theatre is in the Matador Club at Dovercourt Road and College Street.

Marsh Hay, Merrill Denison's play about the frustrated lives of people bound together in the claustrophobic Ottawa valley farming society, opened last night at Hart House Theatre and continues until March 30. The play is part of a special Canadian Theatre celebration and exploration being co-sponsored by the Graduate Drama Centre and York University's Faculty of Fine Arts. Lectures on Theatre in French Canada and Amateur Theatre take place at 10:00 am and 11:30 am today in Hart House Theatre and a lecture on Radio Drama is being held in Curtis Lecture Hall H at 3:00 pm on the York campus. Call the Drama Centre for further information at 928-2092.

On campus today at the UC Playhouse is a play called Arkansas by David Aiken. It is being presented by the Victoria College Drama Club. Showtime is 1:15 and admission is free.

ss

rock

Jerry Jeff Walker is back in town again, this time with his "eight piece Texas Band". He'll be putting on two shows Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights at Mackenzie's Corner House, 620 Church at Charles. Check out the cover charge by calling 922-6954, and expect it to be around $4. Another very welcome return visitor is Jesse Winchester who opens on Tuesday.

Framptons Camel featuring the vocals and guitar of Peter Frampton play The Victory tomorrow night. Their second LP was one of the most tasteful, and well played of any that came out last year, so this performance could be most entertaining. There are two shows scheduled, at 8 and 11 pm, and tickets are $4.50 plus tax.

Blue guitarist, B.B. King is at the O'Keefe Centre next week beginning on Monday. Actually King is a secondary attraction in the Gladys Knight and the Pips show. Dogged fans will have to fork over anywhere from $3.50 to $8 for evening show tickets. Matinee prices are slightly cheaper.

If you haven't had a chance to see String-band yet you might consider visiting them at Fiddler's Green Coffeehouse tonight. Fiddler's is behind the Y on Eglinton east of Yonge Street (across from the York theatres). Tuesday's performer is John Thibodeau.

Gordon Lightfoot is at Massey Hall every night this weekend until Monday. It's officially sold out but you might try the box office for cancellations.

am

soup

The other night in University College Playhouse I noticed a death notice on the wall for Kafé Kafka. It was brief and witty, not unlike Kafka's old Here And Now notices. But Kafka requires more than a paragraph summation.

Kafé Kafka hosted some of the most visceral confrontations that I've witnessed. Perhaps some nights were embarrassing for the staff, but some contained deathwatch performances. From the brilliantly original violin of David Seiwel to the clownishly primal "Tommy" of Michael Morganfield and the chase between singer Brona Brown and spider Giza Kovacs, Kafka offered entertainment for the whole hall.

Confrontations between philosophical attitudes were unfortunately common at Kafé Kafka. In blurring the distinction between non-performance and performance, Kafka eventually lost the distinction and had to be buried.

But most of Kafé Kafka was genuinely living. And while there were physical excursions in the spirit of Antonin Artaud, there were silences in the tradition of Beckett and Pinter. I can only hope Kafka's staff finds another space. They need it.

dauid stinson

review

editor
art books movies classical rock
theatre production

tom walkom
david wise
ulfi diemer
bob bossin
david basskin
allan mandell
sandra soucotte
gene allen

You missed a great dinner!

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

The annual athletic dinner got off to a bad start Wednesday night when a young waitress poured wine into Paul Carson's already full water glass.

The evening was saved though when Carson smiled weakly at the flustered waitress and pretended he would drink it anyway.

Carson and the approximately 275 other athletes, coaches, and guests then waded into a menu of chilled fruit cup, pot roast, mashed potatoes, celery sticks and what the caterer called "minted green peas". Coffee and pie were offered to the survivors.

Before the meal with a great scraping of chairs, the assemblage lurched to its feet to drink a heartfelt toast to the Queen with what was left of the Andres domestic red wine.

During the meal, and in fact, for most of the evening, the 20 odd (literally) members of the rugby team caroused, swore and sang loud songs. These mostly concerned the sort of indignities women should cheerfully submit themselves to at the hands of rugby players.

Later they pranced up to the stage in the Great Hall and acted out their version of "Old McDonald had a farm". This dramatic skit, no doubt well-rehearsed, seemed to be a flimsy pretext under which the players could publically pinch each other's bottoms and generally improve their presumably dismal sex life. Otherwise, it was pretty bush-league.

Having safely outlasted this bawdy rite and the meal, the diners settled into their seats to watch the Academy Awards-like presentation of the various trophies. These meandered on for a pleasant 35 minutes or so.

Now the sportsmen faced their toughest test of the year. Having

Trophies awarded

At the annual athletic banquet, held at the Great Hall on March 20, Colors, Bronze T's and Awards were presented to outstanding sportsmen of the U of T.

The Johnny Copp Memorial Trophy for football was awarded to Corradino Doret. David Watt won the George M. Biggs Trophy for contributing most to university athletics while an undergraduate.

Warren Anderson received the Dr. Bill Dafeo Trophy as the most deserving member of the senior hockey team. In basketball, the Dr. W.A. Potter Trophy was won by Randy Filinski. Most valuable soccer player, the Charles E. Oster Trophy, was a joint award to Vincent Ierullo and Robert Judd.

The Bickle Award for swimming went to James Adams. Most valuable water polo team member, A. Tap Avasalmi won the Senator David Walker Trophy.

Dr. G. E. Wodehouse was presented the Thomas R. Loudon Award, "for outstanding services in the advancement of athletics."

Rob Moore won the wrestling trophy: the Kirk Wipper Trophy. In golf, the Caplan trophy went to John Bays.

The Sidney Earle Smith Trophy, for the student who has contributed most to intramural sports, was won by Michael J. Friend, a leonine wonder.

Study in Europe this Summer

The University of British Columbia
Directed Study Abroad
May — August 1974

Courses are under direct on of faculty from the University of British Columbia and may be taken for appropriate University credit. Non-credit participants are also welcome

LONDON

Western Art Since 1800 (Fine Arts 397) — May 24 to June 28
The modern tradition in western art from 1800 to the present

FLORENCE

Art of the Renaissance (Fine Arts 397) — May 19 to June 27
The art and architecture of Florence and surrounding areas from the 14th to the 16th century

PARIS

Historical Techniques (Fine Arts 397) — July 2 to August 16
A study of materials and techniques with emphasis on mosaics, stain glass and enamelling in Paris and surrounding areas, followed by an intensive two-week studio course at UBC

LONDON AND STRATFORD-UPON-AVON

Shakespeare (English 365) — July 9 to August 8
Lectures, seminars and theatre performances in London and Stratford-upon-Avon, in cooperation with the Shakespeare Institute of the University of Birmingham

ENGLAND

Physical Education — July 4 to August 24
Current practices in physical education, recreation and sports in England
For detailed information and applications for registration, please write to

Directed Studies Abroad
Centre for Continuing Education,
The University of British Columbia,
Vancouver, B.C. V6T 1W5

contact
lenses

The ultimate in comfort and freedom.

Shurvey's
OPTICIANS

70 BLOOR ST. W.
4 OTHER LOCATIONS IN TORONTO
SEE YOUR YELLOW PAGES

spent an hour gambolling at the pre-game bar, having chewed and fought their way through a man-sized meal with wine, and having tried to maintain interest in the drawnout trophy presentations, the assembled drew upon their last reserves of stamina to listen to Ken Dryden.

He tested them severely with a sonorous lawyerly discourse on a possible rematch between Russia and Canada and the problems Bunny Ahearn was giving it. He also rehearsed the question of amateurism and defended expansion by the NHL among other subjects.

The volleyball team, (a precursor of Consciousness III?) soon lost interest in the proceedings and started their own conversation, at times having to shout to make themselves heard over Dryden. For the most part they were successful, and much valuable information was doubtlessly exchanged.

Dryden, sensing he was faring badly, cut short his remarks and tried to revive the proceedings by taking questions from the floor. This venture was also largely unsuccessful and mercifully the chairman drew the evening to a close.

Look for an editorial on this subject in next Friday's Varsity.

The Varsity — Bill Dowles

What a Friend we have in — Jezus, it's Mike!

Hart House Music at Equinox Art for heart's sake

When I behold, upon the night's starred face,
Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
And think that I may never live to trace
Their shadows, with the magic hand of chance;
And when I feel, fair creature of an hour,
That I shall never look upon thee more,
Never have relish in the faery power
Of unreflecting love: - then on the shore
Of the wide world I stand alone, and think
Till Love and Fame to nothingness do sink.

Faculty of Music Brass Choir and String Quartet Tuesday at eight

THE WORD IS YOU ARE GOING TO JOIN US
AT HART HOUSE FOR

EQUINOX TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1974

READ ALL ABOUT THE EVENING'S EXCITING EVENTS

6:30 p.m.

La Federation Des Cooperatives du Nouveau Quebec Exhibit — Canadian
Eskimo and Indian crafts

Camera Club displays prize winning photographs from the 52nd. Annual Exhibition.

Archery Club: Intra-Club Tournament with a prize for best bare bow

7:00 p.m.

Hart House Chorus Concert — a selection of Canadian folksongs

Woodsmen Demonstrations

Chess Club "simul". Committee members will challenge enthusiasts.
Yoga Demonstration

7:30 p.m.

Concert — U. of T. Faculty of Music's
"String Quartet"

"Garbage", U. of T. Film Board's
production.

The Bridge Club will set up tables so you can earn some ACBL points.

8:00 p.m.

First of three tours of the Hart House
Art Collection

Art Class for the absolute and utter beginner. Directed by a famous artist.

The Library Committee presents an evening with Mr. Marshall McLuhan.
Admittance by ticket only.

Debate: "Behind every mediocre woman is a man". Honorary visitor: Laura Sabia - Chairman of the Advisory Council of the Status of Woman.

8:30 p.m.

Lacrosse Game

Concert featuring U. of T. Faculty of Music's Brass Choir. A resounding musical experience.

10:00 p.m.

DANCE to the rhythms of a six piece steel band "Syncona". Calypso, Jamaican rag and soul music. Refreshment available in the Lower Gallery.

NOTE: Food Services hours are extended for EQUINOX.

SMC FILM CLUB PRESENTS

"A STYLISH COMEDY THAT IS BRILLIANT AND IMAGINATIVE!" — Rex Reed, Chicago Tribune
— New York News Syndicate

"O'TOOLE IS FUNNY, DISTURBING, DEVASTATING!"
— Jay Cocks, Time Magazine

"A BRILLIANT FILM
— STUNNING!"
— Judith Crist,
New York Magazine

JOSEPH E. LEVINE PRESENTS
A BARRY LEVINE PRODUCTION
FOR KEEPER FILMS LTD.
PETER OTTOLE
ALASTAIR SIM
ARTHUR LOWE

THE RULING CLASS
IN COLOR AN AVCO EMBASSY RELEASE

FRIDAY MARCH 22
SATURDAY MARCH 23 $1.00
7:00 & 10:00 P.M. - CARR HALL

Intermediate hockey playoffs

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

The intermediate hockey playoffs got underway March 6 with 32 teams competing for the championship but that number has been considerably whittled down since then.

In the opening game, Skule 775 met their Armageddon and a 13-0 defeat at the bloody hands of Emmanuel. The righteous were led by Miller with a hat-trick while Hancock, McDonald and McKenzie all added two goals.

Mighton's shutout and five goals from Owsicki were presumably the deciding factors in Vic IV's 8-0 scalping of Chem IV.

New III's season abruptly ended when they lost a 2-1 squeaker to Law IV. The winner's goals came from the sticks of Clarke and McCann while no one seems to know who scored for New.

PHE C spread its scoring among six different players as they battered III Chem 7-1 and proceeded further into the intermediate playoff labyrinth.

Med F got a goal from Dubinsky and another from Onrot, which might have been enough to win had Scar III only scored one goal instead of 13. (We're not going to give you all the names — the Varsity doesn't publicize such acts of butchery.)

Zimmerman notched two goals and Markle added another as Vic V destroyed Eng NY 15-1.

Another Vic horde, the 8-5's, trampled over Trin B 4-2. Partridge deserved a pear tree after scoring a hat-trick for the winners.

Med B extracted a 4-0 victory from the Mangy Molars, who got neither a local anaesthetic nor any goals. (Oh well, perhaps they can chalk the experience up to OHIP.)

The Trilobites dumped For C 2-1 in a preliminary game before winning the dubious right to meet Arch. The Trilobites went the way of the Mangy Molars (look Ma—two cavities) as the architects drilled them 5-0.

Continuing with our saga of courage, woe, human forgiveness and charity, III Civil warred on Ind Eng IV and won 2-1. Steinmans and Maas notched a goal each for the winners while Clarke apparently netted one for the other side.

Vic III produced a 3-2 win over SMC F, getting goals from Kipping, Webster and Warrick. Feerick and Muir did their valiant best for the vanquished.

The Grungies (a social disease similar to athlete's foot) struck IV Civil and hobbled them 3-1. Smith, Nyssoner and Daniels hot-footed it for the Grungies while Benner scratched paydirt for the civilians.

Vic VI dropped SMC C 6-4, getting two goal performances from McAdam and McDonald.

Devonshire, a well-known house of ill-repute in the area, was the site of a bloody murder as Med G were axed 8-1. We're advised the Butler did it (four goals) although McMorrow (two goals) is not above suspicion either.

IV Chem tripped over Dent II yr and went down to a 4-0 defeat as Ciminelli scored twice and singles arrived from Brereton and Lerner.

Viv Toros decapitated Pharm B 6-2 in a preliminary game, getting a hat-trick from Bars and others from Neal, Sloan and Phillips. The druggists' side of the scoreboard changed because of Tang and Scherchenko.

The Toros ran out of luck though, when Med D scored them 4-2 on goals by Knapp, Huxter, Marin and Klatz.

Quarterfinals

In the quarter-finals, Hancock got three goals and three assists and McKenzie also got a hat-trick as Wycliffe captured an 8-5 win over Vic IV.

PHE C shutout Law IV 5-0 as Bonomo scored twice. Arch got two goals from Moffat and one from old Dobbin as they romped to a 3-1 victory over III Civil.

Vic III scored four and the Grungies got three so guess who goes on to the semi-finals?

Vic VI (how many teams are from that college, anyway?) allowed Dunstan of the Dukes to score one goal and scored seven themselves.

And last but not least of our worries, Dent II yr railroaded Med D out of the playoffs, winning 4-2.

Eng make basketball finals

Basketball

The Vic I basketball team's season came to a sad end Tuesday night when Eng I upset them 63-58 to enter the finals against Meds A.

The two teams split the first two games, sending the series to the limit. In the third game, the engineers, who only finished fourth in regular season play, led all the way. They had a 33-25 half-time lead.

The plumbers got 16 points from Gratz, 14 from Barlus, and another eight from Torros.

Vic was led by Watt's 15 points (11 in the final half), Kastelic 13 and Eben nine.

The division I finals between Meds and Eng opened last night. The second game is tonight at 7:30 pm.

In division II play, the division II B regular season front-runners, Innis, downed Jr Eng 82-63 in the deciding game of their series. In the first half, Innis got 16 points from Lapczynsk, 15 from Rots-tein and another nine from Silver to build up a 63-33 lead which they never got around to losing. George lead the skulemen with 15 points and Harris added 11 more.

Innis now meet the division II A powerhouse, PHE C, who deposed Dent B in two straight games, 50-31 and 70-63. The first game was last night after press time and the second of their three game series gets underway tonight at 5:30 pm.

The intermediate basketball finals are going to be an all-Knox affair, as both Knox I and Knox A both won their semi-finals.

Knox I dropped Arch 68-50, getting a premier performance from Carley (24 points). Weaver and Griffin added eight and seven points respectively. Sickie lead Arch with 20 points while Laroca donated another 12.

Wycliffe lead Knox 24-22 at the half but somehow ended up on bottom 59-52. Symons netted 26 points

Eurailpass at Student Prices

Also: student flights to Europe and within Europe, car rentals, international ID cards, tours, and hostels.

AOSC/44 St. George Street, Toronto (416) 962-8404

Association of Student Councils

Dear Steven,

As you know, your mother and I have made great sacrifices to send you through college. The very idea of you asking us if we can send you to Europe this summer is outrageous. The nerve! Your mother and I haven't had a vacation in the last 5 years.

But knowing you, you'll get yourself to Europe somehow or other. Well to show you we do want you to enjoy yourself like the other kids, I've sent this STUDENT-RAILPASS coupon your mother clipped out. Because you're a student under 26, you can get unlimited second-class rail travel in 13 countries for up to 2 months for only $165. The trains are clean, modern, punctual, fast, and comfortable. So once you get over there you can see Europe as cheaply as possible.

By the way get your STUDENT-RAILPASS here; you can't buy it in Europe. It's a great deal Steve—tax free and one beautiful way to beat currency fluctuations.

Now there are two things I suggest you do. First, send in the coupon so you can buy the ticket. Second, start saving your money.

Love,
Dad

Mr. 28 June

STUDENT-RAILPASS
It shows you Europe as the Europeans see it.
Eurailpass is valid in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom.
Send me your free Student-Railpass folder. ☐
Or your free Eurailpass folder with railroad map. ☐

Name _____
Street _____
City _____
Zone _____
Prov. _____

Fares subject to change.

Squash grows at U of T

By JOSEPH LUSZESZK

Few probably know that squash over the last number of years has been the number one participatory sport at the U of T. There are currently over 13,000 players actively using the overtaxed facilities at Hart House.

Beginning last January 21, approximately 200 of these people began play in the annual Hart House squash tournament in five separate categories: graduates, undergraduates, novices, consolation and the newly inaugurated women's category. The increased participation which this year's tournament fostered reflects the growing popularity of squash on the campus.

On Tuesday March 19, the graduate, undergraduate and consolation finals were held. In the graduate division Donald Hanser, who in the semi-finals eliminated five-time champion Irv Herman, met another perennial finalist Jack Shusterman. Hanser defeated No. 2 seeded Shusterman in three straight sets, 15-9, 15-12, 15-7.

The undergraduate match provided no such upset as No. 1 seed John Wright of the faculty of Law defeated fellow lawyer Paul Nebauer 8-15, 15-7, 15-9. The consolation trophy was taken by Peter Drutz of UC by default when his opponent failed to appear.

This Tuesday, March 26, as part of the Hart House Equinox Open House, the women's and novice finals will be played beginning at 6 p.m. At the same time, the graduate champion, Donald Hanser, will face the undergraduate champion John Wright.

The winner will receive the Coventry Cup which is representative of overall squash supremacy at Hart House. Squash buffs are invited to attend these finals.

Waterpolo finals are upon us

By MIKE MILNE

In both divisions the finals had to go the full three games, all of them close and exciting to watch.

In the first division, PHE won the first game, defeating Knox 6-5 in a tight game. Brankovsky scored three, Connolly two and Ball one. For Knox, Guinness, Fraser, Dalrymple, Wilkin and Pimm each scored once.

In the second game of the series, Knox came out on top 10-7 in a hard fought match. Wilkin and Rockingham scored three each, with Fraser and Laari netting two apiece. For PHE, Ball scored four, Brankovsky two, and Datzko one.

In the second division, the series has been equally close. Meds won the first game, defeating Vic II 8-4 in a game whose outcome was never in doubt. Scoring for Meds were Model three, Russell and Argals with two apiece and Bryon with one. Hibberd had two goals for Vic, McCrae and Schappert the others.

Vic came back in the next game to win 6-5 to prolong the series. Sebben (3), Johnson (2) and Hibberd (1) were the scorers. Model and Bryon, with a pair each, and Russel with one goal were the Meds scorers.

The final games to decide the two divisions championships promise to be good games. Results will be in next Friday's Varsity.

Benson Building has free sports

The Benson Building has been offering a widely diversified instructional program in athletics to all women in the university community. The program incorporates the increasing interest in 'life-style' activities, physical fitness and leisure recreational pursuits.

This program is available to all undergraduates, graduates, faculty, support staff, faculty wives and alumni, but so far few non-students have taken advantage of it.

To encourage a greater participation as well provide intensive learning opportunities in "carry-over" activities, a special two-week program is being offered April 1 to April 11 at the Benson Building. Archery, ballroom dancing, fencing, golf, tennis, basic life saving, survival swimming, and swim stroke correction courses will be offered daily or three times weekly.

Registrants are expected to attend a session per day to provide the best learning experience. Equipment for these courses is also provided. The opportunity of practice or purely recreational participation will also be provided in badminton, golf, tennis and swimming.

Fitness will receive a major thrust through this program. Introductory opportunities for individually prescribed fitness programs with follow-up evaluation will be available. Women interested are encouraged to come during the prescribed hours to receive a fitness appraisal and program during the week of April 1 to April 5.

Attendance only once is required; however, daily visits would be more valuable. Complementary to this are the on-going slim and trim programs during the two-week period as well as two classes in modern rhythmic gymnastics on Monday and Wednesday evenings.

The timing of courses is arranged with as little conflict as possible and an enthusiastic participant could be exposed to several activities each day. Co-ed opportunities in the program are provided through the archery, ball room dancing and fencing courses as well as a swim dip on Wednesday, 6:30 to 8:00 pm.

All members of the University community who are presently members of the Women's Athletic Association are eligible to participate. Others may join the program at a cost of $5.00.

Anyone interested in

ROWING

for the University of Toronto next year is encouraged to row at the Argonaut Rowing Club or any other private club during the summer.

This is also applicable to persons weighing less than 120 lbs., as they may become coxwains.

Please leave name, address and phone number in the Intercollegiate Office, Hart House, Room 101.

BRITRAIL PASS

THE INFLATION FIGHTER

UNLIMITED travel on ALL British Rail services in England, Scotland and Wales — At prices which have been held at '73 levels for 1974 '11

1,000 Inter-City Expresses — EVERY DAY
14,000 Local Trains — EVERY DAY
70 Inter-City Sleeper Trains — EVERY NIGHT
BRITRAIL PASSES are available for unlimited travel in either Economy or First class for period of 8 Days, 15 Days, 21 Days or One Month at prices starting as low as $40.00 for the 8 Day Economy Pass

REDUCED RATE 8 Day, 15 Day and One Month Passes are also available for the young traveller between the ages of 14 and 22 years

IMPORTANT! BritRail Passes are NOT sold in Britain. You must purchase them before you leave Canada. SEE YOUR TRAVEL AGENT. Then travel the length and breadth of Britain without the worry of fuel shortages

To obtain your brochure with full details of the BritRail Pass, including sample itineraries which prove the value of the Pass, plus information on other services we offer complete and return the tear off coupon underneath

BRITRAIL TRAVEL INTERNATIONAL

55 Eglinton Avenue East, Toronto, Ontario M4P 1G8

Please send brochure to:

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

PROVINCE

VA

INTERESTED IN LAW AT

OSGOODE HALL LAW SCHOOL?

COME TO INFORMATION SESSION WITH

DEAN H.W. ARTHURS

MUSIC ROOM AT HART HOUSE

WEDNESDAY
MARCH 27

12:00

unclassified

ESSAY EDITOR. Do you want "A" on your essay? I can help you present your ideas more clearly, more relevantly. Just edited a PhD dissertation. Have M.A. in writing. Essays from $5. Call eggs 532-9345.

HARPSICORDS MADE using historic principles for reasonable prices. Several models available. George Hsied 920-8841

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4 757-0621.

SUMMER SUBLET large bachelor apt. in modern bldg., furnished or unfurnished, $132. includes parking, utilities, other extras; May - Sept., negotiable; Call 421-2850, leave number.

RITES OF SPRING IS HERE tonight, tomorrow night 8 p.m. - 1 a.m. - HART HOUSE - COME, ENJOY, PLEASE NOTE. It is NOT our fault it's two days.

ONE YEAR OLD SEEKING OTHERS to form play group — parents included 966-5046 evgs.

GREAT DEAL on 35th (1973) Edition of Gray's Anatomy, like new 1 mo. old, now out of print. Phone Christine 961-1929 between 5 & 7. Asking $39.

YOUNG ENGLISH SPEAKING SWISS GIRL looks for a ride to Vancouver around the end of March. Share gasoline. Call afternoons 925-5436.

POSITION OPEN AS RESOURCE PERSON for the Innis College Independent Studies Programme. Versatility, creativity, and ability to respond to student needs are essential. Reply April 1, 1974, with curriculum vitae, to Academic Co-Ordinator, Innis College, University of Toronto.

ROOM AVAILABLE IN STUDENT HOUSE, May 1st in the Montmarire of Toronto. Share kitchen, bath, cooking with 3 others. Rent $70/month. Bus to Campus. Phone 537-2775.

GIRL WITH TYPING ABILITY WANTED as partner to write book on the disadvantages of education. Write author, 295 Bold St., Hamilton.

THREE PEOPLE NEEDED for co-op house in Riverdale area beginning June 1st. Rent $60.00 month. Call 463-1786 evenings.

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING? Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674. ESSAY COLLECTION FOR SALE. Philosophy, history, english, economics, political science etc. 55 essays - over 750 pages. $75.00. Phone 628-4674.

CHEAP HOUSING IMMEDIATELY — 2 rooms, $55.00 each. Available now. Palmerston Blvd. In 5 room flat. Please call Bob 928-4903 days, 534-7012 nights.

TO SUBLET: large furnished six room apartment in house, Avenue Rd. & Bloor. Available May 1st until Sept. 1st. $345/mo. or $110/mo./person. Parking included 921-6907

APARTMENT FOR RENT Available May 1, one bedroom, broadloomed, $179/month. On St. George Street Close to U of T and Subway. Call 964-2639 evenings.

WHY FREEZE? Used furs from $10., new from $99. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets, Muskrat, Raccoon, Rabbit etc., EXCELLENT SELECTION. Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGDER FURS, 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077. Open Thurs., Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

THESIS BINDING expertly bound. Just 2 blocks from U of T. One day special service. Phone 535-4924, leave message Campus Bindery, 181 Harbord St., Toronto 4.

MARX BROS. & FIELDS & WEST Fri., & Sat. March 20 & 22 "Monkey Business," "My Little Chica-dee," and "Duck Soup". Rm. 3153 Med. Soc. Bldg. 7:30

Come see
U of T's
first ever lynching (?)

Capture all the warm moments of...

The Governing Council Show

- will the discipline code be passed and a dictatorship installed?
- can Dr. John slalom through yet another agenda?
- will Bill Nelson unlock the cage of the faculty dinosaurs?
- has the SDS plans to disrupt Roberts Rules of Order?

Now in its second sell-out year - Tickets must be picked up Thursday at Simcoe Hall.
The performance begins March 28 at 4:30 pm.

A U of T-One Big Happy Family Ltd. production

Classes cancelled to discuss free speech

The Governing Council executive committee accepted U of T president John Evans' statement on "ensuring freedom of speech" Monday, after it was endorsed by the faculty association and criticized by the Students' Administrative Council.

"We welcome the statement and regard it as a satisfactory response to our own resolution of the preceding week," faculty association president Bill Nelson said in an interview yesterday, echoing remarks he had made to the executive.

However, SAC president Bob Anderson said the statement provided inadequate protection against infringements of free speech and academic freedom in the whole university.

"The statement is merely a stopgap in response to a specific situation," he said. "Throughout the year SAC has called for a change in the way staffing decisions are made in the university, to provide free speech for untenured faculty members. We have received no support from the faculty, association or president Evans."

Evans' statement is designed to protect freedom of speech only for sponsors of meetings who are threatened with disruption.

If a disruption of a meeting sponsored by a "recognized university group" is feared, representative university groups should meet with the prospective disrupters. The alleged trouble-maker would be warned of "the university's commitment to freedom of speech" and told that they also "have a right to a fair hearing."

If the disruption proceeds, the meeting's chairman would adjourn it for 24 hours and try to hold it the next day. If the "disrupters" persist, disciplinary action, injunctions, or, as a last resort, police, should be used.

The faculty association had demanded a tough statement from Evans on steps he would take to prevent future incidents similar to the SDS action March 13, when Anderson sociologist Edward Banfield was physically prevented from speaking.

Some observers speculated the faculty leadership might not consider Evans' statement tough enough.

The faculty association had called a general meeting of faculty members for yesterday but cancelled it after its council accepted the statement.

Nelson said: "At the same time many questions arise. We endorse the statement in a general way without being absolutely sure about how it is proposed to implement it."

Nelson said he is uneasy about the phrase "recognized university group." "It is not clear who recognizes it or what one does to become recognized," he said.

The faculty leader criticized the Simcoe Hall administration for withdrawing room-booking privileges from the SDS.

"I rather dislike the unilateral withdrawal of SDS' official recognition by an administrative officer who redefined the group's status. This might be a bad precedent," he said.

"The action seems to be prejudicing matters currently under discussion. For example the Caput has not yet considered the charges against the SDS."

(The Internal Affairs committee of governing council refused Monday to overturn the decision of campus coordinator Lois Reimer to "suspend" SDS recognition.)

Anderson pointed out to the executive committee that very little free speech exists for non-tenured faculty members who must be conscious they don't alienate senior colleagues who make tenure decisions.

He also said the university has been less than vigilant in ensuring prestigious platforms for speakers representing all points of view in the past.

"Evans' statement does not move in that direction either," Anderson said.

Anderson also regretted that the preliminary negotiations established in Evans' statement do not provide for discussion of the "substantive issues involved in the threatened disruption."

"Although the provision is a step toward the principles of the Campbell report (which called for negotiations over substantive issues to end an obstructive demonstration) it only calls for negotiations to ensure free speech," Anderson said.

But Nelson conceded that such negotiations could be directed toward the disrupters: complaints or how to accommodate them into the meeting. "I wouldn't rule that out," he said.

Anderson rejected the notion Evans' statement could apply beyond academic meetings to disruptions of governing council meetings and other legislative bodies.

Nelson said he wasn't worried about that, but he was concerned that the guidelines were not appropriate to classrooms.

"In the classroom there should be more co-operative decision-making between students and professor over course content and readings. The professor might not be seen as a chairman of a meeting," he said.

When reminded that his view is similar to the call for "operational agreement in the classroom" advocated in the Campbell report, a position strongly rejected by the faculty association two years ago, Nelson said "well, I'd have to say I'm speaking for myself. UTFA hasn't taken a position on that, and it might still support its former view of the classroom again."

Forum today at Con Hall

All classes have been cancelled for two hours today so students can attend the forum on free speech and academic freedom in Convocation Hall at noon.

The Simcoe Hall administration issued the order early Monday "at the request of the Students' Administrative Council and the approval of U of T president John Evans."

Speakers will include U of T vice-president Jill Conway, Toronto civil liberties lawyer Clay Ruby, history professors Michael Cross and Kenneth McNaught, and GSU president Alf Chaiton.

Question and discussion from the floor will follow.

Although many students were not aware of the class cancellation, a spokeswoman for U of T vice-president and provost Don Forster said instructions to cancel classes were sent to all deans and directors "just after 9 am Monday."

Internal affairs vice-president Jill Conway: magnanimous in victory.

THE Varsity
Vol. 94, No. 66
Wed., March 27, 1974. TORONTO

EXTRA

Internal affairs suspends SDS

The internal affairs committee Monday narrowly defeated by a vote of 4-3 a motion to reinstate the recognition of SDS as a campus group with the ability to book rooms.

Despite strong opposition from Professor W.B. Coutts, the committee approved the actions of Louis services co-ordinator Lois Reimer and vice-president Jill Conway in revoking the SDS' recognition last week before an SDS forum.

Student Arlene Dick swung the vote as she voted against fellow student David Shindman, alumnus Harry Riva and Coutts, who all supported the motion.

The vote vindicated a policy the administration admitted was not covered by the previous policy of the committee on recognition of groups.

Coutts said the action was "unwarranted" and said groups should only have recognition revoked on technical grounds, not ideological. He said this was "censorship."

Coutts was also concerned about penalizing the group when the alleged offences were committed by members of the group.

SAC president Bob Anderson attacked the actions by Conway and Reimer as a lacking respect for "due process."

He said the SDS was denied the right given it by the Ontario Statutory Powers and Procedures Act and the university was acting illegally in revoking its recognition without a hearing.

Anderson also observed it was "inconsistent" when the "crusaders for free speech deny that right to others."

SDS spokesman Bill Schabas said the SDS was caught on a loophole by the administration. A clause in the recognition of groups policy says groups must "be seen as attempting to contribute to the educational, recreational, cultural or social values of the university."

He charged the American Studies Committee and the Toke Oike were not having their privileges revoked when the Toke printed racist cartoons and the committee invited Banfield in spite of his alleged racist theories to visit Toronto.

Conway attempted to defend herself by saying the withdrawal of recognition was done in consultation with internal affairs chairwoman Marnie Paikin, thereby interpreting the committee's guidelines.

Paikin tried to discourage the committee from voting for Coutts' motion because she said the committee was only supposed to decide policy, not how to interpret it.

Professor Gary Thaler agreed, saying the university administration should not be criticized for acting within the guidelines already passed.

Although Reverend Graham Cotter was concerned with due process, he said he would abstain on the motion because the group had violated free speech.

When student David Shindman asked Conway when the "suspension" of SDS would be over, she said she didn't know but the committee would have to vote to reinstate them on the condition they agree not to disrupt any more speakers.

The original item on the agenda was the result of a discussion at the last meeting on the possible monitoring of the activities of recognized campus groups. They admitted there was no policy on the procedure for withdrawal of privileges or anticipating a breach.

After the defeat of Coutts' motion Thaler expressed concern that the SDS was being muzzled by the action in revoking the privileges while the policy was being reviewed.

Conway reported to the meeting the possible security measures that could be taken to ensure free speech. She recommended the formation of a four person subcommittee to consist of Coutts, Arlene Dick, Paikin and Cotter. This was approved.

The report stressed the question of the use of campus police to secure free speech. Conway relayed the comments of U of T chief of security Westhead that he thought the expenditure in terms of higher pay, more training and increased physical demands were not warranted for the few times they were needed.

She said Metro police would have to be used in case of a serious disruption.

Conway also said she had talked with Metro police chief Harold Adamson who informed her the police would be willing to provide security if necessary but would not obey university instructions, but would make their own decisions.

She also raised the possibility of systems to facilitate evidence gathering, such as having photographers take pictures of disrupters to identify them for later disciplinary action or court action.

When asked by Shindman if the committee would consider the other side of the coin—hate literature and inciting racial hatred—Conway replied this was outside the terms of reference of the committee which would only deal with free speech.

The committee will consider the question of prevention of further disruptions in April and will make recommendations to the May Governing Council meeting, when students have left the campus for the summer.

Student governor Arlene Dick (right) voted to suspend the SDS Monday, while campus services co-ordinator Lois Reimer (left) looks on.

THE Varsity

TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors

Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Sleinick
Tom Walkom
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1980 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto and is printed by Delsone Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

The expulsion of the untenured faculty from heaven.

Good ship lollipop steers back on course

The university "community" has offered considerable proof in the past few weeks that it is not a community at all. The internal affairs and the executive committee meetings Monday only destroyed even further support the myth of "community".

The charades at both meetings only helped show the true basis on which the university functions — power relations and not the "pursuit of truth", as most faculty and administrators at this university so often tell us.

The proposals of the Campbell report on discipline (1969) would have chosen to deal with the substantive issues in the so-called "Banfield incident." Instead, both the internal affairs and executive committees, buckling under to behind-the-scenes faculty pressure, sought to cleverly slip and slide around the issue of academic racism and content themselves with drawing up measures to preserve "freedom of speech on the campus."

The internal affairs committee through its vice-president Jill Conway and campus services coordinator Lois Reimer last week chose to unilaterally suspend official recognition of the Students for a Democratic Society as a campus group.

Several Committee members pointed out at Monday's meeting — including a faculty member — that internal affairs had not consulted the committee's members, but rather that Conway and Reimer had decided on their own to suspend the group's privileges.

Such official action will, of course, not deter activist groups such as the SDS. The administration has chosen to bury its head in the sand ostrich-like and refuse to recognize the SDS instead of dealing with the substantive issue of academic racism.

The liberal issue of free speech has triumphed for the moment, with no thanks to the official voice of the students and one certain Governing Council "student" representative — Arlene Dick.

Dick has done virtually nothing but kiss the committee's posterior all year, yet, amazingly, she was elected to yet another term in the recent Governing Council free-for-all.

Monday Dick voted against the interests of students on this campus and against the pursuit of truth at this university by siding with Gary "Benedict Arnold" Thaler, Gordon Fisher and outgoing support staff rep John Parker. (Dick probably thinks The Varsity's criticism of her actions would indicate she has made the correct choice.)

The Students' Administrative Council has also chosen to allow the substantive issues of why the SDS disrupted the Banfield lectures fall to the wayside, even though SAC advocates the Campbell report which advocates discussing the substantive issues of the a disruption. Perhaps that organization believes in "benign neglect" of the issues?

But maybe we're being too hard on the SAC; perhaps they are only acting out of political pragmatism and self-interest. After all, as SAC president Anderson says, the students didn't give SAC a mandate to lead on this issue.

SAC and its elected representatives appear to choose their mandates based on which direction the wind is blowing. Some times they even miss the wind's direction. More opportunism we don't need at this university; the Governing Council and administration are hypocritical enough.

One thing is clear, however, the alliance system of faculty, student governors and organizations, and the administration has been restored to a stable balance. The SAC has relieved itself for the moment of an, admittedly, small group which has attempted to make political hay out of the racism issue; Jill Conway and John Evans have managed to perform clever but slimy reptilian acts and save their jobs, and the faculty has succeeded in regaining some of its so-called "eroding power".

U of T's nice big happy family is back on course; the good ship lollipop has been preserved.

However, even if these bodies prefer to avoid the substantive issue of academic racism at this university, we, for one, would like to see the issue discussed at the SAC-GSU forum today. Hopefully concerned students will make their presence felt.

Faculty, admin. hypocrits

Although the Students' Administrative Council's official reaction to the Banfield incident evades the crucial issue of academic racism, it does raise some legitimate questions for the university community.

SAC correctly points out that the SDS disruption brought the chickens home to roost for the faculty on its old nemesis — the Campbell report on campus discipline of 1969.

As we noted last Friday, the Campbell report established a workable scenario for dealing with campus disruptions which commanded considerable respect among students.

Unfortunately for the leadership of the faculty the report did not condemn all disruptions as being inherently evil.

It said that some disruptions can be justified and negotiations to end them should be directed as much to the substantive issues at stake as to their alleged disruptiveness. It provided guidelines for negotiating with demonstrators and represented at least an enlightened liberal view of how the university should deal with hostile political organizations.

But the record is clear. In a disgraceful display of self-interest and childish obstruction, the leadership of the faculty systematically subverted the workings of the committee established to implement the Campbell report.

The report was shelved because Simcoe Hall said no consensus could be reached in the university community. Two years later Simcoe Hall brought in the Code of Behavior, with a program for dealing with disruption which directly contradicted the spirit of the Campbell report.

Student councils have managed to convince the university that consensus does not exist over its provisions either. What's more, the Code does not establish workable guidelines for dealing with disruptions. Except to say they shall not happen.

Former president Claude Bissell said in 1969 it would shape future disciplinary policy at U of T. Why did the Governing Council ignore the document when it initiated its examination of discipline policy in 1972?

SAC also correctly points out the spotty record of the faculty leadership on previous free speech questions.

In the spring of 1971 the right-wing Edmund Burke Society launched a mace attack during speeches by Québec labor leader Michel Chartrand and Montreal lawyer Robert Lemieux. The administration's response was to begin a policy whereby the sponsoring group pays for damage caused to university property regardless of cause.

The faculty was silent during this most serious impediment to freedom of assembly. It makes you wonder what all the indignation is about.

op-ed

Articles submitted to the "opposite the editorial" page should be typed, double-spaced on a 64-character line, and signed. As with letters, contributions may be edited for space reasons; four type-written, double-spaced pages is the maximum length recommended. Op-ed pieces are published according to space availability, immediacy of topic, and relevancy. Mail op-ed pieces to The Varsity, 91 St. George St., Toronto 181, by campus or regular delivery, or bring them to The Varsity editorial offices.

Opinions expressed on the op-ed page represent the opinions of the writer only, and not the views of The Varsity collective.

SAC emphasizes free speech over racism

The following statement has been adopted by the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) Executive on instructions from the SAC council:

The Students' Administrative Council condemns the actions of the Students for a Democratic Society in physically preventing Edward Banfield from speaking at the University of Toronto campus. In doing this, the SDS denied members of the university community their right to hear Banfield and form their own opinions on his views.

Canadian laws presently prohibit defamation of groups and the promotion of racial hatred. This fact makes it clear that free speech is not absolute; the right to freedom of speech must be qualified with responsibility. But the SAC feels it is totally unacceptable for a small group such as the SDS to set itself up as the arbiter of what is acceptable and what is not. Although society must impose some restrictions on what can be said, it cannot delegate this power to every group with the physical strength to prevent others from speaking. Such a situation could only result in control of speech by the most powerful elements of society, and thus could not lead to the correction of the critical social injustices sought by the SDS.

Free and critical discussion is essential to the functioning of the university. SAC finds Banfield's theories offensive, and believes that fundamental errors in his primary assumptions and methodology can be exposed through debate. It is a great pity that members of the university were not given the opportunity to engage in such a debate.

Other threats to free speech

In reacting to the Banfield incident, the university community must not lose sight of the other ways in which free speech is denied.

The right of free speech must not be selectively applied. SAC deplores the decision of the administration to withdraw recognition (and hence the right to book rooms for meetings) from the SDS. The university cannot proclaim free speech for some and deny to others the right to hold meetings. The fact that recognition was withdrawn without any form of hearing is a shocking affront to the concepts of natural justice and contrary to the laws of Ontario.

The university must also ensure that speakers of all persuasions receive the same protection. In recent years, speeches by William Kuntzler, Robert Lemieux, and Michel Chartrand have all been disrupted by right-wing groups. The university responded by charging the sponsoring groups for security and damage occasioned by the attacks, thus penalizing the sponsors of the meeting for the actions of the disrupters. No outcry was raised by the faculty association at that time. The university community must be assured that the administration's commitment to free speech is not limited by the ideology of the speaker or the influence of the sponsoring group.

The university's guarantees of freedom of speech and academic inquiry must also be extended to students and junior faculty. Untenured faculty are particularly subject to conformist pressures from senior colleagues. They are often afraid to speak out on controversial subjects lest they jeopardize their chances for tenure.

We believe this situation constitutes the single most important denial of free speech in the university. Mechanisms should be established to deal with it.

Merely ensuring that no person is denied the right to speak will not ensure that all views have the opportunity to be heard. Through its annual lecture programs and the granting of honorary degrees, the university provides certain individuals with prestigious platforms from which to state their views. The media provide more coverage to some viewpoints than to others. There is a responsibility to ensure balance in the choice of speakers for such platforms. Professor Nelson (now president of the faculty association) recognized this in the sixties when he opposed the granting of an honorary degree to the late Adlai Stevenson.

The university must also ensure ample opportunity for criticism and debate when controversial speakers are invited.

The Banfield incident has done some good in awakening the university community to one threat to free speech. The community must now respond by working to remove all such threats.

Campbell: a method of protecting free speech

The Students' Administrative Council believes the university should move to protect free speech by implementing the principles of the Campbell Report submitted in September 1969. This report, which then-President Claude Bissell said would shape future disciplinary policy at U of T, proposes fundamental changes in the decision-making process within the university.

Within this context, the report proposes the following means for dealing with a disruptive demonstration:

"(1) Since a given disruptive demonstration may prove to be justified, negotiations concerning a demonstration should be addressed as much as possible to the substantive issues of the demonstration and not just to the disruptiveness.

"(2) At the same time, however, the university cannot fulfil its obligations if it allows a minority of its members to disrupt repeatedly or for a prolonged period of time, its essential educational functions. The university must consider the rights of the majority in these situations. Finally, the university must seriously consider the volatile nature of disruptive demonstrations.

other ends.

We cannot agree with the almost hysterical suggestions which have been made: that the president is to blame, that he should have acted faster, that he could have acted more effectively, and that he should resign. Freedom of speech does not have to be proclaimed, and it extends to all questions of concern to the university community and not just to those which can be described as 'academic.' Had force been summoned in advance, the administration would have been acting beyond its powers, and what was really a minor incident (no one was injured, no property was damaged) could have become a major clash with the Scarborough principal Ralph Campbell of discipline report fame.

"(3) The initial response to the demonstrators should occur as locally as possible. Where a demonstration is directed against an individual or a group, the persons concerned should be given the opportunity to participate in all deliberations. However, we recognize that ultimately a prolonged disruptive demonstration involves the university community as a whole rather than only those immediately concerned. The negotiations on behalf of university should be conducted by representatives of the democratically-constituted governing body.

"(4) If a demonstration cannot be resolved by such negotiations, the use of injunctions from a regular court might be considered; or it might be feasible to hold a referendum on the issues involved in the demonstration.

"(5) A resort to force by the university should occur only after other reasonable alternatives have failed. The decision to use force should be made by the democratically-constituted governing body.

"Demonstrators who violently disrupt the university or who impede the clearly expressed will of the majority in a non-violent disruption render themselves liable to charges laid in the regular courts."

Campbell scuttled by faculty

The lack of acceptable procedures for dealing with decision-making and discipline contributed significantly to the problems which arose in the Banfield incident. Representatives of the faculty of the university have systematically obstructed the implementation of the Campbell Report in the years since 1969. They must take responsibility for the absence of such procedures now.

SAC regrets efforts currently being made by a group of faculty members to exploit the situation to forward its own interests within the university. It appears to be using the widespread outrage against the SDS action to demand harsh disciplinary procedures within the university and to publicly humiliate U of T president John Evans into a position of subservience to faculty demands on other university issues.

The American Studies Committee which invited Banfield to campus, did not inform the administration of his prospective appearance until disruption was imminent. No effort was made to bring interested parties together to reach a negotiated solution, perhaps involving a formal debate to avert a confrontation. The dean of the faculty of arts and science only learned of the appearance through an SDS leaflet. One of the members of the committee appears to have gone out of his way to inform a member of the SDS of Banfield's visit long before it was announced publicly on campus. It is our view that the American Studies Committee failed to take obvious steps to minimize the confrontation.

Discussions over the proposed Code of Behavior have been underway for several months. An agreement has been reached not to proceed with the non-academic sections of the code—sections which virtually all student organizations on campus have rejected. Mechanisms for resolving outstanding differences have been agreed to in good faith between students and members of the Governing Council. These arrangements must not be overturned by a hysterical reaction to a single incident.

SAC also rejects the resurrection of Caput to discipline individuals involved in the Banfield disruption. Composed solely of senior administrators, Caput has long been recognized by the university community (and by former President Bissell) as illegitimate. The only way to ensure acceptable discipline mechanisms on campus is to implement the Campbell Report.

ting the matter into the hands of a body whose record in handling cases of this nature is so poor, which is unrepresentative, and which is regarded as illegitimate by most of the community, was at best an unfortunate decision.

In our opinion, the real failure was that of the executive committee, which was given the opportunity to create, or to set about the creation of, a judicial body for the university which could be effective, which would be representative, and which would be regarded as legitimate by the whole community, and refused to take that opportunity.

David Priddle
President

UTSA denounces overreaction

The University of Toronto Staff Association deplores the fact that the free exchange of ideas on the campus has been obstructed by a small group of people who do not appear to believe that such exchange is essential to our way of life. But we feel that the episode is in danger of being blown up out of all proportion by a vocal conservative element in the community seeking to achieve other ends.

We cannot agree with the almost hysterical suggestions which have been made: that the president is to blame, that he should have acted faster, that he could have acted more effectively, and that he should resign. Freedom of speech does not have to be proclaimed, and it extends to all questions of concern to the university community and not just to those which can be described as 'academic.' Had force been summoned in advance, the administration would have been acting beyond its powers, and what was really a minor incident (no one was injured, no property was damaged) could have become a major clash with the likelihood of serious injury being inflicted. The university may have tarnished its image by the fact that the incident occurred at all; it would have seriously damaged that image if, by its handling of the incident, it had precipitated a real crisis.

In calling a meeting of the executive committee of Governing Council and representatives of the campus organizations the president took that action open to him to take. The university no longer depends on the president to solve its problems; to ask that he do so is to revert to the old autocratic model of the community.

We regret that the executive committee decided to invoke Caput. Put-

FREE SPEECH AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM A FORUM

The SDS disruption of Prof. Edward Banfield's lecture March 13 has sparked widespread interest in this subject. Come and hear it discussed by:

- Michael Cross - History Professor, UofT, Editor of Canadian Forum
- Jill Conway - Vice President, UofT
- Clayton Ruby - Civil Liberties Lawyer
- Kenneth McNaught - History Professor, UofT
- Alf Chaiton - President, Graduate Students' Union

Discussion from the floor following.

WEDNESDAY MARCH 27
12 NOON
CONVOCATION HALL

Sponsored by SAC & GSU.

THE varsity

Vol. 24 No. 67
Fri. March 29, 1974

TORONTO

FALCONBRIDGE

16

9

17

24

10

30

Berlyne report passed

By BOB BETTSON

Massive changes in the Faculty of Arts and Science were recommended and implemented this year but went unnoticed by the more than 13,000 full-time students in the university's largest faculty.

Two of the most influential but least understood reports the university has ever seen were the omnibus Berlyne report and the report of an implementation committee which approved a credit system for the faculty.

The Berlyne report came out last March amid the controversy of the math occupation and was largely unheralded despite its important recommendations. Main decisions, such as the credit system, were made in typical university fashion, while students were off campus in May.

But an implementation committee had to be set up to untangle the issues raised by the 72 provisions in the mammoth report and recommend methods of implementation to the faculty's general committee.

The report was the result of six months of work by a university presidential advisory committee (PAC) consisting of four students, four faculty, two alumni and two administrators.

The PAC was commissioned by president John Evans after a resolution from the general committee asked for a review of the new program, initiated by U of T in 1969.

The new program made massive changes in the freedom students had in course choice as well as abolishing the distinction between the honors and general programs.

But a number of conservative faculty were opposed to the liberalism of the new program and saw the PAC as an opportunity to roll back some of the reforms.

Most of the recommendations of the report—named after its chairman, psychology professor Donald Berlyne—were reforms and further innovations, not quite what the conservatives wanted.

Not only the credit system but a larger interdisciplinary studies program with departmental status was recommended. The report was also concerned with setting up thematic and other programs of study to enlarge upon the traditional specialist programs.

Under the credit system adopted, students could pick any number of courses they wanted to up to a maximum of six in the winter session and two in the summer. Therefore a four year degree could be achieved in three years.

The Berlyne report also recommended a faculty curriculum committee and more emphasis on quality teaching for first year students.

First year classes would be lecture-seminar courses of not more than 50 students and tutorials of 80-110 minutes per week would be offered. This recommendation was to counter the impersonality of the large campus.

The committee also recommended a restructuring of the "ineffective" governing structure, calling for a study of reforms of the 200 member general committee and the 1,349 member faculty council, both with only 49 student members.

The development of two pre-health programs for prospective medical and dental students was recommended to remedy the high number of these students just spending a brief time taking science in the faculty.

But the reformist thrust of the recommendations was challenged last May when some of the recommendations were finally put to a vote. The credit system passed, but only by the slim margin of one vote.

Some of the others were watered down and more were shuffled off to dean Joan Foley's implementation committee which sat through the summer.

One of the most important recommendations was the setting up of a parity curriculum committee to control the overall development of programs in the faculty and serve as a clearing house for curriculum changes. This was to be the replacement for the outmoded all-faculty academic standards committee.

But once again the faculty council, with its first quorum in three years, proceeded to turn back, for lack of a two thirds majority, the proposal for the faculty-wide curriculum committee.

The council also tampered with the implementation committee's recommendation that there be a new committee on instruction and evaluation set up with almost equal faculty and student representation. This was swiftly changed to double the number of faculty. A similar amendment to double the student membership was defeated.

The formation of a new college for part time students, later named Woodsworth College, was approved and this was immediately implemented.

The recommendation for the credit system was also finally approved and will be implemented next year.

This was done with some opposition. As one faculty member said, it would reduce the academic standards and cause "creeping semesterism."

History chairman Jim Conacher made one last attempt to stymie the credit system but he failed.

The only change favorable to conservatives was limiting summer day courses to only one and a half per student, a change downward from the present two.

They also approved the thematic and single and double major programs as well as the setting up of a liberal arts program committee to design a liberal arts program.

In an overall view, the function of the Berlyne report and the implementation committee report, was basically clearing up some of the problems in the new program. The most important was the credit system which was more consistent than the rigid year system with the freedom of choice in the faculty.

Most of the basic decisions are still made at the departmental level with the chairman having most of the power.

The vital issue of a student voice in curriculum, tenure, hiring and firing decisions was neglected, as was an improvement in teaching quality in the faculty.

For the student, things will continue much the same.

CHINESE FOOD
459 Dundas St. W. - 366-5411

- Variety of authentic Chinese dishes prepared by our 2 chefs, direct from Hong Kong
- Specialties - 100 Flower Shrimp Rolls-South Sea Chicken
- Beautiful Oriental banquet facilities for University groups

MOON WAH

文華茶樓

Here and now... page 59

come
HONKY TONK
with
VINCE TROY
Mon.-Fri. 5-10 p.m.
meals under $2.00!!
HOUSE OF LANCASTER
147 Wellington (corner University)
869-0615

Opera Department
Faculty of Music
DIDO & AENEAS
(Purcell)

GIANNI SCHICCHI
(Puccini)

April
3, 5, 6 & 8, 1974

MacMillan Theatre,
Edward Johnson Building

8 p.m.

$3.00, Students $1.50
with I.D.

All seats reserved
Box Office 928-3744

Hours 12 noon to 5 p.m.
Monday to Friday.

Streak on.

PONY
Canada's Shoe

On sale at leading sporting goods outlets or write:
Pony Sporting Goods Limited, 100 Richmond Street East, Toronto, Ontario.

Melee outside: Gov Council adjourns

By BOB BETTSON

Charges may be laid against members of Students for a Democratic Society, the Black Student Union, and others who were involved in a melee late yesterday afternoon in Simcoe Hall while bargaining into Governing Council's meeting.

The council after learning of the incident decided to adjourn possibly until today.

University president John Evans told the Varsity he would recommend council chairman Malim Harding call a meeting today under the guidelines issued by the president last week on disruptions.

The council meeting was not actually disrupted as SDS and other groups entered and sat down after a few chants.

But the president and Harding said the meeting today would be under the Evans guidelines because force had been used to enter the meeting despite arrangements for tickets which were offered to groups and the general public.

The other groups participating in the melee with the campus police who attempted to block the stairs leading to the council chamber, were the Committee for Just compensation, The National Black Coalition and an Italian pensioners organization. The group numbered about 40.

The incident broke out after the demonstrators left a rally outside Simcoe Hall and went to Convocation Hall. From there they went to the doors which separate the two halls and broke them down.

SDS leader Bill Schabas claims the group used force to enter the council chamber because of the denial of entry to himself and a delegation who were on the agenda to speak.

He said internal affairs vice-president Jill Conway had watched from a window as Schabas was denied admission despite the fact he had a ticket. Schabas was scheduled to speak at 6 p.m. The fight broke out shortly after.

When the SDS and others approached the bottom of the front stairs of Simcoe Hall a contingent of 10 campus police formed a barrier. The demonstrators charged and tried to pass and get up the stairs to the meeting.

The demonstrators were repulsed by campus police and fighting then started. Punches were thrown by both demonstrators and campus police as fights broke out.

A pane of glass on a nearby booth was shattered when a person was thrown against it. The violence subsided, and the demonstrators rushed for the back stairway.

After more scuffling they reached the council chamber door which was locked.

Before anything happened, the door was opened by an unidentified person inside and the throng of demonstrators entered the council.

Council business proceeded for only a few minutes before a motion was made by a faculty member to adjourn the council.

It passed handily despite the protestations of student governor Gord Barnes who charged there could have been precautions taken by holding the meeting in a larger room which would accommodate more people.

Evans said after the meeting adjourned, charges, both criminal and Caput, may be laid against the demonstrators. He said this proved the inadequacy of the campus security force.

Campus police in front of Simcoe Hall later were fighting demonstrators.

Harding said "reasonable precautions" were taken before the meeting with television monitors at Convocation Hall and therefore the council chamber could only be accessible to ticket holders. He said the SDS had been approached to see if they wanted tickets reserved but they only took a few.

Nonnie Balcer (Trin III), a student angry at the SDS, action, asked Harding why the Metro police were not called.

Harding replied all possible precautions were taken and the police couldn't have come in time to stop the demonstrators from breaking down the doors.

However, he said Metro police estimate there would be a need for three police to every demonstrator for any preventive action. This would have meant 120 Metro police would have had to attend the meeting.

Evans said the violence was "extremely unfortunate" but only proved it was "extremely important" to make sure guidelines he laid down for disruptions were implemented.

He said the use of Metro police would be considered in the future. "The university must be patient yet firm." He would recommend the meeting reconvene in 24 hours.

Although the SAC executive had not had time to take a position at press time SAC education commissioner Dave Galbraith commented the whole thing could have been avoided if the administration had moved the meeting to a bigger room to accommodate the demand for observers' seats.

He noted the council had failed to observe the Evans' guidelines asking the group to desist before adjourning the meeting. He called the adjournment "premature".

SAC president Bob Anderson was unavailable at press for comment because he was in conference with Evans at Simcoe Hall.

Most observers and the governing councilors milled around after the meeting adjourned while the SDS held a rally downstairs to discuss the events.

They accused the Governing Council of being afraid of hearing what they had said by not allowing Scabas and a delegation to enter the building.

Academic code passed

The Governing Council was able to pass the academic sections of the discipline code yesterday before it adjourned, but no date was specified for the implementation.

The code was passed with only one dissenting vote, from student Gord Barnes, who said he had disagreements with the penalties possible for the offenses in the code.

At the January meeting the council decided to put off the more controversial non-academic sections of the code until January, 1974.

But it referred the academic code to the negotiating committee with representatives of the council, SAC, APUS, UTFA and the GSU.

The negotiating committee came up with four amendments which were approved by the academic affairs and internal affairs committees earlier this month.

But political economy professor Harry Eastman opposed the amendments which would change the responsibility for setting penalties from the chairman to the entire tribunal of five persons, unless there is a deadlock.

Eastman's amendment was defeated overwhelmingly with only two votes in favor, after SAC president Bob Anderson told the committee it would be a breach of good faith for the council to renege on the decision reached at negotiations.

Anderson said the amendment was necessary because of the conflicting interests of different segments of the university in setting penalties and the necessity for them to reach consensus.

The other amendments were to omit the word "conspires" from a section making it an offense "to abet, procure, counsel or conspire another member to commit or be a party to the offense."

Internal affairs chairwomen Marlene Paikin outlined the previous history of the code this year. She said "isolated incidents must not be allowed to undermine efforts made by representatives of organizations to achieve consensus on the non-academic code."

She supported the amendments as additional protection for the rights of the accused. She also supported the concept of a non-academic code and it could be worked out by discussion.

ECO 100 students win demands on grading

Sparked by a student organizing campaign, the political economy department has yielded to student demands and agreed to alter the marking scheme in Economics 100.

The concession came March 22 when department chairman J. Stefan Dupre saw he faced a student referendum which would likely have repudiated his position.

His move has touched off a demand for a similar change from student in Political Science 100.

All year Dupre's department had insisted on a 50-50 split between term work and final exam for the Economics 100 final mark.

Students wanted a 60-40 split, with students able to chose which item would count for more.

"The student proposal is inherently reasonable," Dupre declared during the Friday meeting with Economics 100 students, representatives of the Arts and Science Student Union and Political Economy Course Union, and SAC president

Bob Anderson. "It is one which could overcome student anxiety over final examinations," Dupre said.

But Dupre was worried the concession would be used as a precedent for giving in student pressure.

His move represented one of the first times faculty members have accepted even part of the recommendation of the 1969 Campbell report on campus discipline, which called for students and professors to reach "operational agreement" on course content and methods of evaluation in the classroom.

Most faculty members denounced the recommendation as an erosion of the power of the professor to govern the classroom situation.

During a series of meetings with Economics 100 class reps earlier this year, supervisor of studies Peter Silcox had claimed the evaluation could not be changed because of department regulations.

Be remaining in the course, students had implicitly agreed to the 50-50 scheme, he alleged. Thus he said they were bound by a "contract."

Students pointed out they did not freely enter into a contract because the marking scheme was merely announced, not negotiated with them.

Both Silcox and Dupre have been principal figures in the "Banfield incident." Silcox chaired Banfield's first campus appearance and Dupre adjourned the abortive Banfield lecture March 13 when SDS members would not allow the lecturer on to the platform. Both were vocal in demanding strong disciplinary measures to enforce their definition of "free speech" on campus.

After five weeks of meetings between professors and Economics 100 class reps, Silcox told the students the committee could not deal with the evaluation issue. Take it up with Dupre, he effectively said.

The class reps responded with plans for a referendum last Monday morning in all classes to indicate student support of the 60-40 proposal.

But during last Friday's meeting with Dupre, the chairman agreed to hastily tell faculty teaching the course to alter the scheme, and announce the change in class last Monday.

The faculty reportedly made the promised announcement.

Learning of the Economics 100 success, students in Political Science 100 decided to launch a similar request. They plan to meet Dupre next week.

Another dispute erupted in the chemistry department where students in Chemistry 240 said their lecture and lab tests have been too difficult. Marks were extraordinarily low and the professor refuses to upgrade them.

"The (March) test was scheduled for one hour but most students found that this was not nearly enough time to complete the test," a leaflet distributed by the students says.

The students met a department official Wednesday who implied the marks would be upgraded. They later learned they would be guaranteed a minimum 67 per cent grade.

U of T will fight TA union

By ANDREW FALUDY

U of T has served notice it will fight the unionization of its teaching assistants (TAs).

In a letter to the Ontario Labor Relations Board (OLRB), the administration says it will move to prevent a pre-hearing vote for certification of the Graduate Assistants Association (GAA).

However, the GAA plans to fight back to gain the pre-hearing vote for the more than 2,000 TAs.

Following the GAA's application for certification as collective bargaining agent last month and a request to the OLRB for a pre-hearing vote, the university sent a letter to the OLRB opposing the vote because the university claims the bargaining unit is too complex to be allowed a vote before a complete labor board hearing is held.

However GAA organizer Stanley Gage said the GAA will oppose the U of T move because "the only reason our bargaining unit looks so complex to the university is that they never bothered to look at the slipshod way that TAs are hired and fired until we came along."

The GAA lawyers also say there are good legal grounds for the pre-hearing vote to be held, and the legal team will be presenting a brief to the board with those legal arguments.

Earlier this month the GAA provided the Labor Board with all of their membership cards and a definition of the bargaining unit it wishes to represent.

So far the GAA has signed up about 900 of the more than 2,000 teaching assistants on campus.

Under Ontario's labor laws, 35 per cent of the potential bargaining unit must be signed up before a pre-hearing vote on certification can be taken.

If approved, a pre-hearing vote could come as early as mid-April. The teaching assistants would then be asked whether they wished the GAA to represent them and a vote of 50 per cent plus one is required for certification.

However, the counting of the ballots would not take place until after the certification hearing before the OLRB.

If the OLRB finds the two parties in relative agreement on the bargaining unit they may call a pre-hearing vote.

There may be some disagreements between the GAA and the university on the size of the unit.

The GAA claims there are about 2,100 teaching assistants on campus, whereas the university may include in its response assistants in dentistry and medical sciences which would push the number as high as 2,400.

A GAA press release says: "If the OLRB finds the two parties have many differences a detailed hearing will have to be held before graduate assistants will get a chance to endorse the GAA in a vote."

"In related developments the pre-hearing vote for the Victoria University bargaining Unit was complete on March 20."

"A final hearing should be held regarding the unit in a matter of weeks."

THE Varsity

TORONTO

Editor
City Editor
News Editors

Review Editor
Photo Editor
Phone
Editorial Offices
Advertising Manager
Advertising Assistant
Office
Phone

Bob Gauthier
Dick Brown
David Simmonds
Lorne Slotnick
Tom Welton
Michael Cowger
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George St., 2nd floor
Patricia Wickson
Betty Wilson
91 St. George St., 1st floor
923-8171

As we retire for the night a few is shed for it's the last we're here. Ten-four and out from: Andrew Faludy, Art
Moses, Marina Strauss,
Florence Simpson, Bob Bettson, Gene Allen, Marilyn Emerson, Tim Gallagher,
Heather Sanguins, Glida
Oran, Maurizio Ceccarelli,
Brian Pal, Phil Stramba, Igor,
Katrinka, Jessica, Joey,
Thomas and Desk McFuck
'Nite all

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880
and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University
of Toronto and is printed by Dawson
Press Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee,
Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St.
George St.

U of T trapped by contradictions

U of T president John Evans yesterday suspended the Governing Council meeting after members of the SDS, now "officially" banned on campus, rushed into the open doors of the council chamber. Evans and Chuck Hanly who made the motion to adjourn seem to feel their private domain is not available to the public except by invitation and ticket.

To the best of our knowledge this is the first time in the Governing Council's existence (albeit a short two years) that it has been necessary to issue tickets on a strict basis. Even Varsity reporters have been able to get into the council chambers with their press cards up to this time. So the administration was obviously expecting trouble.

And the SDS and its sympathizers gave them just that.

What the Governing Council cannot hide or choose not to investigate — in this case academic racism — it ignores. The SDS and sympathetic community groups — including two Toronto Italian daily newspapers — have both condemned Dr. Ian Hector, yet the university once again assumes an ostrich-like position with its head in the sand.

Emprisoned by the system in which it operates (that is, capitalism) the university attempts to pretend society's problems are not its own, since the university "should be a place where all opinion, no matter how dangerous or harmful can be expressed."

The university's action yesterday reminds us of internal affairs vice-president Conway's performance at Monday's meeting of the internal affairs committee. Conway was clearly boxed in — first Bob Anderson's liberal analysis of the SDS suspension as an official campus group, and then by Bill Shabas' brief denunciation of the university for failing to deal with the problem of academic racism at the university.

Yet Conway appeared to be staring into the blue over the whole issue. She remarked that the SDS had physically disrupted Banfield from speaking and had therefore brought about the suspension.

But Conway made no reference to the mental disruptions caused by academic racism on this campus.

Shabas cited the example of the engineering paper, the Toke Oike, as one perpetrator of racist stereotypes, yet Conway remained silent. So did Dr. John yesterday.

Evans could have helped solve the whole problem yesterday by assigning a larger room, such as Convocation Hall, for the Governing Council meeting, instead of the broadloomed council chambers. But he might have thought this was giving in to the Campbell report suggestions which advocated the substantive issues of a disruption be discussed and, if agreement was not reached after negotiations, a mass meeting would be held to settle the matter.

But the Campbell report was conceived in the supra-idealistic late sixties at a time when theories of participatory democracy were at their height. The modern-day university — the university as a factory — cannot tolerate any deviation from the legal norms of the society — Campbell report or not.

Evans' actions and the actions of other administrators and faculty members during the past two weeks will not resolve the problems of the capitalist university.

Athletic banquet archaic

Every year the University of Toronto Athletic Association throws a large banquet to fête its male intercollegiate athletes. Once this dinner might have served an acceptable function—but no longer so.

For one thing, athletes have changed. They probably do not obtain the same pleasure from a banquet today that they might have 15 years ago. And that, undeniably, is the vintage of the athletic dinner with its stiff formality, suit-and-tie dress, meat-and-mashed potatoes menu and toasts to the Queen, etc.

With all these trappings, one might have expected the athletes at this year's dinner to have felt honored. Instead, it was obvious they felt awkward and somewhat foolish at the proceedings and were more than glad when their eventual escape came.

The athletes' only real pleasure of the evening in fact even came before the dinner when they drank and talked with each other at the cash bar. Here they could mingle with athletes from different sports and not worry about formal decorum.

Once, however, they entered the Great Hall and were formally separated into teams, given an array of silverware to be used in a certain order, forced to make polite conversation and given an unsatisfying after-dinner speech by the guest speaker, we doubt they found much in the proceedings to "honor" them.

If this occasion was merely unsatisfying it might be let go at that. However, the annual bill for this dinner is $2,500. This is more money than allotted to 10 intercollegiate sports—golf, skiing, curling, gymnastics, judo, rowing, sailing, squash, tennis and volleyball. Four other sports—fencing, rugby, soccer and wrestling—are allotted only $1000 dollars each more than the banquet. Why should we spend $2500 dollars annually for an unsatisfying social occasion when so many other sports — which presumably bring some satisfaction — get even less than $2,500.

Also, in the spending estimates for the coming year, most sports are being allotted more money to keep up with rising operating expenses. The dinner, however, is still budgeted at $2,500. Presumably catering costs also rise which suggests that the UTAA will get an even worse dinner for their money next year.

The average student and even the average intramural athlete, both male and female, are paying for this outmoded tradition which benefits almost no one, not even the few who attend it.

Banfield visit provocative

In the week following a well organized and broadly based Convocation Hall conference against racism, in which his views were sharply criticized, the conservative social scientist Edward Banfield was scheduled to make four appearances on the University of Toronto campus. Said to have been arranged three months in advance by the university's American Studies programme, Banfield's visit was put through without alteration, despite the mounting anti-racist sentiment manifest at the conference. His appearance can only be regarded as provocative to aroused students and to Toronto's ethnic communities.

None of the platforms on which Professor Banfield appeared was structured so that a dialogue on his views, whether by students, faculty, individuals from the community, or even journalists, could occur. Although in his first appearance he answered a number of questions, he refused to consider either the sociological implications of his views, or the relationship between them and the urban policies of the United States administrations in which he has been an important figure. Such would have been the minimum response of any social scientist porting figure. Such would have been the minimum response of any social scientist attuned to the responsibility for studying the political implications of his work.

In Banfield's second appearance he delivered a prepared speech, but again refrained from a discussion of the specific, controversial issues stemming from his work on minority groups. Students approached him afterwards to pepper him with questions, and some faculty members, unable perhaps to handle the anxiety of the confrontation which they themselves had made inevitable formed a "flying wedge" to whisk him away. In the process they physically abused the students. The next day students and people from the community occupied Banfield's podium and prevented him from speaking any further.

We cherish highly the principle of freedom of speech, thus we do not wish it to become a flag waved to cover bad academic policies. Edward Banfield's background in urban affairs cannot in today's world be presented out of context, and it was incumbent on those responsible for his invitation to respond with far less rigidity. As the Dean of Arts and Sciences has said, they could at least have incorporated a debating format into his presentation.

The circumstances surrounding Banfield's appearance must not be used as an excuse to rush non-academic discipline codes through the Governing Council, nor as an opportunity to dismiss students from the university. Action taken by the administration should be directed to the issue as a whole, and as faculty members we believe that faculty errors in provoking student action will have to be examined as part of the whole issue. We urge that an objective investigation into the recent events be made, which could transform these events, in the spirit of intellectual inquiry, into a learning experience for the university and for Toronto itself. A balanced panel of students, faculty, and community leaders would be appropriate to conduct such an inquiry, and the university community should be prepared to consider its recommendations on how the university should deal with scholars whose work has racist implications.

J. Turk,
Janett Salaff,
Arthur H. Smith,
B. Balduz,
E. Derow,
S. J. Small,
J. H. Simpson,
Ken Walker,
Robert MacKay
Sociology

S. K. Sinha,
Irwin Guttman,
Chandler Davis,
M. S. Srivastava,
Mathematics

Jonathan Kaye,
Linguistics

D. Goldstick,
Philosophy

Boycott new restaurant

Feeling vaguely uneasy but very hungry we decided today to try the new "campus" restaurant (The Elm Flameburger on Harbord and Huron) created with the generous aid of Simcoe Hall. The unease stemmed from our knowledge of the disputed franchise for the restaurant between Karma Co-op and the Flameburger. However we decided to try it since the dispute wasn't necessarily caused by the Flameburger people and that it would be a good idea to have a decent restaurant on campus.

Our discomfort re-emerged when we saw the sign in the window advertising for "waitresses". Job discrimination on the basis of sex is now illegal. Are we to assume that a man could be hired for the job(s) and then be called a "waitress"?

While being served fairly good and even reasonably priced food, we realized that the centre of the rear wall was papered with a design of naked women. It is hard to believe that in this day and age on the University of Toronto campus that the question of sexual objectification of women has not been adequately considered.

This experience has confirmed our thought that perhaps Karma Co-op which at least has an awareness of the current social and political issues of our society would have been a better addition to the community.

Until such a time as the Elm Flameburger removes offensive policies and decorations from its establishment we urge that the restaurant be boycotted.

Margaret Luxton
Kathryn Petersen

Few Canucks in US universities

John Koivuhalmes letter (March 13) was sheer garbage. He obviously doesn't know what he is talking about! According to official American sources, only two and one-half per cent of academics in the US are non-citizens. Contrast this with 44 per cent Americans, 30 per cent Canadians in Arts at Simon Fraser University (which is not unique).

From July 1968, no Canadian could have been hired in the US if a qualified native were around, due to the Government regulations to this effect. Surely it is far more "fascist" to oppress one's own people by denying them access to decent jobs in their own country, than to impose quotas on hiring foreigners from outside Canada.

K. Jean Cottam

Health service 'indifferent'

I am in third year and have frequently had the displeasure of visiting the U of T Health Service. Why do I bother, is my next question? I have continually been shrugged off and given inadequate service, but not until Tuesday, March 12, 1974, did I deem it necessary to complain. It's a free service and I always figured I should be thankful for that.

On Tuesday, however, a friend came to my room in residence, pale and shaking, and distressed because she had been vomiting blood all morning. I quickly sat her down and phoned the Health Service, believing this to be the best course of action due to the fact that I suspected an ulcer and would need a doctor's referral for X-rays. On the phone, the receptionist was extremely pleasant and said to bring my friend immediately. Although it was lunch hour she thought this an emergency and a doctor would be at hand. So we went to the Health Service.

On arriving I told the receptionist that I was the one who had called and was promised immediate care for my friend. We were asked to wait. Twenty minutes later we were told it would not be long. A half hour later were told that the other doctor should arrive soon, although there were obviously many doctors in the backroom. We waited 40 minutes for emergency service with available doctors on the premises. We left.

I took my friend to Women's College Hospital emergency where she was treated immediately and released in 20 minutes. Although they have a monopoly on campus, does this justify the indifferent attitude at the U of T Health Service?

Kath Winegard
University Government Commissioner, VUSAC

SDS action was justified

The University of Toronto has threatened to expel some students who were part of a group which prevented Edward Banfield from speaking there last week. We feel that the protestors were completely justified and insist that all charges be dropped.

Professor Banfield has clearly expressed his views in his books The Unheavenly City and The Moral

Basis of a Backward Society, both required reading in courses at U of T. In the first book Banfield blames poverty and slums in the US on the degraded and pathological culture of the "lower class" who, he explains, are mainly Black. He says that the typical lower class individual finds slum conditions attractive and, for example, "enjoys the freedom to beat one's wife and lie drunk in the gutter". In the second book, Banfield blames the poverty of southern Italians on their alleged backwardness and amorality. For more information on Banfield we would refer the reader to the first of our articles which appeared recently in the Varsity.

The real question, as we see it, is whether or not anyone has the right to propagate racism and prejudice without limit. We think not. Academic freedom does not protect liber or assault, with which racism has more in common than with scientific inquiry. Free speech for Banfield could lead to the implementation of schemes of his such as to send to "a penal village or work camp" anyone who in the court's opinion has a high probability of committing a crime.

We support those who are stopping Banfield before it is too late.

Professor Denis Higgs

Mathematics
Professor William W. Wadge
Mathematics
University of Waterloo

Banfield insults Italian students

As both students at U of T and members of the Italian community of Toronto, we feel insulted by Edward Banfield's visit.

As students we welcome "genuine scholars" (Just as Dr. Evans reported to the Globe and Mail on Friday March 15), but Banfield's irresponsible slander of both southern Italians and Negroes, together with his recommendations as an advisor to Nixon's government, seriously hinder his credentials as either "genuine", or a "scholar". Besides, the same article describes Banfield as a "ridiculously reactionary professor". Genuine scholars should attempt to solve social problems, not accentuate them. We just wonder if dwellers of American Negro ghettos, for whom Banfield proposed "closely supervised housing projects" and "arrest on probable cause", would even indulge in calling him "ridiculous".

As member of the Italian community, we did not come to Canada to be slandered. We understand hesitations when it comes to choosing the correct methods to fight racism, but we disagree with reasons such as "I can't oppose Banfield's books since neither did book reviews in Italian universities" as stated by professor Chandler (head of the Italian Department at U of T) at a forum on "Italians in Canada". Even so, such a stand by Italian establishment would just be to their own advantage.

T. Amoro
Scar I

O. Buonastella
Trin I

P. Diano

M. Fiorillo
SNC I

F. Marchini

T. Marzilli
SMC II

R. Pighin

A. Solemine

Student did not write letter

Being the only Cheryl Rothberg on campus, I was amazed to see my name signed to an article that I had never written. The article was published in the Varsity March 8 and was in regards to Howard Levitt not allowing Laurie Colman's name to appear on the ballot. After making numerous inquiries into Howard Levitt's intentions, I discovered he was in fact working of behalf of Laurie Colman in opposition to the decision of the advisory commission which invalidated his nomination.

I think it is a shame to see that people at this stage in their lives still get a kick out of stunts so childish as this. If whoever wrote the article had something to say, I'm sorry he or she was ashamed to sign his or her name to it (although after reading it I can understand why he or she would be), and don't know how come I was so lucky as to be chosen the author. The contents of the letter were ridiculous and those of you who read it, please disregard any of its implications as it was merely a foolish joke.

Cheryl Rothberg

Faculty not democrats

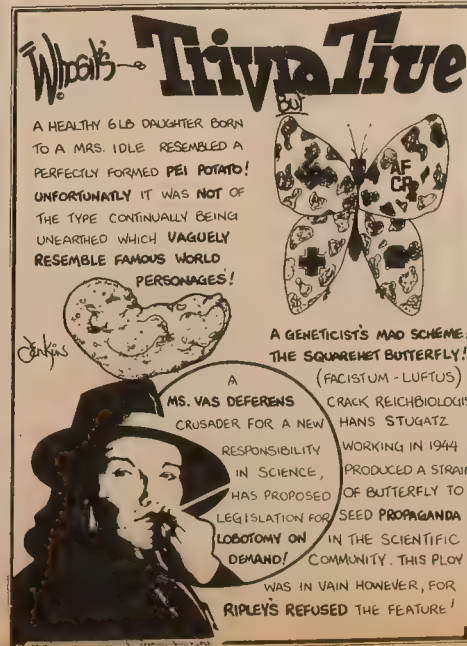

Faculty concern about democratic rights and freedom of speech is somewhat surprising considering their past role in these areas.

Three years ago at a meeting in opposition to the War Measures Act, at which the main speakers were Michel Chartrand and Robert Lemieux, the Western Guard, a racist right-wing organization, attacked the meeting and damaged the doors of Convocation Hall. The administration of the university not only failed to effectively defend the speakers' right but placed the responsibility for the damage done on the organizers of the meeting. The Young Socialists were billed for the damages to the doors. In addition they were told that in future, sponsors of controversial meetings would have to post $1,000 bond with the administration to cover possible damages. "Free speech as long as it's not controversial," was the administration's attitude.

Faculty reaction to that episode was noticeably less than in the present case. Was opposition to the War Measures Act also too hot an issue for them?

Their long-standing position on student parity in the governing of this university is another indicator of their real commitment to democratic procedures. As long as the discipline of students remains the prerogative of the administration and faculty, talk by them of democratic rights is hypocritical.

Patricia Schulz
Socialist League
Innis III

Discipline code has stormy history

By BOB BETTSON

The discipline code's stormy history began in 1968 but this year is the closest the U of T administration has come to implementing a non-academic discipline code.

In 1972-73, internal affairs chairman and engineering student Paul Cadario the 1969 Campbell report was scrapped to make way for new disciplinary procedures later known as the Conway-Cadario code.

Cadario was ably assisted by new internal affairs vice-president, Jill Conway.

The duo drafted the provisions of the new code in innumerable meetings with the internal affairs and academic affairs committees.

That year's SAC, headed by Eric Miglin, another conservative engineer, had promised "Campbell by Christmas" but with the fees strike in the limelight, the administration quietly proceeded to scrap these more liberal disciplinary proposals.

The Campbell report, issued by a parity committee, was criticized by faculty because it recognized the principles of negotiation on the substantive issues raised by disruptive demonstrations as well as the necessity for faculty-student operational agreement on course content and grading.

The faculty was up in arms and managed to scuttle the report, despite student agreement with much of the report.

The code, which first surfaced in March, 1973, dealt with such matters as the successful library occupations by creating a non-academic code containing though provisions on disruptions, with expulsion the penalty.

It also contained new provisions for "law and order" which would cover "disobeying lawful orders" and "conspiracy" to commit an offence.

With the aid of law professor John Swan, the two wrote a code which has been called "extremely repressive," which institutionalizes tough penalties and asks students to sit in judgment on discipline decisions they did not make.

The code also contains double jurisdiction and provides strict penalties for academic offenses such as cheating and plagiarism.

Student organizations at first seemed content on negotiating, and newly elected SAC president Bob Anderson drafted lists of amendments, many of which were ignored, as the code was passed in June while students were off campus.

There had been no campus-wide discussion and the student organizations argued the code should not be adopted until after discussion and suggestions for amendments in the fall.

But the faculty and the Governing Council were adamant and the code was passed in June, providing the old adage "while the cat's away..."

The three student organizations had been ignored and the only concession to students, was a delay until the fall for implementation and decision on the structures using the code.

The battle had been lost but the war was still on, as later events have borne out. A number of SAC activists had not given up and began to pressure Anderson for a SAC position rejecting the code.

Anderson, however, preferred to offer an alternative interpretation as a legal challenge to the Governing Council interpretation of the code. On October 3 he was quoted in a Varsity interview saying: "We can live with the code."

Events, however, reversed Anderson's policy, as the SAC executive and then SAC officially declared themselves in favor of rejecting the code.

The campaign to reject the code began in October and built up to a climax in November with almost all college and faculty councils rejecting the code.

The list is lengthy: SAC, GSU, APUS, the Arts and Science Student Union, Medical Students' Society, Nursing Students' Society, Architecture Students' Society, Hillel House, Ward Six Council, Dr. N. Bruce McLeod, moderator of the United Church, Scarborough Students' Council, St. Michaels' Student Union, Trinity College Student Government, Innis College Student Society, the Political Economy Course Union, Music Student Council, New College Student Council, University College Lit., all eight student governors and a number of left wing political groups. VUSAC later agreed to reject only the non-academic sections of the code.

The SAC position was finally expressed in an op-ed feature in The Varsity on November 12 as a prelude to a larger meeting to discuss the code on Wednesday the 14th.

SAC took what was still another new approach, rejecting the code in its entirety and demanding interim academic protection to defend students from arbitrary action against them on cheating, plagiarism and other academic offenses.

It called for rejection of the code on account of its vagueness, the amount of leeway given to the administration and the repressive clauses outlawing "unduly disruptive" demonstrations.

Also a contentious issue was the neglect for the principles of the more liberal Campbell report, which established the principles of operational agreement in the classroom, significant student representation on all decision-making bodies and negotiation on substantive issues raised by demonstrations.

These were seen by the parity Campbell committee as a prerequisite to disciplinary procedures. SAC accused the Governing Council of ignoring them in passing of the Conway-Cadario code.

The debate moved into a new phase in November with the formation of an umbrella committee to repeal the code, under the wing of SAC but including other activists from political groups and the GSU.

The November 14 meeting was a partial success as almost 200 students gathered to hear various student speakers give their opinions on the code. With only two dissenting votes the SAC position was approved and people resolved to organize for the Governing Council meeting the next week.

In a debate prior to the council meeting, Anderson appeared with Conway at a forum in which Conway tried to defend the code, albeit unsuccessfully in student eyes. Administration spokesmen universally stated the code would be used in good faith, and not as a repressive document.

Internal affairs chairwoman Mar-

nie Paikin, Evan's protegee from Hamilton, decided to defuse the issue and forestall an immediate crisis by putting off the passing of the procedures to implement the code until further negotiations could be held.

The meeting was packed by several hundred jeering students as Governing Council heard an hour of debate before the matter was put off. Anderson told the meeting the code must be rejected for the benefit of students and reiterated the Campbell principles on discipline.

Paikin tried to rationalize the code and gave a long detailed history but only succeeded in arousing the jeers of the angry students. The drama was lacking but the administration's action in backing down was the first sign there could be change in the discipline code.

But it was not a victory, and amid charges of intimidation by faculty representatives, the code's implementation was postponed.

world travel
SERVICE, LTD.

258 College Street

ABC CHARTERS
to Europe

-Youth Fares
-Student Eurail passes

922-4161

DO YOU WANT TO WORK FOR THEATRE, GET PLENTY OF FRESH AIR AND MAKE MONEY, TOO?

TORONTO ARTS PRODUCTIONS
needs Season Ticket Sales Help for Door To Door and Telephone
Canvassing April, May and June

Good working conditions, a chance to meet the public and an opportunity to learn about the theatre.

CALL LIANE DUDMAN
366-1656, ex 25

SMC FILM CLUB
PRESENTS

A FILM BY Luis Buñuel
"THE DISCREET CHARM
OF THE BOURGEOISIE"

Theatre

FRIDAY MARCH 29 $1.00
SATURDAY MARCH 30
7:30 & 10 P.M. - Carr Hall

LAST FEATURE:

"THE EFFECT OF GAMMA RAYS ON MAN-IN-THE-MOON MARIGOLDS"
starring Joanne Woodward

FRIDAY APRIL 5
SATURDAY APRIL 6 $1.00
7:30 & 10 P.M. - Carr Hall

YORK UNIVERSITY
THE CENTRE FOR CONTINUING EDUCATION

OPPORTUNITY TO LIVE AND LEARN ENGLISH OR FRENCH

Federal Bursary Language Programme

A special grant has made available opportunities for full-time students to take a 6-week "intensive" in-residence course at our Glendon Campus (Bayview & Lawrence) this summer. Dates: July 2—August 9, 1974

Enquiries should be sent without delay to:
The Centre for Continuing Education
York University, 4700 Keele St.
Downsview, Ont. M3J 2R6 or telephone (416) 667-2504 for information

University of Toronto
SUMMER PROGRAMMES
in EUROPE

The University of Toronto, in co-operation with the Universities of Nice and Siena, is offering degree courses in French language and literature and Italian fine art, language, literature and civilization during the months of July and August.

Further information:

Woodsworth College
119 St. George Street
Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A9
(416) 928-2400

NOMINATIONS

In the near future, the Academic Affairs Committee of the Governing Council will be considering nominations for

Co-opted membership of the Academic Affairs Committee as well as for its four standing subcommittees

Academic Appeals
Admissions and Awards
Curriculum and Standards
Library

It will also be considering the membership of the Committee for Honorary Degrees. The Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee would welcome suggestions from members of the University community for the membership of these bodies.

Nominations, including a brief resume of the candidates' qualifications and an indication of willingness to serve if selected should be sent to Miss Marie Salter, Secretary, Academic Affairs Committee, Office of the Governing Council, Room 106, Simcoe Hall, University of Toronto, as soon as possible.

THE DEADLINE FOR RECEIPT OF NOMINATIONS
WILL BE
12:00 noon, April 15th, 1974

Code postponed after fight

By BOB BETTSON

The discipline code was postponed in November but not forgotten by students who vowed after the November Governing Council meeting to organize more opposition to prevent the code being revived in January.

SAC tried to maintain interest with a Christmas mailing, explaining its position and including a detachable coupon for students to express their opposition to the code.

But some political groups objected to the mailing and the united student front began to crumble. The fight began in the Committee to Repeal the Discipline Code.

The committee had always been a tenuous alliance between campus political groups and SAC, but the open break over inclusion of the SAC position in the mailing broke the "unity in opposition to the Conway-Cadrio code" according to the left groups, most of which oppose any code.

The committee continued functioning but its January demise was predictable as SAC increasingly ignored what it felt was a small unrepresentative group on the left. On the other hand the left groups, except the Communist party which backed SAC, charged SAC with breaking unity with their position that a code would be acceptable if it was in accord with the Campbell principles.

The split was reminiscent of the library struggle in 1972, but then SAC stayed with the umbrella committee to open the stacks. Unity was preserved and only broke down over a third occupation which was opposed by SAC.

However the struggle in January was not without controversy as SAC began negotiations with the administration on specific changes in the code, despite the avalanche of 3,000 coupons and petitions from students opposing the code.

The clamor began among left groups to stop the negotiations and demand complete rejection of the code.

Anderson, however, said SAC should negotiate for changes while still favoring rejection of the code in principle.

But negotiations proved unproductive as the difficulty in pinpointing the power in the administration and the Governing Council became apparent.

Despite the ending of negotiations in January, that month's meeting of the Governing Council still dealt with discipline as the administration looked for a way to save face. The student mobilization had been successful and a large crowd was assured.

The compromise in this case was reached at a closed session of the council's executive committee and which conceded it would be "injurious" to pass the code while there were significant objections.

The new section of the compromise involved the suggestion that if there was progress on agreement with the student organization, some parts of the code would be passed in March, most likely the less controversial academic section.

However this was unsatisfactory to students who demanded consensus on any sections being implemented. The packed Governing Council meeting saw the outnumbered students defeated as the executive compromise was rubber stamped and a student amendment handily defeated with only the support of one alumni, Graham Cotter.

Most of the council was opposed to what would be in effect a student veto on the code and Conway and Evans said the academic sections should be implemented in March.

Negotiations started shortly after with frequent meetings of a large group including Paikin, Conway and representative of UTFA, the council, APUS, SAC and GSU.

On Monday March 6 the academic sections of the code were approved by the internal affairs committee and on Tuesday they were approved by the academic affairs committee. Implementation dates would be decided at the March meeting of the full council. The non-academic sections would be delayed until January 1975, it was decided.

The changes made were minor because student organizations were seemingly resigned to the swift implementation of at least an academic code. The discipline issue seemed to lose steam, destined only to make an appearance briefly at the March Governing Council and then be postponed until January, 1975.

But this was not to happen. On March 13 about 20 Students for a Democratic Society activists non-violently prevented Edward Banfield, a guest academic who they accused of preaching racist theories, from speaking.

A U of T professor has been charged with assaulting a student in an altercation after one of Banfield's earlier lectures.

Immediately, the reaction of the conservative faculty and administration came down on those who dared infringe upon their definition of "free speech." Many conservative faculty saw this as a vindication of their support for a stringent non-academic code. SAC immediately pointed out this isolated incident should not be used to impose the non-academic code.

Finally the administration dropped its bombshell: the obsolete and illegitimate Caput would be invoked against the members of the SDS who were occupying the platform when Banfield tried to speak.

The Caput only has one student assessor member, SAC president Bob Anderson, who said he will boycott it anyway, as well as deans, senior faculty and administrators. Its reappearance on the scene for non-academic discipline is an ominous indication of the administration's determination to impose some type of non-academic discipline.

The administration is now backtracking, saying Caput is only the last resort, to be applied to the SDS as an "extreme, isolated minority" in the words of Jill Conway. But the underlying issue raised is what the administration will do if there is a disruption supported by most students on the campus on an issue of widespread concern such as staffing, parity or the French department firings.

Will the administration use the Caput instead of the Conway-Cadrio code to crush student struggles with widespread support?

This is one of the issues still unanswered as the year ends and students leave the campus. While they are away the Governing Council will adopt measures on securing free speech on campus. These will be discussed at the May meeting. Some administrators have hinted a policy may be adopted of calling Metro Police on campus to secure free speech if all other measures fail.

But students will remember the last time the Metro Police was called on campus in 1972 to bust up the library occupation.

After the dust cleared the police had caused all the violence.

Discipline has been the biggest issue this year but it will be back next year when the non-academic code is resurrected. Students will have to organize if they want to stop repressive measure from being permanently adopted.

RONNIE HAWKINS
IS AT LOUNGE
HADES
MONDAY NIGHT IS JUG NIGHT?!

THE EMBASSY
BLOOR & BELLAIR
1 Bl. West of Bay St.
OPEN FROM 8 P.M. FIRST SHOW & 30 P.M.

FILMS AT OISE
OPERATED AND SPONSORED BY THE GRADUATE STUDENTS ASSOCIATION

WEDNESDAY
7:30 9:30

APR 4 SCARLET EMPRESS (1941) THE LOVE GODDESSES (1951)
Marlene Dietrich with John Steinberg. Gail Rax with Gail Rax.
Movie only.

APR 10 GONE WITH THE WIND (1939) by Fleming (A.B.) TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT (1944)
with Vivien Leigh, Clark Gable, Leslie Howard & Errol Flynn. 12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15. $1.50 for 1st 3 films only.

APR 17 MALTESE FALCON (1941) TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT (1944)
H. C. Brown, Errol Flynn, John Steinberg.
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

APR 21 ONCE UPON A TIME IN THE WEST (1968) by Sergio Leone with Clint Eastwood, Henry Fonda, Charles Bronson, James Coburn, Jason Robards.
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

MAY 1 Has been replaced by your book night and 10:15

MAY 8 BATTLE OF ALGERS (1966) BURN (1966)
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

7:30 THURSDAY 9:30

APR 4 WOMEN IN LOVE (1929) MUSIC LOVERS (1931)
A. J. Barker, Gail Rax.
Movie only.

APR 11 GONE WITH THE WIND (1939) by Fleming (A.B.) TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT (1944)
with Vivien Leigh, Clark Gable, Leslie Howard & Errol Flynn. 12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

APR 18 THE RELUCTANT ACCIDENT (1931) MYRA BRECKENRIDGE (1930)
R. O. Toole. Max West. Repeat: 12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

APR 25 2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (1968) by Stanley Kubrick with Michael C. Hall, Gail Rax, Errol Flynn, John Steinberg.
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

MAY 2 QUEEN CHRISTINA (1933)
Gail Rax. 12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

MAY 9 CARNAL KNOWLEDGE (1971) WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA SLEIGH (1948) with Richard Widmark, Gail Rax, Errol Flynn, John Steinberg.
12:15, 4:15, 8:15, 10:15.

FOR INFORMATION: 527-9631

OISE Auditorium
250 Bloor St. W.

Management Science

Over the past several decades there has been a trend to adopt a more scientific approach to business problem solving. This approach, known as Management Science, has drawn heavily on mathematics, statistics, economics, and computer science. To provide people trained in the use of Management Science, the Faculty of Commerce at the University of British Columbia has introduced two programmes.

The MSc programme is intended to prepare the student to apply Management Science techniques to the analysis of real problems. During the past year, students were involved in projects which included ambulance location, physician decision making, emergency and disaster preparedness, portfolio analysis, and optimization. Most students received and frequently through part co-operation in sponsored research.

The PhD programme is intended to prepare students for teaching and/or research positions in universities, government and industry. As a result, students are expected to be interested in the development of new methodology and in the advancement of the state of the art. Students in this programme are given a strong background in research.

Students in both programmes further their knowledge through courses in computer simulation, mathematical programming, statistics, stochastic processes, optimization, and similar subjects.

If you enjoy solving problems in a scientific way, perhaps you would find the Management Science programme at the University of British Columbia rewarding. If you are interested, please write to:

Chairman, Management Science Division
Faculty of Commerce
University of British Columbia
Vancouver, Canada V6T 1W5

SPECIAL STUDENT DISCOUNT

CAPTAIN BEEFHEART & THE MAGIC BAND
IN CONCERT
CONVOCATION HALL (UofT)

SUNDAY, APRIL 7
TWO SHOWS 7-10pm
ALL SEATS $4.50 + tax

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT:
ALL EATON'S & O
PHONE 868-8887 FOR CHARGES
SEE THE RECORD MAN AROUND RECORDS
A & A RECORDS, TARGET TAPES
MUSIC WORLD, U of T S.L.C. OFFICE AND THE ROCKY THEATRE

Fired math prof won't have summer job

By ELEANOR SIMPSON

Fired math professor Stephen Salaff probably won't have a job at U of T this summer.

"I don't see how it would be possible," said Alec Waugh, Woodsworth College, registrar when asked if Salaff would be hired by Woodsworth to teach pre-university math with no nomination from the mathematics department.

Salaff has applied for a position with Woodsworth and due to his differences with math chairman George Duff, Salaff obviously will not receive department approval.

In a letter to professor Arthur Kruger principal of Woodsworth, Salaff wrote "to request that a different procedure be used to evaluate application than is currently in use for pre-university courses."

"Specifically, I am requesting that any and all application for this position be given an evaluation which is independent of the nomination procedure used by the mathematics department.

"The latter procedure would, I believe, again prejudice the possibility of my appointment," Salaff wrote.

Woodsworth College, and the division of extension before it, have "always relied on departments to make nominations," said Waugh.

He went on to explain that Woodsworth had neither the staff nor the expertise to adequately screen teaching applicants.

The college has to rely on the knowledge and experience of the various university departments to determine teaching qualifications, Waugh said.

Waugh also said there is no possibility of an otherwise excellent teacher, for example Salaff, being hired if he is not approved by his department.

Salaff had been informed in a letter February 21, from SAC president Bob Anderson, that on one occasion, an instructor who was considered an excellent teacher both by his students and the division of extension was hired although he was not nominated by a department.

The unnamed instructor's hiring came after "negotiations" between the division of extension and the department, Anderson said.

Salaff is considered an excellent teacher by his students and it was in part because of his firing that math students held a 10-day sit in 1973.

In effort to soothe the "sitters" dean Green promised Salaff a chance to lodge his grievances in a fair hearing.

After a meeting between Salaff, Greene, math chairman Duff and tenured math professor Peter Rosenthal—who had agreed to act as Salaff's adviser, Salaff received a letter from Greene which was a detailed judgement of his case.

Both Salaff and Rosenthal remain convinced that the original meeting was just that and in no way constituted either a formal or an informal hearing.

In fact, Greene had been asked whether or not the meeting was some kind of hearing and Greene had replied that it did not.

Rosenthal, who is now in Europe on a sabbatical, has written to university president John Evans about this failure to give Salaff a hearing.

"I told dean Greene that I felt that his actions in stating that Salaff had a right to a hearing and that we should—in the meeting with professor Duff—discuss possible compromises rather than making Salaff's case, and then rendering a judgement as if a hearing had taken place, were grossly unfair and improper.

"I stated that the least he could do, after his previous statements, was to give Salaff a fair hearing.

"I remember dean Greene's answer verbatim: 'Yes, I can understand how you might feel that way. But that letter, to which I gave considerable thought, is my final statement in this matter. Dr. Salaff has every right, of course, to appeal to a higher authority, the president of the university if he feels that I have treated him unfairly.'"

"I understand that Dr. Salaff has now appealed to you. I think that the University of Toronto made a commitment, through dean Greene, to give Salaff a fair hearing in this matter.

"Given the way he has been treated to date, the only hearing that Salaff would consider fair is an open one."

President Evans was not available for comment.

Rape crisis centre going well

By MARILYN EMERSON

Within 24 hours after the opening of the Toronto Rape Crisis Centre in February, the centre received its first emergency call.

The centre has been open for about one month and is already handling about 30 cases of rape through a long process.

A spokeswoman for the centre said: "Things are going extremely well. We are very busy, and there have been no major problems.

"Case work so far bears out our original conceptions about rape. The problems anticipated and studied by the group turned out to be the actual needs of the rape victims."

She said there are about 100 women involved in the work of the centre now. And there are more women volunteering all the time.

The centre has received very little negative response. Co-operation from police, hospitals and social agencies has been good.

The centre operates entirely on donations and volunteer help. A woman who has been raped may, at any time, call the centre at 487-2345 and receive immediate help.

Not all of the calls to the centre have been emergency calls. A lot of them have been "after the fact" calls.

The centre is handling rape crimes which occurred as much as six months ago.

Some victims have contacted the centre after calling other agencies. The centre is helping these victims with medical and legal problems.

One woman, raped 26 years ago, contacted the centre to reveal how the crime had affected her entire life.

The work of the centre so far indicates that common notions of rape are incorrect.

Their information compiled from the details of rape shows:

- Nice girls do get raped.
- Rapists are most often strangers.
- Rape is an act of violence, not sex.
- Rapists are not "insane."
- Rapists are not men who "lose control."
- Most rape is premeditated.
- Most rapes do not occur "in the streets."

Women working for the centre feel one of their most important jobs is to explode the myths surrounding the crime of rape.

A spokeswoman said: "Society points its finger at the woman. Hence society thinks of putting the woman away."

"We feel the curfew ought to be put on the men. The emphasis must be taken off the female in the crime of rape."

"It's all a matter of power. In societies where power is not all in the hands of men, there is no rape."

"This is a crime that men have gotten away with, but, for a woman it is an incredible burden to bear."

Normally a woman going through with legal procedures against the rapist receives no support.

"The present laws regarding rape are dreadful and frightening," said a spokeswoman.

"They are designed to test the credibility of the victim. Presently a woman's past sex life is allowed as evidence for the defense in the crime of rape."

"The present laws of evidence allow the victim to be victimized," she said.

Female lawyers working for the centre are looking into the possibilities of legal reform. It is hoped the federal Law Reform Commission will do away with some of the present rules regarding evidence in the crime of rape.

In order to achieve its aims the centre is actively involved in mass education. By request women from the centre have been speaking to various groups in the city.

TRINITY COLLEGE CHAPEL PASSIONTIDE, HOLY WEEK & EASTER

Passion Sunday - March 31st

9:30 a.m. Sung Eucharist & Sermon - Music by Darke & Byrd Preacher: Canon Buchner

Palm Sunday - April 7

9:30 a.m. Blessing & Distribution of Palms & Sung Eucharist - Preacher: The Rev'd. Wm. Bothwell, former chaplain to the university.

Holy Week

Mon. Tues. & Wed. Holy Eucharist at 12:15 p.m. & 5:15 p.m.
Thursday - 12:15 p.m. & Sung Eucharist at 5:30 p.m.
Wednesday - 5:45 p.m. "De Profundis" of deLalande sung by the chapel choir

Good Friday - Liturgy at 11:00 a.m.

Easter Even - 10:30 p.m. The Liturgy of the Vigil & Solemn Eucharist of Easter

Easter Day - 9:30 a.m. Sung Eucharist

The University of Toronto Day Care Centre is scheduled to open within the next few months for children aged two to five. This service will be available to members of the University community on the basis of personal and financial need. If you think you would be interested in using this service when it becomes available, OR in the future, please complete the form below and send it to:

Secretary
Advisory Committee on Programmes
U of T Day Care Centre
Room 141, Lower Exam Hall
Simcoe Hall
University of Toronto

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

PHONE NO.

YOUR RELATION TO THE U OF T.....
(please be specific)

NAME/S AND AGE/S CHILD/REN UNDER 5 YEARS

The level of fees has not yet been determined. Some parents will be eligible for municipal financial assistance. The Centre also plans an active volunteer program to lessen fees.
HOW MANY HOURS PER WEEK COULD EACH PARENT VOLUNTEER.....

AMOUNT ABLE TO PAY.....
(up to $100 per month, per child)

Adath Israel Youth Community

"Thy rod and Thy STAFF do comfort me."

—Psalm 23:4

Applications are now being accepted for staff of synagogue youth program. Positions open for dynamic, committed leaders of groups for 6 - 18 year olds, starting in September. Sunday afternoon, evening and Shabbat sessions.

Call Youth Department, 635-5340

Psychodrama: Farm Workshops - July 1 - 7 or August 4 -

11, 1974, in Devon, England (6 hours from London).

The sessions will be run by Marcia Robbins, M.A.,

FORMER FACULTY OF MORENO INSTITUTE, New York and previous E.G.O. faculty at York University Toronto.

MARCIA ROBINS HAS WORKED AND TAUGHT PSYCHO-

DRAMA IN HOSPITALS AND UNIVERSITIES IN U.S. AND

CANADA. This training workshop in psychodrama is primarily for people in the fields of psychology, psychiatry, education, Social Work and related areas. Professionals and students from the U.S., Canada and Britain will be participating. It will be held in the rolling countryside of Devonshire, in an 18th Century farmhouse. Accommodation on farm provided.

FEES: $168 for week. DEADLINE registration June 12.

WRITE: MARCIA ROBINS, HOLWELL, EAST DOWN, BARN-STAPLE, DEVON, ENGLAND.

ROUND RECORDS

46 Bloor West - One Flight High 921-6555

Appearing at Convocation Hall
Thurs. Apr. 18, 6:30 & 10 p.m.

Tickets and albums still available

This house could disappear in a new Vic development scheme.

Vic land may go commercial

By MARINA STRAUSS

If initial "background information" to Victoria College land development is any indication of the final plans, the northeast campus is heading towards commercial use of its land.

However the information, compiled by a development consultant firm, is shrouded by a veil of secrecy and is to be officially made public only by April 18.

Project Planning Associates Ltd., hired by Vic in January to set out alternatives for development of the strategically positioned area bounded by Sultan, Thomas and Charles Streets, has completed a rough draft of its preliminary study.

Members of the task force charged with investigation of the development are keeping the information "confidential" until it is officially presented to Vic's governing body, the Board of Regents, April 18.

PPA spokesman Ernest Tonge expects the final draft to be in the hands of task force members by today.

"Our aim was to get it done before classes were over," he stressed.

Tonge could not explain why the board of regents is not meeting before April 11, when classes end.

Termining the study Phase One of the report, task force student member Pat Remy admitted to The Varsity "the type of information gathered implies" the land is to be used for "commercial development."

She emphasized, however, Phase One does not deal with concrete proposals of any kind of any development.

But she added such proposals "may have already slipped into the decision."

"I think the architect is pushing for classy, low-level boutiques on the corner of St. Thomas and Charles Street," Remy said, adding there "may be a small high-rise building."

The firm has promised students some accommodation for co-operative housing and athletic facilities, but "it's all been said and not written down anywhere," Remy pointed out.

The "strategy task force" struck by the Vic board of regents, consists of two board members, two Vic administrators, and two representatives from each of the college's faculty and students.

Vic president Goldwyn French, a member of the group, refused to comment to the Varsity on Phase One of the plans, saying he hadn't received them yet.

But Remy felt PPA was doing a poor job. "They were supposed to have the report on Phase One ready by the end of January," she noted.

By early March PPA could only come up with "data they already had for a study for Cumberland Park," Remy said, pointing out they were still collecting $8,000.

The only new information in the report pertained on an expected mushrooming of development on Bay Street between Queen and Bloor, she said.

Remy indicated the draft report on Phase One deals among other things, with traffic flow along Charles Street.

Although PPA "tried to get the street closed, city hall would not allow it," she said.

PPA spokesman Tonge, however, denied the firm has spoken to the municipal government about Charles Street.

The Phase One report deals with service aspects of development, and discusses as well open spaces, and historical value of buildings, Remy explained.

Phase Two is to deal with "conceptual alternatives" and is to spell out exactly how space should be filled.

Money is problem for jock building

Plans were unveiled Tuesday for a new $9.7 million athletic building to be constructed beside the Benson building but the hurdle of finances is still plaguing the construction timetable.

Vice president (business affairs) Alex Rankin recommended approval of the building but noted the university only had approximately $6 million in funds "in hand." He said the rest would have to come from other sources.

There will also be a donation from Cansports of $133,000. This company owns the Toronto Toros. SAC led a unsuccessful campaign last year to ban the Toros from using the student founded Varsity arena.

It is hoped the rest of the funds will come from the alumni, and the provincial and federal governments. Indications are that the federal government will chip in $500,000 and the province a million.

But the rest will have to come from a direct levy on the users — the students, — said Rankin. They will have to come up with $1,550,000 if one scheme is followed.

However, Rankin told the Varsity there would have to be a levy after a referendum — it wouldn't be automatic.

GOT SOME SPARE TIME THIS SUMMER?
MAKING PLANS FOR NEXT FALL?
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN SOCIAL SERVICE?

The Canadian Cancer Society
needs volunteers in its

SERVICE-TO-PATIENTS PROGRAMME.
eg. - patient transportation
- child care
- patient visiting & rehabilitation
- teaching patients various skills and hobbies
- dressings

*For further information, contact:
Canadian Cancer Society 481-6171
or Medical Society Office 928-8730

University College
Literary and Athletic Society

Appointed Positions

Director of the Playhouse
Snack-bar Manager
Orientation Chairman
Gargoyle Editor
Secretary

Apply by mail or in person at U.C. Junior Common Room by April 4

THE S.A.C. JOINT COUNCIL MEETING will be held

Wednesday April 3, 1974
at 7:30 p.m.

in the Engineering Council Chambers,
Galbraith Building

old and new SAC reps. are strongly urged to attend

HOLY WEEK

St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel
The Newman Centre
Hoskin Avenue at St. George St.

Palm Sunday 7 April
Mass at 10 a.m. and 12 noon

Holy Thursday 11 April
Solemn Eucharist at 7:30 p.m.

Good Friday 12 April
Celebration of the Lord's Passion at
3 p.m.

Holy Saturday 13 April
Easter Vigil at 10:30 p.m.

Easter Sunday 14 April
Mass of the Resurrection at 10 a.m. and 12 noon

Campus centre still a dream

By DICK BROWN

U of T's perennial pipedream, The Campus as Campus Centre, blew a quick puff of smoke later in the year and promptly dispersed to the four winds, although with the Peter Pan promise to be back again next year. The original impossible dream your friendly local corporate welfare bum (tax loopholes free of charge). According to the Campus Centre report, other dragons are nasty critters too, snorting and fuming and creating a hell of a mess, particularly in the western sector of the campus.

As the report states: "Traffic is the dragon. St. George (the report doesn't say if there's any connection to the famous knight) splits the university's most heavily populated area into two sections — students in their thousands cross and re-cross the street daily."

Labelling the rush-hour raceway as the "most serious problem" facing the beauty of the campus the Campus Centre report borrows a little trite jargon from the late 1960s

Even the recent progress report urges the transformation of St. George from a demolition derby site to "St. George Blvd." style sleepy little street, narrowed and tree lined with quaint little shops catering to the light-hearted whims of student fanciers.

The southwest campus would be a Grecian treasure to behold. Huron and Wilcox streets would be turned over to pedestrians and the former intersection would be become a grassed-in amphitheatre for live outdoor plays, rallies, or summer ice cream socials.

The streets themselves would become lush treed-in cul de sacs and provide a quiet area away from the hustle and bustle of oppressing academia.

Those quaking in terror these days with the thought of having to enter the hallowed halls of Sid Smith to write that dreaded examination, fear not.

The guardian angel of Campus Centre is with thee, and knows whereof you tremble.

By the time the seraphims and cherubims unfold their blessed vision of Sid Smith, Shakespeare is being performed in the lobby, "lush green plants and sunlight" capture the heavenly rays of sunlight, and "vines hanging from trellises" grace a pristine fish pond in this newly-created Eden.

Not a bad way to flunk an exam.

The dreamers of the Campus Centre painted a picture designed to win the hearts and minds of the campus users, but in at least two areas, they ran short on practical insight.

Still in the progress report are glittery recommendations to provide more services on campus for students and do something about St. George Street.

The Campus Centre planners might have held a sharper sword to go killing dragons if they had checked city hall to find both the city and metro roads departments want to leave St. George as is.

Likewise, Her Majesties Postal Service is not likely to go stamping into action to build a new post office considering the campus has three: Simcoe Hall and two adjoining the northwest campus.

The future of campus centre is still a dreamy vision with little hope of any real progress until the money arrives, and even with 27 eight by ten color glossy photographs, there's no real green stuff in sight except the 89-page report — and that's not legal tender.

Pipe Dreams: 8 Dec and 4 Aug '74

came out during a sleepy day in 1971 when the joint SAC-administration task force published an 89-page glossy covered architect's conception of what the St. George campus could look like with enough money.

The only things missing from the 1971 report were 27 eight-by-ten color glossy photographs with circles and arrows and a paragraph on the back of each one — and, of course, money.

That lack of money, due to the provincial government's freeze on capital spending, has stalled the plan majeure, and the beautifying of the central campus has been relegated, in the greatest of University Traditions, to a committee for further study.

Perhaps the biggest non-event of the year was the external affairs committee meeting two weeks ago when the Campus Centre progress report appeared like magic in Simcoe Hall's board room.

Alas, Simcoe Hall's fairy god-mother forgot her magic wand for the report bore the hand of mere mortals with a call for a "comprehensive long-term plan for the improvement of the aesthetic quality of the campus grounds."

The problem was somebody forgot to suggest where the money would come from, until a knight in shining armor revealed the dragon lurking in the woodwork.

The dragon turned out to be the university's upcoming fundraising drive for U of T sesquicentennial — an honorable mention to anyone who pronounces it correctly the first time.

Aside from being a time for the university to pat its collective back and congratulate itself in a self-indulgent orgy for a 150th anniversary, all those wily gnomes in the business affairs office have figured out an angle:

Hit the corporations for as many big bucks as possible to help celebrate and look like good corporate citizens.

The word gets around when it comes to free handouts and the Campus Centre planners, undaunted by Bill Davis' tightfisted bank account, are getting their armor ready for a sesquicentennial jousting match to get the reward for their fair maiden: money for campus centre courtesy of and suggests an idea "to turn it from the problem into the solution."

The main objective of the Campus Centre report is to set forth some architectural ideas on how to turn the grisly urban reality of a downtown university into something bearing a vague resemblance to the Hanging Gardens of Babylon.

For instance the mudhole which passes itself off as a parking lot across the street from the Robarts Library is the ugly duckling which becomes a swan complete with trees, benches, a swimming pool in the summer, and an ice rink in the winter with picnic tables under the spreading chestnut trees.

Of course there's still parking, but it discreetly plays second fiddle to the idyllic surroundings.

The dreamer—Mortimer

Dear old dull Sid Smith will become a blossoming flower if the money for the project ever materializes. Note the theatre in the centre.

By Canadian University Press

The strike and sit-ins backed student demands for parity with faculty in all decision-making in the French department and for a rehiring of

The students had been told earlier

A rally was held at 1 pm. About 800 to 1,000 students attended and then marched on Bourn's office, which was locked and guarded by police. Fourteen police vehicles, in-

The French Student Union met March 20 to discuss administration offers. It accepted an offer for parity representation for students on

The next day the administration announced that it agreed to hold an emergency open senate meeting in the phys ed building within a week to discuss parity and security.

UNIVERSITÉ DE MONTRÉAL

LEARN FRENCH WHERE FRENCH IS AT HOME

ÉCOLE FRANÇAISE D'ÉTÉ 1974

JULY 2nd — AUGUST 9th

Booklet on request:

SERVICE D'EDUCATION PERMANENTE

C.P. 6128, Montréal 101, Québec, CANADA

ADAMS APPLE
shoe Boutique

AN OUTSTANDING COLLECTION FOR SPRING '74
IN EARTHY COLORS OF BROWN, TAN, BEIGE,
BURGUNDY, NAVY AND BLACK. FROM $34.00

Open Thursday and Friday Nights.

Master, Charge and Credit Cards honored.

C.O.D. orders accepted.

101 Bloor Street West
115 Yonge Street
253 Yonge Street
774 Yonge Street

1475 Yonge Street
Fairview Mall
Cedarbrae Shopping Plaza
Brampton Shoppers World
Mississauga Shopping Centre

Bramalea city Centre
Oshawa Shopping Centre
Georgian Mall (Barrie)
35 King St W (Cobourg)
202 Princess (Kingston)

*"Design and Word Trade Marks in Canada of the Villager Shoe Shoppes Ltd."

the kensington

FILM SCHEDULE

$1.25

668 COLLEGE

[illegible]

'73

ARSITY

THE varsity Supplement

Falconbridge's eagle is scanning the globe for future investments; see feature beginning page 16.

Britain's Tories flub the election and Liberals laugh

Canadian press coverage of the British elections has focused almost entirely on the controversial miners' strike. In the following feature — partly written before and partly after the election — the chevron's "London correspondent", Jon McGill, examines this and other issues surrounding the election.

McGill analyzes the Heath government's record since its upset victory in 1970, and the post-election manoeuvring typical of minority governments; he places Jeremy Thorpe's middle-of-the-road Liberal Party in its thorny position with no program to promote, and no permanent following to assure its success in future elections.

Britain's last General Election before this year was in 1970, and at that time the major issues were Labor nationalization programs, the entry of Britain into the Common Market, and inflation.

In what was commonly regarded as a "surprise" result, the Conservative Party, led by Edward Heath, took office from the Labor incumbents, with a majority of 30 seats. That result ran contrary to the polls which gave Harold Wilson a pre-election victory margin of the same size.

Having been given the reigns of power by an electorate largely fed up with the waverings of the Labor Party, Heath's Conservatives made capital from the "inaptitude" of Labor, an incompetence which bore some (but far from all) responsibility for the economic ill-health of Britain.

Much of Heath's early period as Prime Minister was spent dragging Labor over the parliamentary coals. When the Conservative Party finally came to the business of government, it proceeded to prove itself more incompetent than any British government of this century. A catalogue of Conservative measures between the end of 1970 and the winter of 1974 might well be called a "Comedy of Errors", were it not for the fact that Conservative policy was distinctly tragic for many people in this country.

It must be said, in the interests of objectivity, that the Conservative Party was not the sole author of the catalogue of crimes. They inherited the balance of payments deficit, were heirs to inflation, and were the recipients of trade union bitterness initially engendered by Labor hypocrisy.

The fact remains, however, that in attempting to rectify the political wrongs, the Conservative government seemingly went out of its way to antagonize those whom it should have placated, and encouraged those to whom further encouragement meant deepening the gap between the already very distinct classes here.

Tories mismanaged Ireland

The major political problem of the government prior to 1970 was the "Irish problem", or to be more accurate, the Northern Ireland civil war problem.

A cursory knowledge of British history reveals the mismanagement of the "Irish question" had its origins in Conservative Party politics, dating from 1886. It is indicative of the non-progressive nature of Conservatism here that current Tory policy is a direct graft from the Victorian era. The All-Ireland Congress, lauded by the "liberal" press as a major breakthrough, is in fact, anachronistic. It merely follows precedent, a precedent which ensures Tory control of Northern Ireland by the device of setting up "front" councils, while behind the scenes deals are finalized between Westminster and the Unionists.

The post-1970 government must bear heavy responsibility for "Bloody Sunday", the January 13, 1972 shooting of 13 "IRA snipers" in a Belfast street. It was this government, too, which decided to intern "suspected terrorists" without trial, a measure directly responsible for the escalation of terrorism in Northern Ireland in 1972.

However, it is not the spectre of Northern Ireland which haunted the current election campaign. Neither the electorate, nor the three major parties, considered this century-old "nuisance" to carry much weight in non-Irish Britain.

The issues which did carry weight are remarkably familiar, and with two major exceptions, 1974 is deja vu with regard to 1970.

Inflation, a primary issue in 1970, when Heath was to cut prices "at a stroke", is worse in Britain than at any post-war period since 1947. Far from being cut at a stroke, prices have risen 47 per cent since December, 1970. Mortgage rates have more than doubled; loans, more obtainable, go out at 16-18 per cent interest, and while the banks made an "embarrassing" profit in 1973 of more than twice the 1972 rate, the customer sees his savings dwindle as the pound sinks rather than floats.

The Conservative response to these problems was two-fold — defend and attack, often at the same time. The now infamous "phases" of Heath's economic policy are largely to blame for the ills ranging from industrial disputes to property speculation.

The intent of phases one, two and three were obvious; they were designed for "growth", a term which in Britain meant consolidation and escalation of profits at the expense of wages and prices. So, far from adequately dealing with the balance of payments deficit, the "phases" are witness to a deficit figure in October, 1973, which was 10 times the June, 1970 figure.

The Conservative government was elected on a platform which included the disavowal of all statutory wage controls; phase three included such controls and was, in fact, preceded by a measure which has outraged British labor: the Industrial Relations Act. Not since 1926 have the trades unions been so seriously threatened.

Perhaps in a Canadian or American context, the Act does not appear sinister at all. However, British labor is in a different position than its North American counterpart. Arbitration and settlement by rule of laws are unheard of in modern British labor contexts, yet this is what the Act produced. The Act also set up an Industrial Relations Court, which was to enforce all decisions.

The Court was, and is presided over by a team of Tory judges who sit as rewards for "favors" or "services rendered". Recently, an engineering firm, which refused to recognize a local union branch, locked out its 16 workers. The national executive of the Engineers Union backed the workers and were immediately fined 100,000 pounds ($240,000). So cowed were national unions that barely a murmur was heard from labor.

Miners' strike hits the government

In January, 1972, the first major challenge to Conservative policy took place, in the form of a national miners' strike. The government recognized, as it does today, that the miners comprise perhaps the one labor group strong enough to stick to its demands.

The government gave in, although not without a needlessly drawn out battle; it is in large part, that defeat which was responsible for Heath's "iron" stance in 1974. There can be little about that the Tory policy, since 1972, is designed not to "curb" union power, but to break it down completely.

To embark upon such a stance on a series of confrontations is an indication of the Tory conception of strength. There is no doubt that, until the current miners' action, Heath believed that the series of coercive and repressive measures his government carried out could indeed keep union power deflected along the lines of phase three settlements. The miners' stance has served to remind Heath once more that there is more than one concept of power, and that united industrial strength can and will win out over financial strength.

The issues of inflation and industrial relations should by themselves provide sufficient fodder for election cannons. With the revived Common Market entry issue thrown in, a full slate was evident. Yet, in the election, these three issues remained to a surprising extent peripheral. This was not due to an unwillingness by Labor to fight on these issues; on the contrary, it was the Labor Party that was striving to keep the campaign on the even keel of traditional issues like nationalization of certain industries, as well as deal with the aforementioned problems.

The Conservative campaign has, however, since November been geared to a "who runs Britain" platform, positing the polarization of the government (i.e. democracy) versus trades union power and the "misuse" thereof.

It did not take long for the Tories to drag out the decaying corpse of the "Red under the bed"; the presence of Mick McGahey, a Communist, on the executive of the National Union of Mineworkers provided an ideal scapegoat-target. The "red scare" campaign reached its height (depth?) in series of articles in the "democratic" press, the Sunday Times and the Daily Express.

The Express, the ink-splattered child of our own Lord Beaverbrook, painted the picture of men led by Moscow to bring down democracy in favour of Soviet authoritarianism. It also published a story concerning a Home office list of militant groups to be proscribed in certain situations. The Times published article upon article about "extremists", "militants" and "dedicated revolutionaries".

In January, Heathrow Airport welcomed the presence of troops to guard against "Arab terrorists". Surprisingly, from a terrorist point of view, the troops clocked in at nine and left at five! The charade indeed smacked of "manoeuvres" even to the usually naive liberal press.

Whether anyone took the "red scare" seriously or not is open to question. There is no doubt that the groups on the "far" left, Trotskyites and "Marxist-Leninists" were worried. Unusual episodes were recorded: not the common variety charges of "harassment" but unprecedented (in recent years) charges of unlawful police entry, seizure of personal effects without a warrant, disruption of legal meetings and undercover infiltration of several left groups.

Energy "crisis" affects Britain also

There was of course a further element in the "crisis" situation which was not present in 1970, and that is the energy situation. Despite a series of back-slapping meetings with Arab leaders, and a politically hypocritical arms-for-oil deal, Britain's energy future lies in coal and North Sea gas and oil. To aggravate an industry which has time and time again been sold out in favor of the oil companies, that is the coal industry, may be politically rewarding in the short term, but in the long term it is suicidal.

Miners are leaving the pits at the rate of hundreds per month, and the only thing that will keep them and attract other miners is financial reward. Mineworkers as a group are perhaps the most class-conscious section of the British workers, and they undoubtedly have the longest memories. Most of the men in the pits can still remember the promises of past governments, Tory and Labor promises which spread the message of "we will see you right".

Far from fulfilling such promises, successive governments since 1945 have abandoned coal interests for the lucrative benefits of cheap oil. Now that oil is neither cheap, nor readily available, coal is back in fashion. Back in fashion too are the promises. The miners' case is clear: promises mean nothing, material reward everything.

This message is aimed at every political party, yet only the Labor Party is willing to listen.

The issues which ran through this election campaign and were present in 1970, will either fade or be altered by policy. Most of the issues will be death

HI HO, HI HOPES

the Cleveon-Waterloo

with in short-term policies, that is, put in abeyance for future politicians to resurrect.

Some things remain, among them the energy crisis and the "extremist versus moderate" argument. This argument, regardless of "who governs Britain", is both the most important and the least likely of solutions under present conditions. The Tories see the solution in terms of eroding union power; the Labor Party, in terms of a "new social contract".

Neither party can admit, without risking political life, that the solution must be put in an either-or case. Either the "two nations" are made one, through complete and irrevocable change, or one of the "nations" submits to the will of the other.

After the storm

Few aspects of the recent British General Election attracted as much national and foreign attention as the Liberal "revival".

In a campaign largely devoid of real excitement and honest exposure of issues, it may have been logical for the media to seize upon liberal resurgence as a legitimate feature of national politics. Nevertheless, there is little doubt that massive media exposure made the Liberal strength a beneficiary of the self-fulfilling prophecy.

The origins of the upsurge in Liberal support lie in a series of by-election victories in the past two years. Despite the fact that by-elections, in Britain, have seldom been accurate gauges of national political preference, the Liberal victories and near-victories preference, the Liberal victories and near-victories passed, according to press observers, a national swing of some size to the Liberal Party.

Unfortunately, few political commentators were willing to examine the Liberal renaissance in terms of party policies. That fact is not surprising, considering that such policies were not yet formulated by the party, and only the imminence of a general election fostered an exposition of policy. Previously the Liberal position had been almost exclusively based on the "Moderate alternative" image nurtured by party leader, Jeremy Thorpe. Certainly, Thorpe and his cohorts read national moods well, for there was indeed some measure of voter alienation from traditional Twentieth Century Conservative-Labor allegiance.

When, in the latter part of 1973, Edward Heath chose to make "extremism" the bete noire of British politics, he played into the hands of the Liberal stance. Heath, of course, referred to Labor and Trade Unions extremists; there were, however, many who, although no friends of the Labor movement, also viewed Conservative labor policies as extreme in the other direction.

As the shouting match between the Tories and Labor escalated, the Liberal party maintained its position as middle of the road, rational, polite, and above all, untainted by either of the "extremist" positions. Thorpe was the third man in all political debate, embodying reason and "national unity" based on a centrist position. Again, Thorpe was appealing to an electorate which was rapidly losing traditional party fervor.

In a period of "crisis" during which the Conservatives and Labor had called for action in the "national interest", only Thorpe and the Liberals were seen as placing that interest above party allegiance. Of course, since the Liberals had no entrenched party position to protect, they were ideally situated for maintenance of an altruistic stance. With a mere six seats in the House, there was small danger of electoral loss, and a vision of substantial gain.

The Liberals quickly became the quintessential opportunists. Unlike the Labor or Conservative parties, they were given two opponents to attack. Neither Tories nor Labor were willing to bring the Liberal Party into their assault for two good reasons: there was no party platform with substance enough to attack, and both parties were wary of giving added credence to the Liberals by stooping to denigrate them. Both leaders, Heath and Harold Wilson, were aware of the dangers of the self-fulfilling prophecy, dangers already seen in the press treatment of the Liberals.

Liberal opportunism in a torse shell

Liberal opportunism was most obvious in its party "manifesto", published a mere two weeks before polling day. That document was a masterpiece of non-commitment. Most of its platform seemed to derive from mixing Tory and Labor positions, thereby arriving at a Liberal "centre". This mixture enabled them to take away the "threat" of Labor's nationalization policies, while still shying away from the Tory "free enterprise" idol. On the issue of Scottish oil, for example, the Liberals were able to espouse state control and private control. Private industry would exploit the reserves, while a state body would "regulate profits".

Labor relations also caught the Liberal eye. The Industrial Relations Act "stood as a monument to attempted Tory repression and a perpetual reminder to the Labor Party of its capitulation to union pressure..." The Liberal solution was facile: "We advocate industrial partnership... to achieve the identification of employees' interests with those of the firm..." "Interests" are defined further in the platform, safeguarding "millions of pounds through industrial harmony and responsible wage bargaining". The Liberals advocate a profit-sharing system, whereby "equal shares" will be distributed to employees.

They therefore envision the possibility of buying off legitimate wage grievances by tying the worker irrevocably to a disguised productivity deal.

As the manifesto states, "there is little to be gained by wage claims in excess of productivity". By this criterion, workers who are already engaged in maximum production, i.e. the miners, can expect little from a Liberal government.

In the time-honored tradition of Liberalism everywhere, the present Liberal Party stands for the "Just Society", a society whose economic foundation rests upon worker acquiescence to the sanctification of profit and efficient management.

A good deal of Liberal attention is focused upon the "anachronistic" trade unions; the confrontation made inevitable by "management versus unions mentality" must be eradicated in the "national interest". Yet, that "national interest" is as vaguely defined by Liberals as by Tories. The message that unions are not in the "national interest" is, however, quite clear.

In the manifesto preface, Thorpe does pay homage to his Liberal heritage: "Our present society is grossly unfair in its distribution of privileges and material rewards between capital and labor... the restructuring of our society is in sight". It is understandable that many observers here feel that they have heard it all before from Labor, from Tories, and now from the Liberals. The message is Victorian; the message is the party.

The election results have both supported and repudiated the Liberal "surge". The party gained eight seats, giving it 14 in the new House, and the "balance of power". Those 14 seats are not a reflection of the popular vote, which presented Liberals with seven million supporters as opposed to 11.5 million for each of Tories and Labor.

This situation has, and rightly so, sparked anew the flame of debate over proportional representation. Neither Tories nor Labor are likely to be sympathetic to the Liberals, for obvious reasons. The electoral change necessary to include a proportional representation is huge; it is also not in Tory or Labor interests. Thus any Liberal "resurgence" is shattered by a "catch 22". They cannot in the near future form a government unless they get electoral change; the only party likely to initiate such changes are the Liberals.

Balance of power is tenuous

The only hope for Liberals, at present, is the "balance" position which they now hold. It is a weak position, if only because they must emerge at the next General Election as political scapgoats. Politically they are closer to Labor, but they may well lose the large Conservative swing vote. Similarly, if they support the Tories the Labour swing voter will defect. Their alternatives are limited by the situation. They have tried the coalition road, and have seen it fail.

They may now prefer to be spectators, a role which will do them great harm in any future election. In some sense, their "revival" is also the key to a rapid demise. That demise may be averted if they manage to maintain their "nation above party" position, but there are many in the party ranks who will soon tire of such a stance, faced as they are with a choice of non-partisanship or an opportunity to use the party position to force some aspects of Liberal gospel onto national policy.

Finally, the Liberal Party has yet to reckon with the possibility that Labor could cut the feet from under the "resurgence". A Labor minority government will not be able to push its "controversial" policies through; it will therefore settle for popular policies which have immediate impact, such as raising old age pensions, halting rent increases, and returning to the five-day work week. Such measures will steal the "moderate" thunder from the Liberals, and will in fact, deprive them of a substantial part of their platform. Settlement with the unions will alienate the Tory voter, but the Liberals, too, are committed to such settlement of current disputes.

Liberal cries of an end to the two-party stranglehold are, to say the least, premature. They are the beneficiaries to a great extent of a particular economic situation, and have grown largely by reacting rather than initiating. Again, like Liberalism everywhere, they are self-fulfilling under the weight of traditional liberal responses to political problems.

By relying upon what they like to call the "moderation and rationality" of the British electorate, they are attempting to resurrect that which had a nebulous life, if indeed it breathed at all, in an attempt to reconcile capital and labor, in attempting to awaken "social justice" and in calling for co-operation, the Liberals have missed the political point so long adopted by Labor and the Tories; Britain is a nation of extremes, and the gaps are growing.

The bridge of Liberalism is founded upon positions proven inoperable and unsound half a century ago. Political inexperience, lack of radical alternative programs, and an insistence upon following dead tradition portend a brief political resurrection. Liberals had best keep their Edwardian crypt open.

Toronto's Falconbridge combs the globe for resources and profits

The following feature on Falconbridge is adapted from a lengthy corporate study completed by the Development Education Centre, 200 Bedford Road, Toronto.

The Falconbridge piece analyzes Canadian imperialism in action, outlining Falconbridge's holdings in not only Canada but the world. The report also reveals the social conscience (or more, properly, the lack of one) of the corporation and explains its links with United States investments.

Tucked away in three-and-one-half floors of the Commerce Court West building in Toronto's downtown jungle is a corporate octopus known as the Falconbridge Group.

"One hundred and ten Falconbridge companies" have their offices located in the three-and-a-half story suites, purrs the woman with a Muzak voice who answers the phone.

The firms probably represent one of the most concentrated areas of power in Canada.

In True North Strong and Free banana-republic style, Falconbridge's offices are situated in the "metropolis" of Toronto, while the company's holdings and true power lies with men in the United States — citizens of the international business community.

The actual production of the companies is scattered throughout the "hinterland" of Canada and, more recently, across the face of the globe.

A recent Falconbridge advertisement in the Financial Post states: "Why is Falconbridge so active in the field? To find nickel? Sure, that's the main reason. That's why its geological teams are scouring the world."

It's no surprise the transfer agents for Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited are none other than U of T Governing Council member W.J.D. Lewis' firm, Crown Trust Company. (Lewis is a Crown Trust director.) Yet another chapter in the business world's "one big happy family" Forsythe saga.

The Falconbridge eagle has its claws into Canada

As the Falconbridge advertisement continues, "the group already produces nickel, copper, cobalt. Plus two dozen other metals, minerals, and related products. So it's easy to appreciate why Falconbridge has a real interest in any minerals that can be developed, mined, refined and marketed internationally... using Falconbridge knowhow..."

And it started right here in Canada.

The bulk of the nickel in the world (39.5 per cent) is produced in Canada, largely from the ore deposits in the Sudbury area. Until recently both Falconbridge and the nickel giant International Nickel Company (INCO) depended to a large extent on the Sudbury region.

Falconbridge alone employs approximately 4,950 people in the Sudbury area.

The nickel ores produced in Sudbury are in fact nickel sulphide ores, and the disposal of the sulphur content has created Sudbury's enormous pollution problems. Driving into Sudbury from the south on a summer's day a visitor can see the recently constructed stack from the INCO plant which creates its own permanent cloud over the city, and when the winds blow in from the north or northwest the sulphur smell descends on the people.

Last year in Happy Valley, a small community of 23 homes adjacent to the Falconbridge smelter learned their homes are to be expropriated because of the pollution. Falconbridge has agreed to put up $230,000 and the Ontario taxpayer, without choice, will pay out $130,000 to move the residents. In addition to the inadequate amount of compensation, one individual stated that "Falconbridge won't have to cut back (pollution) and can save money."

New air purity regulations in Sudbury are causing headaches for Falconbridge, and both Falconbridge and INCO are now looking elsewhere for their sources of nickel and wealth.

INCO now has control of the vast nickel deposits in New Caledonia and Guatemala, while Falconbridge has carved out its own preserve in the Dominican Republic. All these deposits are of the lateritic type, that is, the nickel occurs in the soil and has no sulphur content. And, since lateritic deposits produce only nickel, iron and a small amount of cobalt and can be obtained by strip-mining methods, the cost of production for Falconbridge is significantly lower.

Marsh Cooper, president and managing director of Falconbridge, observed that "these and other adverse factors will, in future, make Canada's nickel sulphide reserves less profitable relative to lateritic ones. Gradually some of today's nickel reserves in Canada will be written off as unprofitable and the production rates of individual mines will then decline."

The costs of production in Sudbury are soaring mainly because of pollution regulations, and Falconbridge has already started to move out rather than comply. Discussing smoke emission, Ontario Mining Association president Don Lockhead stated on a Sunday television program that "sulphur dioxide hurts plants, not people."

Apparently INCO and Falconbridge are no longer attempting to deny the fact that because of air pollution, the white pine has disappeared within a 50 mile radius of Sudbury and most of the lakes in the region have become acidified due to severe pollution. Lockhead failed to mention, however, that sulphur dioxide can cause lung diseases, many of them fatal.

Due to the winding down of production and relocation elsewhere in the world it is estimated that Sudbury will be contributing only 15 per cent of Falconbridge's profits this year.

Falconbridge shuts down

In February, 1972 Falconbridge announced the closure of its Longvack South mines in the Onaping area of Sudbury — a decision that affected the employment of 225 people. At the same time Falconbridge announced the termination of milling operations at the 1,500-ton Hardy Mill, also in the Sudbury area, and the permanent closing of its pyrrhotite plant in the Falconbridge (Ontario) vicinity.

In December of the same year the company continued to add to the deindustrialization of Ontario, deciding to close its two-year-old nickel-iron pellet refinery near Sudbury. Eighty-five workers were fired, another 100 laid off on a temporary basis, and 115 employees were moved to other Falconbridge operations in Sudbury. Before the shut down Falconbridge acquired an adjacent sulphur recovery plant from Allied Chemicals Canada Ltd., and shut it down also. The year before Falconbridge had halted construction of mill and other surface plant work at its Lockerby mine.

However, while Falconbridge has been busy curtailing its activities on Sudbury, it has been expanding its activities elsewhere in Canada, particularly in Québec.

In September 1971 Falconbridge announced plans for a new subsidiary, Falconbridge Mines Québec Ltd., to be formed from the merger of Lake Dufault Mines and Opemiska Copper Mines, in order to exploit copper-zinc deposits in the Sturgeon Lake area of northwestern Ontario.

Another Falconbridge subsidiary, Falconbridge Copper Ltd., announced in 1972 its intentions to "develop" copper-gold ore bodies at Opemiska in northwestern Québec; the company is also extracting high grade nickel from its Manibogan mine in northern Manitoba.

But by far the most ambitious domestic project is the construction of a $60 million refinery at Betancour, Québec, scheduled for completion in 1974.

Currently all of Falconbridge's Sudbury nickel is refined by its Norwegian subsidiary in Kristiansand. But the Ontario government introduced legislation

Only one nickel producer in the world ships from three countries.

Control room nickel iron refinery, Canada

Nickel-copper-cobalt refinery, Norway

Ferroalloy metallurgical complex, Dominican Republic

From Canada... Norway... the Dominican Republic... Falconbridge ships electrolytic nickel, NICKEL 98, ferroalloy and iron-nickel pellets to nickel users around the globe.

And 60% more Falconbridge production capacity is upcoming now.

Diversity plus productivity. It adds up to assured nickel supplies today Tomorrow And tomorrow.

Falconbridge is ready now with new nickel supplies for steelmakers, electroplaters and other users of nickel, the improvement metal.

Your enquiry will receive immediate attention.

FALCONBRIDGE
TORONTO CANADA

in 1969 that called for the processing within Canada of all ores and minerals mined in Ontario and offered tax exemptions to those companies that obliged.

Falconbridge then decided the bulk of its refining should be done in Canada.

The Betancourt refinery complex will eventually employ 250 people while producing 30 million pounds of nickel, 22 million pounds of copper and 500,000 pounds of cobalt annually. An adjacent sulphur recovery plant will produce 7,000 tons of saleable sulphur annually.

To help one of Canada's largest and wealthiest multinational corporations get started at Betancourt, the federal government's Department of Regional Economic Expansion gave Falconbridge $4 million of the taxpayer's money. (The Canadian government, it should be noted, gives back to the corporations through DREE and other grants, a large amount of what it takes in corporate taxes.)

Between 1965 and 1971 Falconbridge's net income was $211,460,000, although the corporation only paid $8,- 690,000 in taxes, at a rate of only four per cent. In his book, The Corporate Welfare Burns, NDP leader David Lewis points out that on the same total income, the non-corporate citizens of Sudbury paid six times as much income tax as Falconbridge Mines.

Falconbridge (Canada) helps the US war machine

Falconbridge's production of nickel and nickel alloys is strategic for the American war industry, because the United States consumes approximately one-third of the world's production, and is almost entirely dependent on foreign sources.

During World War II, the US military used almost the entire US supply of nickel. Since 1950 US has had legislation which permits the government to enter into long-term agreements with producers to supply the government's nickel stockpile.

In 1954 the Defence Department reported that nickel "comes closest to being a true 'war metal.' It deserves first priority among materials receiving conservation attention. Since the start of the Korean War, nickel has remained the world's most critical material; this condition is likely to continue for some time."

During the Korean War, Falconbridge was one of the companies which benefitted most from these lucrative deals with the US government. Falconbridge catapulted into the big time with a lush 10-year US government stockpile contract, which worked out to selling 200 million pounds of nickel at a premium rate of 40 cents a pound (upwards of 50 per cent) above the world market.

Little can be learned as to how much Falconbridge has earned from the Vietnam War, because Canadian research has been directed at Defence Department contracts, and not Canadian government contracts.

The Canadian mining industry as a whole has profited from the war, but more important is the great expansion in the export of strategic material to the US. US nickel needs are so great that a severe shortage of nickel exists today. Canada is the sole source of nickel used by US industry. Such shortages and the resulting increases in the volume of Canadian exports and export prices have been reflected in the profits of Canadian mining companies.

The Power Behind Falconbridge

A brief look at the Falconbridge Board of Directors gives an indication of the power and influence of the corporation. F. H. Brandt, who is also a director of the American-South African Investment Co. Ltd. (ASAI), provides Falconbridge with a direct tie into South African and American finance capital and connections.

He ties with both US and Canadian finance capital have also been strong: two directors, Neil J. McKinnon until recently Chairman of the Board of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce (U of T Governing Council Tory government appointee Sydney Herment is the largest stockholder of the same bank), sit on the Falconbridge board. (The value of these links is witnessed by the financing of the 1970 Dominican Republic project, discussed below.)

Several factors point to the fact that control of Falconbridge is now firmly in the hands of the Superior Oil Co. of Texas. First, both Superior's president, H. B. Keck, and executive vice-president, F. P. Jones, Jr., are on the Falconbridge Board.

This locus of control is further made evident through the 37 per cent interest which the McIntyre Porcupine Mines has in Falconbridge (McIntyre Porcupine Mines is controlled by Superior Oil).

Also, it was announced in December 1972 that Superior Oil will earn 50 per cent of all Falconbridge's in South and South West Africa. And since Falconbridge's net profit rose from $5.5 million in 1972 to $47.9 million in 1973, Superior Oil stands to profit greatly.

Perhaps the most powerful individual and new board member of Falconbridge is John Connally. Those who recall the assassination of John Kennedy in 1963 may remember that Connally, then the relatively unknown Democrat governor of Texas, was wounded at the same time. This moment of history has served him well.

As Governor of Texas, he lowered taxes on industry, appointed one of the state's best known industrial polluters to the state pollution control board, and used Texas Rangers to break strikes. One strike he used his power against was that of Chicano farm workers who were being paid from 40 to 80 cents per hour.

At the National Governors' Conference in 1967 Connally personally tried to force through a resolution supporting LBJ's war in Vietnam.

In answering charges that he violated the state's constitution by receiving over half a million dollars' pay-off from oilman Sid Richardson, Connally replied that he had earned it. Senator Ralph Yarborough called him "the worst, the most vindictive, the most reactionary governor in Texas history."

And as Connally has many times proved himself to be anti-labor and pro-war, it is probably safe to assume that these attitudes will be reflected in the corporate policies of Falconbridge in the future. Connally will probably also be a prime mover in Falconbridge's overseas expansion.

Falconbridge moves into the Dominican Republic

Falconbridge first moved into the Dominican Republic in 1955, but its operations there did not expand until the island was pacified under the US puppet, Balaguer.

The history of the Dominican Republic is one of US intervention and occupations; of repressive regimes and strong popular rebellion.

The US first militarily occupied the Republic in 1905 and did not depart until 1930, leaving control of the country in the hands of the dictator Trujillo.

While adhering to the capitalist creed of exploitation and oppression, Trujillo did little to open the Republic to foreign or domestic capital. Although he did let Ian H. Keith of Falconbridge open a pilot plant for nickel in 1955, he also assumed control of sugar lands belonging to North American business interests. During his rule he concentrated almost all the wealth of the island into his own hands and those of his family, effectively leaving no room for expansion by firms such as Falconbridge.

The US's disappointment in their protegee was great enough for them to mastermind Trujillo's assassination in 1961, although it was actually carried out by members of his own armed forces.

The US wanted a "democratization" within the Dominican Republic so that companies such as Falconbridge could more effectively exploit the people and resources of that country. Eventually a puppet of the combined forces of the US government, business and the Dominican military was installed — Donald Reid Cabral.

Finance capital bankrolls strip-mining

Falconbridge announced its plans for Falconbridge's surface plant at its Western Platinum operations in South Africa; the plant began limited production in 1971.

Falconbridge's "land reclamation program" in full gear: open-pit mining operations at Tasu in the Queen Charlotte Islands, British Columbia.

continued on
page 18..

strip-mining and refining of lateritic ferronickel (a nickel-iron combination found only in tropical lateritic soils) and US business and aid started to pour in. But this most comfortable state of affairs did not last long.

The Republic made world headlines in April 1965 when the US sent in 30,000 marines to stop the outbreak of fighting and to remind Dominicans of US supremacy.

In June 1966, Dominicans, under the "observation" of US forces, "freely" elected Trujillo's former servant, Balaguer, to power, and the North American business community once again turned its attention to the Republic. Their interests were insured by 500 Americans in official positions in the government, 60 Pentagon advisers to the army, and a widespread CIA presence.

North American businessmen were never happier.

Falconbridge started to seek funding for its $195 million Dominican project, and after two years of negotiations succeeded in obtaining capital from US and Canadian business. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce whose recently retired chairman, Neil J. McKinnon, is also on the board of Falconbridge, lent $20 million at 8 per cent.

The First National City Bank, whose President, W.I. Spencer, is also on the board of Falconbridge, lent $21 million at 8 per cent. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York, the Equitable Life Assurance Society Co., New York, and the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., Milwaukee, lent $114 million at 8.5 per cent in a package negotiated by the Wall Street firm of Dillon, Reid and Co.

All these loans were insured by AID against expropriation, revolution and insurrection. The World Bank loaned $25 million at 7 per cent and Balaguer provided guarantees.

Construction started in 1970.

Falconbridge Dominicana C por A, familiarly known as Falcondo, is one of the largest simple overseas investments made by a Canadian company. It is part of a five-year programme announced by Falconbridge in 1970 to triple nickel production and expand the output of other metals to the tune of $350 million ($195 million of which is swallowed up by Falcondo).

Falcondo is owned 65.7 per cent by Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd., 17.5 per cent by the US Armco Steel Corporation, 9.5 per cent by the Balaguer government, and the remaining 7.3 per cent by US and Canadian shareholders.

The lateritic deposits in the Dominican Republic are expected to last 25 years at a rate of extraction of 63 million pounds a year, which makes ferronickel second only to sugar in export importance to the Republic, raising their total exports by 45 per cent. Because the ferronickel is in the topsoil and can be extracted simply by deep-shaft mining, the unit of cost of Dominican nickel is much cheaper. In fact it is so cheap that the tops off most of these hills and mountains."

Strike-breaking at Falcondo

Falcondo was opened by Balaguer in June 1971 "while local militia with machine guns dotted the nickel-bearing hillsides overlooking the plant". But that was not the first time that Balaguer and his militia had co-operated with Falcondo.

"When a union attempted to organize construction workers at a foreign owned ferronickel project last year, Mr. Balaguer sent in the army to straighten things out. While the soldiers kept order, the contractors fired 32 allegedly leftist leaders. 'We saw no alternative than to crack down hard' explained Ian H. Keith, general manager... The strike was broken in eight days."

Not surprisingly Falcondo has proven itself to be as insensitive to the demands of its workers and Dominicans generally, as Falconbridge has in Canada, Namibia and its other areas of operations.

While Falcondo apologists point to its enormous debt as a reason for the capital intensive rather than labor inten-

Falconbridge defies UN sanctions in South Africa

In 1966, the General Assembly of the UN unilaterally terminated the South African mandate over South-West Africa, renaming the territory Namibia. The Security Council confirmed this in 1967, calling on all member states to discourage further investments by their national's.

On June 21st, 1971, the International Court of Justice ruled that the Government of South Africa was in illegal occupation of Namibia.

On November 21st, 1971, the administrator of South-West Africa, Dirk Mudge, opened Falconbridge's Oamites mine 30 miles south of Windhoek, the capital. Oamites is 75 per cent owned by Falconbridge and the other 25 per cent is owned by the Industrial Development Corporation of South Africa Ltd.

This $7 million investment was designed to remove the 4.7 million tons of copper ore, leaving the people of Namibia with nothing and the shareholders a handsome profit.

The South Africa government will also benefit from this scheme through its 25 per cent holding and the boost in the $145 million in taxes already provided annually by foreign companies.

The expected revenue of Oamites has been estimated at $6.6 million per year for the next five years, and it is known that Falconbridge hopes to get as much as possible out of Namibia by the end of 1977. Mudge praised Falconbridge for opening this mine, and, to illustrate the significance of the mining industry to the economy of South Africa, listed the tax revenues from mining (1 rand = $1.50):

1968-69	40.6 million Rand
1969-70	39.4 million Rand
1970-71	42.0 million Rand

The contribution of copper mining (to that revenue) was:

1968-69	8.7 million Rand
1969-70	9.0 million Rand
1970-71	13.4 million Rand

Mudge went on to say that taking into consideration the rising costs of the state, the state will always protect the interests of these branches of industry in order not to "kill the goose that laid the golden eggs". He said "one must give priority to the necessary infrastructure rather to less important luxuries".

Workers are housed in cement block houses, 15 to a dormitory. The method of hiring used by Falconbridge until the general strike in December 1971 was the SWA Native Labour Association. This organization was composed of the employers, including Falconbridge, who traded in humans, in a method described by the International Commission of Jurists as 'akin to slavery'.

Slave labor in Namibia

Africans labelled as 'A', 'B' or 'C' class physical specimens were given 12-18 month contracts at wages of about $40.00 per month, about one third the Poverty Datum Line requirement.

Identity permits were mandatory and labels were tied around the necks of a worker bearing his name, his prospective boss and the latter's address. Workers were often forbidden to leave the compound and families were strictly barred from the mine area. Although SWANLA was broken by the general strike, most of its characteristics still remain.

Wages for an African worker range from $24 to $63 a month, and Falconbridge displays no intention of cutting into its profits in order to pay $110 a month, the Poverty Datum Line minimum considered necessary to maintain health.

Resistance to the South African police state and to foreign corporations since Falconbridge's metallurgical subsidiary Falconbridge Dominicana, C. por A., near Bronoa in the Dominican Republic.

Falcondo sells only the nickel, and the iron content is thrown in free to customers.

Falcondo increases Falconbridge's nickel output by more than 60 per cent and Falconbridge's share of the world nickel market has subsequently risen from 10 per cent in 1971 to 13 per cent in 1972.

Attacks on Falconbridge's contribution to sulphur pollution in Canada have sensitized Falcondo to the extent that it has employed six agronomists to reforest the regions devastated by its operations. Nevertheless Falcondo's official, John Celand, boasted to a Financial Post reporter that "we'll be mining sive construction and operating methods, it is interesting to note that in the seven month period from December 1971 when Falcondo started production, it made a profit of $4.4 million.

Balaguer's government is very pleased with the Falcondo deal, and in December 1971 granted the company an extra 7,239.59 square meters of land to destroy, for which Falcondo paid $476,640. Balaguer then used the money to buy more shares in the company.

As long as the US and Balaguer control the Dominican Republic Falcondo is assured of success. Even Bosch has since promised not to nationalize Falcondo if he ever returns to power.

- How to analyze
a banana — p. 29
- How to analyze
Larry Zolf — p. 20

review

- U of T's new bestseller — p. 32
- Everybody's
Greatest Hits — p. 36

Last chance to read
the
review

Zolf's insider political tract isn't so funny

Larry Zolf, as you probably know by now, wrote an account of Canadian politics since 1968 and titled it "Dance of the Dialectic". This is its sub-title:

"How Pierre Elliot Trudeau went from Philosopher-King to the Incurruptible Robespierre to Philosopher Queen Marie Antoinette to Canada's Generalissimo Ky and then to Mackenzie King and even better".

If you liked that, then you'll probably like everything else that's wrong with Zolf's acclaimed travesty. The rest of the book carries on wholeheartedly in this vein, as Zolf gleefully imitates the talents of Pope, Mailer, McLuhan, Wolfe, Mad Magazine and others, too numerous to name but too obvious to ignore.

In their hands, a style of writing or mode of perception might produce brilliant results, but when clumsily transposed by Larry Zolf to Larry Zolf, the results are decidedly unfunny, strained, lightweight and ultimately unsatisfying.

And how comic were the possibilities of the material too. The shift from the Pearson-Diefenbaker reign to the Trudeau-Stanfield-Lewis political era with its rich lore of bickering, name-calling, charisma-turned-cant and party-infighting provided a field day for political cartoonists like Aislin and Duncan McPherson.

How much more devastating than, might the material have been in the hands of a master like Wolfe or Mailer. But Zolf is neither of them nor is he in their league, try as he might to emulate them.

These writers might have pinned down the turbulent processes that characterized Canadian political life after 1968 and done it in a way that did not demean their scope and magnitude. Zolf, however, merely reduces everything to a matter of personalities — those belonging to the Prime Minister and his cabinet on the one side and a smirking, malicious elite of the press, media and the upper class on the other.

It is a lot easier to handle the material this way, of course (especially since Zolf is a member of that elite) but it gives a considerable amount of distortion without yielding a corresponding return in the humour, which is mostly of back-biting sort.

Another irritating habit Zolf employs in his effort to produce humour is his frequent use of historical analogy (read the subtitle again at the first of the article, if you memory needs refreshing). Trudeau is compared to a Philosopher-King, a Marie Antoinette, a Robespierre, a General Ky and a McKenzie King in three lines alone — you'll have to read for yourself to see the metaphorical mish-mash he can produce in 117 pages!

But even if you don't enjoy Zolf's attempts at humour, you shouldn't have any trouble recognizing them because they're all put in the upper case: "Ottawa now seemed to be Canada's Great White Way as the Simple Neil Simons of the gallery authored their own morality play of PET the Owl and his Rittenhouse-Streisand pussycats." "It's almost as though he had given the reader a cue card saying, "Laugh when you see the capital letter, schmuck!" We'd like to leave you with a little cue card of our own: "The Lure of the Quick Buck: How Larry Zolf churned out a Book of Low Grade Political Humour that will Leave you high on Canadian Content but short of $2.95."

That's only if you buy it, of course...

lawrence clarke

Bernstein's Planets brings stars to reviewer's eyes

He doesn't lead the orchestra anymore, but the New York Philharmonic obviously still loves their Conductor Emeritus, Leonard Bernstein. When the present leader, Pierre Boulez leads them, they are still one of the world's great ensembles, but it takes Lenny to bring out the best in them.

The very best is needed from an orchestra when they play Gustav Holst's suite, "The Planets". It makes huge demands on the players, both in terms of individual virtuosity and group effort, like few other works of its kind. As everyone knows (c'mon, don't you just hate that? I didn't know it 'til I read it on a record label a few years back), the planets are represented not so much for their mythological significance, but for the astrological connotations their names bear. Mars is "the bringer of War", as was the god of the same name, but here there is no glorification of combat, just the hideous machinations of slaughter. (Surprisingly enough, this work was written long before the carnage of World War I.)

The planets have different characters. Jupiter (The Bringer of Jollity) has a splendid march in the middle that set the charwomen to dancing in the aisles during an early rehearsal of the music; Neptune is the mystic, and ends with far-off sighing of a girl's chorus.

The music has undergone a revival of sorts with the recent boom in astrology, but that's besides the point. Scored for a gigantic orchestra (basically as many as the conductor can get his hands on), it is one of the finest displays of the resources of the modern ensemble that I know of. Audio buffs have long treasured it for showing off their speakers, light-classical fans have loved it for its beautiful melodies, musicians have admired it for the skillful way the orchestration is organized.

As I said above, Lenny and Co. are in fine form for this recording. So were the Columbia engineers, with the result being a thrilling, all-stops-out tour of the celestial bodies. The recording it doesn't outclass is the version recorded by Sir Adrian Boult for Angel some years back, still available on S-36420. Of course, Sir A. had the considerable advantage of being a personal friend of Holst, and was the first man to conduct it in concert. Also worth having is Stokowski's wide-screen recording on Seraphim (S-60175) with the L.A. Philharmonic.

Bernstein is in good company with this fine record, a leading runner in a hotly-contested field. Certainly blessed with the best sonics, this is a Planets worth having.

dave basskin

josef honys: knight-text

jaroslav malina: three photopoems

POETRY IS REAL. That's what a group of Czech poets think anyway—real in a touchable sense.

They've put out a box of visual poems, each on a separate sheet of paper. It's called Czech Concrete Analogy, edited by Jiri Valoch and bp nichol, (Coach House Press, $3).

The poem on the lower right of this page is Karel Trinkewitz' "Poem-object". On the lower left opposite is Josef Honys' "Knight-Text," while above is Jaroslav Malina's "Photopoem".

Yummy dishes for neurotic eaters

You're acrophobic (scared of heights, silly!) so what's the perfect dinner for you?

"Pancakes cooked over a low hibachi while lying on your stomach".

And if you're paranoid when your guests arrive, serve a fondue, so you can all stay in the same room for the duration with no opportunity for back-stabbing.

Just two of the helpful hints found in psychologist Maureen Bendick's Compulsive Cooker: A Guide to the Fine Art of Neurotic Gastronomy.

Ninety-six pages of recipes to match every psychological quirk from aboulia — inability to make even simple decisions — for which one obviously serves aboulia-baisse, to the Zeitgarik Effect, a "tendency to remember tasks or events which are incomplete and forget those which are finished," curable only by Complete German Potato Salad.

Which is pushing the humour a bit.

The sometime strain in connecting recipe with disease is the only flaw in an otherwise delightful addition to anyone's collection of weird cookbooks: if anyone could direct me to a copy of The

Myra Breckinridge Cookbook, published several years ago, both of me would be extremely grateful.

The connection between castration anxiety and Stuffed Zucchini with Father's Frankfurters seems clear but kleptomania with Tournedos Rossini is beyond my musical knowledge.

And prescribing Impotence Souffle for impotence didn't connect until Bendick explained: "While the condition lasts, fussing won't help; console yourself with this dessert that does rise."

Well-illustrated by David Shaw with recipes explained simply in bold print, it's a pretty book that would make a good gift. Bendick provides a bonus service by suggesting side dishes for most of the entrees.

I was, however, disappointed at the lack of a cure for insomnia.

I guess they spend all night cooking.

Maureen Bendick: Compulsive Cookery: A Guide to the Fine Art of Neurotic Gastronomy; McClelland and Stewart

elaine kahn

This magazine taps the creative juices of U of T's own students

Writing at the U of T, a new journal of creative writing originating at University College, but welcoming submissions from across the campus, provides a sorely-needed place where students can publish. Offhand, I can only think of two other University-sponsored publications which have similar aims—Victoria College's ACTA and Innis' Writ.

The first issue of Writing at the U of T appeared about a month ago, and it is hoped that a second will be out before this school-year is over. From a purely visual standpoint, the layout is simple, even drab, a problem which could be relieved by the use of more graphics. My eye, which needs to be cajoled, was particularly daunted by the twenty pages of unrelieved print making up the prose section. On the credit side, I have seen many writing journals which looked far more amateurish.

Most of the first issue (27 pages) presents selections from the winning entries in the Norma Epstein Creative Writing Contest for last year, a contest limited to members of University College. (Who was this great benefactress? Norma, who were you?) The editors, Randy Robertson, Ian Dennis, and Bob Cooper, regard the Epstein winners as their 'stable', but hope to gradually reduce their reliance on this source of material as the journal gets better known. Even for the first issue, they received submissions from New, Victoria, and Trinity, as well as UC, some of which are printed in the section 'New Poets' (10 pages).

Now for the material itself: University students' creative writing tends to go through a number of standard motions. (I can speak from experience, having spent four hours a week this past year wading through student writing in a course. I even wrote some of it.)

One of the favourite gambits is the diary—a monologue in the first person, supposedly written by a highly intelligent (for some reason, usually male) adolescent with a behaviour problem, in response to advice (often from a psychiatrist) that keeping a diary is therapeutic. The story begins something like this: 'The fact of the matter is I've never written a goddam diary entry in my life, but I can't sleep and the Reamer is always telling me how therapeutic it is.'

By coincidence, that's the first sentence of Jay Teitel's story, Mrs. Laverand, which leads off the Prose section. The rest of the story moves along quite nicely, though, evoking Mrs. Laverand, a nervous English teacher ('I mean I have never seen anybody so cowed by the world'), and an array of high-school personalities, among them an aging teacher, 'her shapeless old ass following that flamingo face of hers'. Jay Teitel is probably the most talented writer here, which is not to say he doesn't have competition, especially among the New Poets.

Ian Dennis' 'Our Grey Coming' suffers from a problem which is also found in the opening story to a lesser degree, the difficulty of establishing a consistent narrative viewpoint. I mean, what am I supposed to make of this? (the narrator talking) "Right at this point I'm still all screwed up with the time tenses. I'm trying to tell a story, or rather set down an account of one particular day, and it would seem to me that I'm not really doing all that well!" The reader can be forgiven for that queasy feeling, particularly when, after labouring through eight large double-columned pages, the climax sees the hero decide to masturbate as soon as he gets home from school. (He doesn't find release in the story itself, but the message is clear.)

Overall, the poetry is more refreshing than the prose. Besides Teitel, the other writer who most interested me was Barbara Winter, author of two poems, 'Mad Adolescent Meat-Eater Meets Mouse' and 'Gumboli', neither of which is very easily describable. Only a few of the poems are precious and/or unclear, which speaks well for the editors' goal of 'unpretentiousness and integrity!'

I'm looking out for the second issue.

Chris probert

karel trinkewitz: poem-object

REVIEW OF THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1971

STUDENT RECOMMENDATIONS

The University of Toronto Act, 1971 requires that the Act be reviewed within two years after it comes into force (Section 2, (19)). The Hon. Mr. White, in introducing this (19)). The Hon. Mr. White, in introducing this section in the Legislature in 1971, stated:

There is another amendment which I will be offering to the Legislature a short time from now—namely, that the review be two years from the date of proclamation rather than five years. It seems to me that an opportunity will be given in the foreseeable future for students to make their case again to those who are members of the Legislature and those who are members of the legislative committee.

(Hansard, July 22, 1971)

Representatives of the three major student organizations, The Association of Part-Time Undergraduate Students (A.P.-U.S.), The Graduate Students' Union (G.S.U.) and the Students' Administrative Council (S.A.C.), have formulated a series of recommendations to bring before the Legislature. These recommendations have already been approved by S.A.C. and are now in the process of being approved by

G.S.U. and A.P.U.S.

The recommendations centre around two issues. The first is the principle of broad community representation on the Governing Council. It is essential that all segments of Canadian society be represented in the governing of the University, something that is not now the case. The municipal level of government, community groups, labor and business organizations and students and teachers from high schools and other universities have a vital interest in the policies of the University of Toronto. All taxpayers and those directly affected by the University must be specifically included in the members appointed by the government.

The second issue is the question of equal representation of students with teaching staff on the Governing Council. It is indisputable that the numbers of students presently on the Council must be increased to lighten the tremendous work load on the student governors. There must be equal representation in recognition of the fact that students and teaching staff have essentially equal, albeit different, contributions to make in the teaching-learning process.

ad sponsored by S.A.C.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR CHANGES IN THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1971

RECOMMENDATION I:

The Governing Council shall be composed of,

- (a) the President, who shall be an ex officio member;
- (b) four members from the municipalities in which the main and the two satellite campuses are located;
- (c) twenty-one members, none of whom shall be students, members of the non-academic staff or members of the teaching staff, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the minister, divided in the following manner:
 - i. representatives from community groups from the areas immediately adjacent to the St. George Campus
 - ii. representatives from Ontario labor organizations
 - iii. representatives from Ontario business organizations
 - iv. representatives from Ontario teachers' organizations
 - v. representatives from Ontario students' organizations
 - vi. residents of Ontario, to be nominated by the Social Development Committee
- (d) fourteen members elected by the teaching staff from among the teaching staff, with two seats to be provided for the part-time teaching staff;
- (e) fourteen members, eight of whom shall be elected by and from among the full-time undergraduate students, three of whom shall be elected by and from among the graduate students, and three of whom shall be elected by and from among the part-time undergraduate students;
- (f) four members elected by the non-academic staff from among the non-academic staff;
- (g) eight members who are not students or members of the teaching staff elected by the alumni from among the alumni.

REPLACES: Section 2 (2) of the present Act

Present composition of the Governing Council

- (a) Chancellor and President, ex officio members
- (b) 2 members appointed by the President from among the officers of the university
- (c) 16 members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council
- (d) 12 teaching staff
- (e) 8 students (4 full-time undergrad.; 2 part-time; 2 graduate)
- (f) 2 non-academic staff
- (g) 8 alumni

RECOMMENDATION II: question of non-attendance

NEW SECTION: Where, a member of the Council not having been granted leave of absence by the Council, fails to attend three consecutive regular meetings of the Council, the Chairman shall declare his membership vacant.

RECOMMENDATION III: recall

NEW SECTION: A member of the Council elected by the teaching staff, the non-academic staff or students may be recalled by a petition of 20% of the constituency which elected the member.

RECOMMENDATION IV: composition of the Executive Committee

The Governing Council shall establish an Executive Committee of the Governing Council composed of,

- (a) the chairman of the Governing Council and the President, who shall be ex officio members; and
- (b) seventeen members appointed annually by the Governing Council from among its members as follows:
 1. One nominated by and from among the members from the municipalities.
 2. Five nominated by and from among the members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.
 3. Four nominated by and from among the members of the teaching staff.
 4. Two nominated by and from among the members elected by the full-time undergraduate students.

5. One nominated by and from among the members elected by the graduate students.
6. One nominated by and from among the members elected by the part-time undergraduate students.
7. One nominated by and from among the members elected by the non-academic staff.
8. Two nominated by and from among the members elected by the alumni

REPLACES: Section 3 (1)

Present composition of the Executive Committee

- (a) chairman of the Governing Council and the President, ex officio members
- (b) 12 members appointed annually by the Governing Council:
 1. 1 from the president's appointees and non-academic staff
 2. 4 from those appointed by the Lieutenant Governor
 3. 3 from the teaching staff
 4. 1 from the full-time undergraduate students
 5. 1 from the graduate and part-time undergraduate students
 6. 2 from the alumni

RECOMMENDATION V: terms of office

civic representatives—change or re-appointment every civic election government appointees—three year terms, seven appointments each government appointees—three year terms, seven appointments each year alumni, non-academic staff—two year terms teaching staff—seven, two year terms, seven, one year terms students—full-time undergraduates, graduates, one year terms part-time undergraduates, one, two year terms
two, one year terms

REPLACES: Section 2 (6)

present terms:

government appointees, teaching staff, alumni—three year terms
non-academic staff—two year terms students—one year terms

RECOMMENDATION VI: summer students

Summer students, meaning all students registered at the University in the summer session in a program that leads to a degree, diploma or certificate of the University or in a program of study at the University, should be enfranchised and allowed to vote in the part-time undergraduate student constituency.

It is understood that this does not include those who registered in the following winter session.

REPLACES: Section 1. (1) (L)

This recommendation involves the rewording of the definition of the term "student" in this section to include the summer students.

RECOMMENDATION VII: constituencies

[does not involve a change in the wording of the Act, but gives the suggested electoral breakdown of the student constituencies]

full-time undergraduate students (8 seats)

Constituency I (3 seats)

-Arts and Science, St. George Campus

Constituency II (2 seats)

-Erindale and Scarborough Campuses

Constituency III (3 seats)

-professional faculties. 3 seats, no 2 of which may come from the same faculty part-time undergraduate students (3 seats)

open constituencies, all summer students and all part-time winter session students not registered in the School of Graduate Studies graduate students (3 seats)

Constituency I (1 seat)

- Divisions I and II of the School of Graduate Studies

Constituency II (1 seat)

- Divisions III and IV of the School of Graduate Studies and Educational Theory

Constituency III (1 seat)

- part-time graduate students

ad sponsored by S.A.C.

Does anybody know the seventh verse of 'Motorpsycho Nightmare'?

Writings and Drawings
Bob Dylan
Alfred A. Knopf; $7.95

It's gotten to the point where any work by Bob Dylan is of cultural import. At first glance this particular literary product bearing the master's name seemed to run contrary to the usual scheme of things. It is after all, nothing but a catalogue.

In fact, the catalogue nature of this handsome pink-covered hardback volume aids in making it all the more valuable. Writings And Drawings brings together the lyrics of every Dylan song written up to 1971. The songs are collected in chapters in roughly chronological order. Each of the chapters is made up of songs from each of Dylan's LP's but also includes lyrics to other songs composed around the same period. Most of those have never been recorded by Dylan. The index is a helpful item, that lists the songs by title as well as first lines and key lines.

The "drawing" side of the book is no doubt of secondary importance. There are only some 18 pen and ink sketches in the 300 pages that make up the book. Most are whimsical, somewhat humorous illustrations of particular songs. None are indicative of artistic talent beyond the grade school stage.

Besides including song lyrics in Writings and Drawings there are a few poetic pieces that were written without accompanying music. Some of these are just the liner notes that appeared on albums and others are new to me although the copyrights are over a decade old. One that is especially interesting is a piece called "My Life in A Stolen Moment". It's a sort of mini autobiography in which Dylan reveals his, and his parents' birthplaces and recounts him move to New York City and his success as a folk singer. It's odd, because Dylan (according to his unauthorized biographer, Anthony Scaduto) was always fabricating stories of his origin. The most usual one was that he was an orphan who came out of the dust bowl, and hobbled his way around the country before coming to New York. Few people were aware of the truth at the time that "My Life..." was written in 1962.

It isn't a dry story either, but has some memorable lines.
*Hibbings' a good ol' town
I ran away from it when I was
10, 12, 13, 15, 17 and 18
I been caught an- brought back all but once.*

Another valuable extra is what appears to be a reproduction of the original page on which "Subterranean Homesick Blues" was written. Glass and cup stains are still on the page and one can compare it to the final version, on the opposite page to see what was kept, changed and omitted.

Writings and Drawings stands up well as a book of poetry. As well it represents an important element in the raising of political consciousness in the '60s through the folk music idiom. A book of original manuscripts would be a welcome follow up.

Allen Mandell

Chartbuster Dylan's latest doesn't merit its buildup

Planet Waves
Bob Dylan
Asylum/WEA; $7.29

Dylan
Bob Dylan
Columbia; $7.49

Planet Waves are reminiscent of the pre-"Like A Rolling Stone" era. While treading precariously close to singing out of tune most of the time, Dylan is never as frantic or erratic as he has been in the past. It's almost the style exhibited on the acoustic part of Bringing It All Back Home with a tinge of fear or lack of assuredness. The melodies are strongly suggestive of New Morning with a tendency toward simplification. Almost all the lyrics deal with man-woman relationship on a more personal (and somehow less universal) level than Dylan has ever written before. There are more emotions expressed than in earlier song of the same genre like, "Gloria Of The North Country".

One of the biggest disappointments of the album is the subdued use of the Band. Their sound is recognizable but Dylan has kept their contributions simplistic. There's almost no comparing this recording with Dylan's previous work with the Band on such musically textured songs as "Can You Please Crawl Out Your Window?", and "One Of Us Must Know (Sooner or Later)". The front cover reveals that Planet Waves contains, "cast-iron songs and torch ballads" which turns out to be a reasonably accurate description of the contents. There are two good rough and tumble songs in "On A Night Like This" and "Tough Mama" and the ballads abound. The words on the cover have a bold-facing effect on the line "...my dreams are made of iron and steel/With a big bouquet of roses..." in "Never Say Goodbye".

Dylan's recent tour with The Band helped to create much of the interest in his new releases.

There are two versions of "Forever Young", the song Dylan sang in both his Toronto appearances recently. The first is a longer more melodic expression of hope that features the most skillfully played musical moments of the album.

The second is almost a throwaway recording, played with an up tempo shuffle beat and the chorus "forever young" dropped in favour of an instrumental passage.

"Dirge" is the most interesting of the ten new songs because of its bitter sentiments, more vivid imagery and openness to interpretation. The first line offers a revealing look at the author's character. "I hate myself for loving you, and the weakness that it showed." The song goes on to cast aspersions on the woman who sang "songs of freedom" and supported martyrdom and perhaps inadvertently "progress" and the "doom machine". It's possible that this is a piece of poison conjured up for Joan Baez in answer to her song "To Bob Dylan". Although the Baez song pleaded for Dylan's return to activism, he may have felt that the lyrics were a greater threat to his integrity. "You left us marching in the road/And said how heavy was the load".

Planet Waves isn't Dylan most brilliant album by a long shot. It does stand close in stature to New Morning but more important it marks Dylan's first real release in four years (discounting the Concert for Bangladesh and the Southern to Pat Garrett and Billy The Kid). We can always keep hoping for an increase in quality and maybe another "Just Like A Woman" or "Like A Rolling Stone".

The Columbia LP, Dylan, is another story entirely.

It was a well known fact that Dylan's contract with the Columbia Record Company had expired. There were rumours that Columbia was trying to force Dylan into another contract by threatening to release material that they had collected of Dylan's throughout his eleven years association with them. The release of Dylan came at just about the time Dylan's tour and signing to the Asylum label were announced. Columbia made good on their threat it would seem.

Dylan is made up of ten songs composed by other writers. The sound is suspiciously close to that found on Self Portrait. Both albums feature Dylan's more sonorous vocal style and an irritating chorus of female vocalists. The probability is good that Dylan represents the tracks that were recorded for Self Portrait but rejected for the LP. Actually most tracks are better than those on the 1970 LP, but the quality is varied. At best his version of Jerry Jeff Walker's "Mr. Bojangles" and Peter La Farge's "Ballad Of Ira Hayes" are interesting and musical. The other tunes vary downward in their mediocrity. Joni Mitchell's "Big Yellow Taxi" rests very ungracefully at the bottom of the list.

Saying that Dylan is a better LP than Dylan's worst, Self Portrait, isn't much of a recommendation. It's, of course, an important album for those who collect Dylan with a passion. But if you're after pleasurable entertainment, forget it.

Columbia probably has more unreleased Dylan tape in its vaults and it's like they'll see the light too, in time. No one's saying what will be forthcoming, but they just might have a tape of Dylan and the Band at Albert Hall from 1966, or even the original "base-tapes" that have been available on atrociously pressed bootleg albums for years.

allen mandell

What happens when a southern mother-humper can't leave the spotlight?

Jerry Lee Lewis
Southern Roots
$6.29; Mercury

Southern Roots has a lot going for it. With a little less self-indulgence on the part of Jerry Lee Lewis himself, it could have been an above-average album of tight, unassuming country and western, rhythm-and-blues.

The album was conceived as a 'totally Southern production with songs by Southern writers, Southern musicians, and a Southern producer, all revolving around Mr. Southern Roots himself, Jerry Lee Lewis' (from the liner notes). And there's the problem.

By no stretch of the imagination does Jerry Lee Lewis an inventive pianist within the fairly narrow limits of his style (frequent swoops from one end of the keyboard to the other), and he has a passable worn-and-torn voice. His piano antics, such as playing with his feet, have inspired more recent players like

Elton John.

However, all this does not make Lewis the legend in his own time he seems to think he is. His increased popularity in recent years as one of the few 50's artists still playing seems to have gone to his head.

Lewis pays his respects to his past greatness every now and again on Southern Roots. On 'Just a Little Bit', for example, he somewhat irrelevantly throws in the chorus to his big hit 'Great Balls of Fire'.

The other side of Lewis' self-constructed personality is 'the Killer', the Louisiana mother-humper, the great sexual conquistador for whom the Southern belles toll. (add heavy breathing.)

I may be revealing a bit of prejudice, but it seems to me the heavy sexuality can only work if it refuses to take itself entirely seriously. Mick Jagger knows this, but Lewis, a bit pathetically, seems to believe that he really is the 'Meat Man'. So the song ('Meat Man') comes off tasteless, when someone else, given the lyrics, could have done it well.

Lewis' posturings quickly become irritating. Not only do they keep the audience at arm's length from the songs, but, strangely enough, Lewis is so concerned with maintaining a front that he keeps himself at a distance from his material, rarely coming to terms with its possibilities. It even happens, as on his version of 'When a Man Loves a Woman', that Lewis' assumed personality gets in the way of the song.

Lewis' piano-playing is no less self-indulgent. He hogs the spotlight continually. The worst instance comes at the end of 'Big Blue Diamond' when, after what should have been the end of the song, he feels constrained to add a few unnecessary tinkles.

The material is above-average, including several standards, among them 'Hold On I'm coming', and 'Blueberry Hill'. Among Lewis' flamboyant style, which never lets up, eventually becomes irritating.

the newer songs is Sir Douglas Sahm's 'The Revolutionary Man', a good song marred by the background vocals of the Sugar Sweets (female), singing 'Jerry is a rebel' He's a revolutionary man.'

Despite constant upstaging, the backup musicians do a consistently fine job. The MGs, Steve Cropper (session leader), Duck

Dunn, and Al Jackson, play together on this LP for the first time in over three years, since Booker T. left the group. Carl Perkins, Tony Joe White, Mark Lindsay of Paul Revere and the Raiders (on saxophone), and Wayne Jackson and the Memphis Horns are among the other musicians present.

Chris Probert

RECENT WORK BY U OF T FINE ART STUDENTS

at OISE, 252 Bloor W.
4th floor
Mar. 29 - April 10
9 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Weekdays
1 p.m. - 9 p.m.
Weekends

Wares from Afar

specializing in

ANTIQUE ENGRAVINGS,
LITHOGRAPHS, ETCHINGS
& MAPS

- For home and office at moderate prices
- Large stock
- All subjects
- Free search service

Barbara Moll

636-8639

Around Again

Used Records:

rock, jazz, folk, classics

and

Books:

literature, philosophy,

"religion", sci.fi.

and

Some other interesting things

18 Baldwin St.
(north of Dundas
west of University)

Anthroposophical Society in CANADA

Invitation to a

Public Lecture on

"Mysticism and Responsible Thinking"

by Dr. F. Koeln

Time: Friday March 29, 1974, 8:00
p.m.

Place: 252 Bloor St.
W. Room 204 (parking under the building; enter from Prince Arthur.)

Admission: $1.00 (Students 50¢).

GETTING A JOB THIS SUMMER?

Hi! I'm Shirley Eikhard.

Because I'm young, the Youth Secretariat—our Channel 1 to the Ontario government—has asked me to remind you that there are many different jobs out there. Jobs that can open up whole new worlds.

You can spend a few months out in the open, working on a farm. Or get into mining, forestry, industry, or government.

Contact your Student Placement Office or Canada Manpower Centre soon. And get yourself the best summer job around. Why settle for less?

Youth
Secretariat

Ontario

Our Channel 1
to the Ontario government.

The Honourable Dennis R. Timbrell,
Minister without Portfolio.

Parents of retarded children try to overcome their shame and guilt by having their children lead "normal" lives.

photos by dudley paul — the chevron

Retardation needs a response from the heart, not from the mind

Donald: The Man Who Remains a Boy
Howard L. Hurwitz
Pocket Books

There is apparently a literature about mental retardation. I don't mean a scientific literature. But short stories like Flowers for Algernon which was made into the movie Charlie and novels like the tear jerker happy ending best seller a number of years ago about the rich and beautiful retarded girl from the United States who doesn't look retarded and with whom the charming young Italian falls in love.

And there are "biographies" of a mentally retarded son or daughter which are very much autobiographies of the parents' anguish and despair and grim stoicism. Books like this newly released Donald: The Man Who Remains a Boy written by Howard L. Hurwitz about his son.

All of these books are pulp. They are trash.

But these books will always be with us. One does not respond to a mentally retarded person with the mind and these books were not written by the mind but from the heart. We are all uneducated when confronted by the pains of the heart.

Grief, sorrow, anguish, they are themselves an education — in tolerance.

Jean Vanier gave a lecture entitled "Daring to Love" last week at Convocation Hall.

Vanier did not speak about the care of the mentally retarded as was, I think, expected, since after all this is what the man is famous for.

But then one does not "dare" to love the mentally retarded. A mentally retarded child is born and all one does, since there is nothing that can be done about the retardation, is respond through tears with love.

A retardate often tends to become almost a parody of our society, of our concern with material possessions. There is so little that we can do and so much that we try to buy.

"Nettie showed her Donald's room. (She) was moved to say that she had never seen such a beautiful room for a child. There was a blue and red bedspread with Mother Goose rhymes, matching curtains, white linoleum with fairytale pictures complementing those on the wall, a pussycat clock, and a colonial bed and bureau..."

A retardate is kept amused by being allowed to watch television. A retardate is kept contented by being kept fed.

In spite of this, in spite of the obesity, even the bloatedness, of the Mongoloid retardate, for instance, one loves. And what one's despair and an utter weakness to effect a change seem to abet, one loves even more. Perhaps the virtue of these children is that they force us to be emotional. They confront us with themselves, they start the old questions aching again — why me? why this? why? — and because they undeniably exist they make us realize that the ultimate injustice is to demand justice.

Retardates are not subject to neuroses, they do not suffer mental illnesses. Their low intelligence is paralleled by a low pain threshold. "My son has not cried since he was an infant. My wife and I have cried many times," writes Hurwitz. Mentally retarded children simply, undeniably indisputably are— mentally retarded.

But as mentally retarded children can become parodies of our society so Donald: The Man Who Remains a Boy seems a parody of our concern for the mentally retarded, and a parody, in particular, of what is claimed for it. "Dr. Hurwitz's story is the record of an awesome struggle that ended in triumph and an inspiring book for those who recognize that mental retardation is a serious problem facing the nation."

"Unable to understand his limitations, Donald would long ago have disappeared into an institution — had it not been for his parents' almost superhuman determination to give him a 'normal' life...This book is the story of an ordeal. The ultimate test of parental devotion. It may inspire you, shock you, repulse you — but you will never forget it."

Donald is only mildly retarded. He learned to read and to write. He is able to go out alone. Anguish is anguish mental retardation is mental retardation. But many people have suffered much more than Dr. Hurwitz.

In an age that doesn't believe in God, that judges itself only insofar as it perceives itself in the eyes of others, a bad complexion is as disturbing as social injustice. And a mentally retarded person is so irritating then because he makes his parents the victims of others, the victims of shame and of guilt. And the burden of responsibility he places on the parents confronts them with their personal standards. A lot of people don't want to be confronted with the way they live their lives. The Hurwitzes seem determined to make their son lead a 'normal' life, normal in terms of other peoples' lives. Donald went to a normal public school and to a high school where his father was principal.

But perhaps this is an age that does believe in God. Convocation Hall was filled when Vanier spoke and Vanier describes himself as a disciple of Christ who has to be there, who has to be face to face with suffering to fulfil his duty to Christ. I listened in the empty corridors to Vanier's words—"Dare to Love! Think of the Little People!" — reverberating through the building. Occasionally people passed who looked deeply and expectantly into one's eyes — "daring to love." People who had worked themselves up into an emotional sweat and who smelled.

God is irrelevant, anyway, to the mentally retarded. All they need is a smile, a helping hand from someone, from anyone.

Pearl Buck has written one of the few worthwhile not specifically educational books about the retarded. The Child Who Never Grew, a mercifully short work, is about her discovery of her only daughter's retardation.

She mentions the fathers and mothers whose love for their mentally retarded children has led them to kill them because of a fear that when the parents were dead no one would look after the children.

I understand their position, I understand what has led them to do this, I sympathize with them, Pearl Buck writes, even though they should not have done this... "The damage is not to the one who is killed but to the one who kills."

John Maynard Keynes when asked about the effect of his economic proposals "in the long run" used to say, "In the long run we shall all be dead."

"In the long run we shall all be dead."

Yes. But in the meantime, for the sake of the here and the now, some people need to know there are people who care about them, and about the problems they face, people like Jean Vanier, like the Pope, like Ann Landers, for that matter.

And for the sake of the here and the now, some people need books like these, need to read them, need to write them.

randy robertson

VACATING SOON

SAVE 45-55% . . .

...on retail prices!! Here is an exceptional opportunity for you to buy your bike direct from the importer. Must move, space must be vacant within two months. That's why we are offering you these low prices.

INTRODUCING:

THIS 10 SPEED EUROPEAN RACER

Classic European craftsmanship from the builders of professional championship racers Vainqueur is a high quality precision 10-speed loaded with proven equipment. With a strong, lightweight racing frame that geometrically engineers the rear wheel closer to the seat mast for a shorter more responsive wheel base, less whip and greater frame rigidity. Vainqueur is ideal for racing, touring or just carefree cycling. Also available in American Arrow.

& THIS FOLDING BIKE

Italian craftsmanship shows in this quality-built portable bike. Just flip a lever and it folds in half. A smart choice if you live in an apartment. Stores in a closet or in the trunk of your car. Flip again and it's locked in place, ready to ride. Rugged steel frame, front and rear cable brakes, white-wall tires, Dynamo electric lighting with generator; back carrier; padded seat, chrome chain guard; and kick stand. The 20-inch wheels, adjustable handle bars and saddle make this bike suitable for both adults and children.

	RETAIL	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
AMERICAN ARROW MARK II 10 SPEED	149.00	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI 10 SPEED	149.00	97.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI 10 SPEED	159.00	103.00
VANQUEUR OLYMPIC	189.00	112.00
VANQUEUR	149.00	97.00
LA PERLE	149.00	97.00
VOLKSCYCLE	159.00	103.00

	RETAIL	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
VOLKSCYCLE	159.00	112.00
VOLKSCYCLE	149.00	97.00
MODENA	159.00	112.00
AMERICAN ARROW SI 10 SPEED	189.00	127.00

	RETAIL	OUR SPECIAL IMPORTED PRICE
ALL 10 SPEEDS WITH EXCEPTION OF AMERICAN ARROW SI HAVE SIMPLEX OR SHIMANO DERAILLEURS
VISTA 10 SPEED	149.00	97.00
QX2000 LADIES PENDER CARRIER REFLECTOR 3 SPEED	89.00	65.00
TIGER LADIES SUNTOUR DERAILLEUR 10 SPEED	119.00	82.00
LA PERLE QUOMATIC FOLDING BICYCLE	99.00	81.00
SAPARIOR CAPRI FOLDING BICYCLE	79.00	60.50

- Limited Quantities are available
- Prices are subject to change without notice
- A 20% deposit will hold the bike for you for 4 weeks.
- Personal shopping only.

- Open Mon.-Fri. 2 p.m.-6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-2 p.m.
- Brake cable and manufacturer's material defects. Warranty for three months on all brand names.
- Minimum service charge for assembling.
- We have a professional mechanic stand by to

- give you every information you want to know about bicycles.
- Come and visit our showroom at 403 Signet Drive, south of Steeles. Latest models available.
- We accept charge.

FREE

Get this sturdy tote bag FREE, Reg. $3.98 with every purchase of a bike.

FUN SPORTS LTD.
403 Signet Drive, Weston, Ontario
Phone: 749-6171
Your Charge card is accepted

T.T.C. from U. of T.

- Bloor subway west to Jane
- Jane bus #35 north to Finch
- Finch bus #36C west to 403 Signet

By Car

- 401 to 400
- 400 north to Finch
- proceed west on Finch to first stop light (Signet Dr.)
- runs north off Finch

ATTENTION: RETURNING STUDENTS

If you applied for OSAP this year, you will be automatically mailed a pre-printed 1974-75 application form within the next month. It will be sent to the permanent address indicated on your 1973-74 OSAP application. If you did not apply last year, forms should be available from your Faculty/College or this office by the middle of April.

Although the official deadline date for submission of applications is September 30th, you are urged to submit the forms, in person if possible, to this office before July 1 in order for you to have the loan portion of your award available at registration.

OFFICE OF STUDENT AWARDS
Room 107
Simcoe Hall

Spare beauty, subtle violence in Pinter's 'Old Times'

In a television programme on some of his plays, the few remarks the interview-shy Harold Pinter would make about himself were characteristically tangential: "I like talking about cricket, thinking about cricket, watching cricket." Since Pinter usually assumes a laconic disinterest with regard to exegeses of his plays, a critic must be grateful for small mercies. For his plays do resemble cricket. To the uninitiated, this game appears to be one of those rituals for which the English have always shown an inexplicable devotion; it looks gentlemanly, arcane, rather effete, and somewhat boring. But beneath the inscrutable facade it hides a subtly vicious competition. It is the way the cricket ball comes out of the bowler's hand that counts; the way he subtly twists it as he lets it go. Whirling unpredictably towards the batsman the rock-hard ball can reach the speed to kill a man. Cases have been known....

Not to stretch the metaphor too far, we can say that all Pinter's plays resemble cricket because they are structured like games. The rules may not be known, but there is a struggle for power where words, the weapons, are sent forth, spinning with subtle unpredictability. Nothing is overt. Like the cricket ball, by indirect means, we find directions out. But every little twist is significant, every nuance counts. There must be winners and losers, and the stakes are high.

After several short, poetical "mood" pieces, Pinter's latest play Old Times, returns to the power-struggling "games" of The Homecoming. And without a doubt, Old Times is a masterpiece. The play has the rich allusiveness and spare beauty evoked by the barest minimum of suggestion, that reveals a playwright in supreme control of his methods. Although the nuances frequently lack subtlety, and the struggle for power deadly accuracy, Herbert Whittaker's production at the Firehall Theatre is in most respects worthy of the play.

The game in Old Times is set in motion by the visit of a woman, Anna, to her old friend Kate, 20 years after they had lived together in London. Kate is now married to Deeley, and the three sit and reminisce. It is these reminiscences, where memory, desire, and time intermesh, that become instrumental in the struggle for power for the apparently passive and usually silent Kate. At first it appears as if the garrulous Anna, with Kate's help, will succeed in humiliating Deeley, through the subtle evocation of a lesbian power over Kate in the past. Deeley met Kate at a movie significantly titled Old Man Out. Despite the usual machismo posturings of the Pinter male, Deeley is squashed by Anna's canny use of memory. But if a Pinter character is a long time silent, watch out. Finally, it is Kate who emerges as the true power.

Anna, Kate and Deeley have a seemingly innocent conversation about the good old days.

It becomes clear that Kate has been at the centre of both Deeley's and Anna's affections and desires. In the final, understated tableau of the play, where the significant events of time past are re-enacted in the time present, Kate, like Ruth in The Homecoming (which has an identical use of tableau), sits like a hieratic earth mother above her two slumped victims. Is Kate Venus Anadyomene, and the play a witty enactment of a White Goddess ritual? Much is certainly made of Kate's love of baths, and in the second Act she begins her slow conquest after just having emerged from one. Is the play about the power of time, that because of memory is never past, but always present? The themes of time and desire together do give a rather new and disturbing meaning to the cliché of the Eternal Triangle. The play has an infinite number of allusions; but it touches on them gently; nothing is overtly "about" anything—and that is its power.

By some tricky lighting effects to underline (in purple ink) the switches in time, Whittaker makes overt what Pinter simply leaves alone. Several other impositions are made on the play with the same result, and in order to show, one supposes, that a director has been at it. But Pinter really knows best, and with him less is always better than more. The real directorial job lies in leaving effects alone and concentrating on conducting the beautifully orchestrated dialogue. For if a pause is half a beat off, in the spare texture of evocative prose, subtle tensions collapse and Pinteresque non sequiturs aren't funny. Here the three actors, Sheila Macdonald as Kate, Michael Polley as Deeley, and Norma Clark as Anna, are frequently abandoned by their director. But they all manager, especially Norma Clark, a most powerful and sophisticated Anna, to evoke the tough struggle beneath the polite surface. Sheila Macdonald perhaps lacks dreamy, sensual femininity that masks Kate's power and makes her final speech so telling; and Michael Polley often displays a smug self-congratulation at Deeley's humour where a tough male bravado would have been more effective. Despite some reservations, however, one must be grateful to the Firehall for providing a fine production of a superb play in a theatre that can make the most of its subtle intimacy.

For all those who should be interested, the play runs until April 6.

Maarten Van Dijk

POVERTY AND DEVELOPMENT

PUBLIC FORUM AND DEBATE (Proceedings Televised)

THIS SUNDAY, MARCH 31st

2:30 p.m. Sharp

ST. LAWRENCE HALL, 157 King Street, East

Admission: .75¢

YOU are welcome to come and speak your mind!

Sponsored by Congregational Mission Committee
The Presbytery of East Toronto
Presbyterian Church in Canada

SECRETARIAL SCIENCE SUMMER COURSE

for University Students or person of equivalent standing.

Course duration-12 weeks (5 periods per day) starting June 3, 1974. Fee: $90.00

Subjects:

FORKNER SHORTHAND

TYPING

BOOKKEEPING & BUSINESS MACHINES

RELATED SUBJECTS

For further information telephone 967-1212, extension 549 between 11:30 A.M. & 6:30 P.M.

The George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology

Discover
the freedom of
CONTACT LENSES

BRADDOCK
OPTICAL

170 St. George St. 925-8720
2917 Bloor St. W. 233-2611
Century Plaza 282-2030
Bayview Village Centre 222-5791

13 OPTICAL STORES
THROUGHOUT METRO
CONSULT THE YELLOW PAGES
MAIN STORE
280 BLOOR ST. WEST 962 2020

GRADUATE STUDENTS' UNION NOTICE OF ELECTION

NOMINATIONS STILL OPEN PRESIDENT - VICE-PRESIDENT

GRADUATE STUDENTS' UNION
1974 - 1975

- Nominations will be open until Tuesday, April 2, 1974 at 10:00 a.m.
- Nominees should construct their own nomination forms.
- The nomination form should contain the name, department, student number, address, telephone number, and signature of the nominee. The form should also contain the names, student numbers and signatures of at least two nominators who are themselves registered with SGS.
- Nominees are asked to contact The Grad Post as soon as possible. Platforms should be sub- mitted to the Grad Post no later than Tuesday, April 2, 9:00 a.m.

- Completed nomination forms should be returned to:
Election Committee Chairman
c/o GSU
16 Bancroft Ave.
- The election is scheduled for the week of April 8.
- The term of office is from May 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975.
- Students interested in helping with the election ($2.00/hr.) should contact the GSU office at 928-6233, no earlier than Wednesday April 3, at 9:00 a.m.

Wait for Godot to develop its promise

It's a game for two or more players. You have an appointment with someone. You never meet him, but you keep on waiting just the same. Passing the time is the object of the game and your partner can help. Oh, you may quarrel and fight but your must try to convince each other that you exist. The game is Beckett's Waiting for Godot, now playing as a Menagerie Players Production at the Central Library Theatre.

The set design of director Maurice Lopes in collaboration with Richard Banigan has bested the daunting smallness of the Central Library's stage, which seldom accommodates plays not requiring a box set.

Barren and saw-dusted, The 'country road' with requisites trees, allows for the placeless-timeless, Here-and-nowhere landscape demanded

By the metaphysical text. Unfortunately, the blocking and lighting do not permit this set to be fully exploited.

The tramp-everyman twosome, Estragon and Vladimir, demand greater variety and definition than David Beard and Andrew Bassett-Spiers bring to these roles. Didi and Gogo, to give their pet names, must appear to be playing to each other, so that the absurdity of their exchanges is then underlined by the words. Their music hall routines would have benefitted from a more theatrical treatment. The actors come close to this in the 'tree exercise' and hat exchange routines, but fail in their cross-talk acts. Beard and Bassett-Spiers illuminate their individual moments but, generally, they seem to have been let down by their director.

Unfortunately, the movements don't take advantage of the play's special symbolism. This really botches the ending. However, the first appearance of Lucky and Pozzo works quite well, helped by the texts recommendations as to the use of space and distance here.

As the expansive landlord, Pozzo, John Wood's performance is surprisingly suppressed. Despite his unfortunate wig and beard make-up, Derek Webster's Lucky is impressive. He makes a verbal tour de force of his monologue as the otherwise mute puppet-slave.

In week one, Menagerie's Godot was decidedly inchoate, but not without promise, as a production. You have now, in week three of the run, until April 6 to see whether this promise has been fulfilled.

barry o'connor

theatre

ed bean

Marsh Hay: a simple story told without pretension

The opening night of Marsh Hay at Hart House Theatre was one of those proud big-little evenings when one becomes aware that continuity and tradition still carry strength — not only for general Toronto society but more specifically for this particular university community. As Ann Saddlemyer, director of the Graduate Drama Centre, ushered an aged but pixie-like Merrill Denison to his seat and the notables of the University of Toronto nodded to each other across the aisles a frank camaraderie of shared interest and commitment held its own for the moment, even for those imbued with the cynical aspects of academic life today.

The presentation of Marsh Hay was part of a two-day seminar, Canadian Theatre Before the Sixties: A Celebration and an Exploration, co-sponsored by the University of Toronto and York University. Merrill Denison was writing plays for Hart House Theatre in the 1920's but his Marsh Hay, which dates back to 1923, was not produced there until its Canadian premiere this March. This long over-due production, directed by Richard Plant, proved to be a fitting finale to the Hart House season.

The play, about a poor blackwoods farming community in the Ottawa Valley, is in some ways so creaky that you can almost see the hinges. By this I mean that the characters are unmotivated and unexplored and the events as groaningly predictable and inevitable as the revolving set. And yet there was something about the way David Gardner as John Serang, the father of a defeated household, managed to say "50 acres of grey stone" that brought poetry to this bleak naturalistic setting.

It is a simple story and it was told simply and unpretentiously. The Serang family struggle for the meagre existence provided by an uncertain crop of marsh hay. The children feud with their parents and each other, the girls sneaking off into the night to dally with their male counterparts from similar households. Sarilin Serang, the young daughter becomes pregnant and for a while Lena Serang, the mother, instead of despairing or forcing a shot-gun marriage upon her, decides to provide a vision of a better life where a new baby is actually welcomed into the world. But a self-induced abortion plunges them all back into the feld backwater of their inescapable life.

David Gardner and Leigha Lee Browne gave strong, interesting performances as the parents without over-weighting their desperation. Joan Bloom as Sarilin sustained a brave defiance and Doug Beattie as Walt, who escapes a dreaded marriage, was a fittingly hostile and pathetic country bumpkin. Dan Needles gave a comical character study of the General Store proprietor and the rest of the cast filled in well as the motley townspeople.

The two sets, a bleak wood-grained interior of the Serang shack and the bright, wonderfully detailed hodge-podge of the General Store, provided effective vehicles for the slow ripple of hostilities and enervated resolutions which defined the play. Marsh Hay deals with lives so unimportant that they become fascinating in their menial curiosity. The last performance is tomorrow night at Hart House Theatre.

sandra souchotte

Friday, March 28, 1974

"Who was that lady I saw you with last night, Comrade?"
"That was no lady, Comrade Minister, that was my wife."
Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha

Second City rides again: a skimpy cast and worn-out jokes slow them down

Toronto's Second City Revue has found a second home for a second chance. The company has moved into The Firehall Restaurant at Jarvis and Lombard (across the street from the Jarvis House). Previously, the group ran into financial trouble which was aggravated by the government's refusal to issue them a liquor license. Well, The Firehall has a liquor license and Second City may be back on its feet, financially, but it is still in trouble.

Much of the trouble stems from the fact that the company has lost many of its original members, and with them, a great deal of talent. Only Eugene Levy, Joseph O'Flaherty and Gilda Radner remain and do what they can to hold the show together. Levy has a feeling for subtlety and underplay, which makes his performing amoeba act one of the funniest sketches in the show. Unfortunately, the detail work he exhibits here is missing from the rest of the evening. Joe O'Flaherty's driving energy and Gilda Radner's genius for the comic touch are the show's only other assets. John Candy has energy—but that's all. Rosemary Radcliffe shines briefly when she sings the torch-song parody, "It's your fault," but more because of the material than her manner of handling it.

The show has more troubles. The book, which includes little gems like fractured beer commercials, a $500 demand for Stanfield's release, and a delightful satire of the Tarragon-French-Freeman connection entitled "You're gonna be alright, you creep, leaving home and all, eh?", is pat, predictable and dull. But this is nothing new. The old book, with a few exceptions, was the same. But the old group was a highly-trained, well-knit unit of actors whose talent was sufficient to not only make the material bearable, but to raise it occasionally to great comic heights. The present cast has trouble raising it to the bearable stage.

Second City Revue may indeed have found their second home, but I'm afraid they're going to need more than a second chance.

"Hey, wait just a gol-durn minute!" exclaims the discerning reader, "what does this picture have to do with anything on this page?" To which comes the somewhat cavalier reply, "nothing" But if you'd written an article, it could have filled this space just think, your name in cold print, the adulation of millions but you blew it, Charlie! Better luck next year

Musical comedy: a rhythmically undulating line of shapely chorines provides the focal point for this extravagant production number.

Introduction to Banana Analysis

By SANDRA SOUCHOTTE

This year I had the dialectical pleasure of not only taking two courses in theatre studies myself but also of teaching one. The course I taught (at York) was officially listed as Fine Arts 130: Principles of Theatre — An Introduction to Script Analysis, and was a compulsory first year course.

Needless to say, the only real consistency that emerged from various haggling discussions (loosely termed tutorials) was the fact that most ideas in theatre cannot be pigeon-holed and that most labels become unglued with alarming rapidity. By the Christmas exam, however, certain scholarly minds were already being honed toward professional critical understanding and at least one paper was able to arrive at two key definitions—universal in implication yet disarming in ultimate simplicity. These gems of profundity were that Realism on stage entailed the use of real bananas while Expressionism required the use of blue bananas. It took several months for a humbler mind such as my own to properly appreciate and absorb the implications of these statements. But once they were fully understood it was as if floodgates (to lean aqueously on a metaphorical association as old as the Bible) had been opened and I was able to suddenly regurgitate the entire course with insight positively Darwinian in proportion.—that is, the relationship of man, animals and bananas and their clear-cut connections with theatrical evolution. For those interested in a quick brush-up on play analysis and the theatre, I offer these insights to you here.

Realism—man on the stage eating a real banana.

Naturalism—man as animal on the stage eating an over-ripe or rotting banana.

Expressionism—man on the stage in some kind of relationship to a blue banana.

So much for style. Now what can be done with genre!

Comedy—man slipping on a banana peel or man shown in a complex situation attempting to recover stolen or otherwise lost bananas (the through line of action being "he's gone bananas").

In an Aristophanic Comedy (say something "after Lysistrata") the plot might hinge on a society of women deprived of their bananas).

Tragedy—man thinks that the banana is important and deals with the key question "What is a banana?"

Tragi-Comedy—man cries when he slips on a banana.

Melodrama—a villainous landlord demands a whole bunch of bananas as rent and meanwhile attempts to sip the hero's poisoned banana. Such threats as "I'll skin you alive" are frequently uttered and at the end the heroine falls prostrate onto a hard, strong, bright yellow and life-saving banana.

Absurdism—man slips on an imaginary banana or man attempts to eat an imaginary banana. In the absurdist theatre, especially a production owing say to Ionesco, man alone might be multiplied to an image of a whole stageful of men all eating imaginary bananas, or a whole stageful of men attempting to eat one banana or a banana attempting to eat a whole stageful of men (you get the picture).

Other important aspects of thorough banana analysis.

1. Character levels in a play should always be approached in terms of man's reaction to and reflection upon the banana in question.

2. The style of a play is determined by the action man takes, or does not take, with the banana. One common leitmotif might be man's inhumanity to bananas.

3. The plot structure of any play operates on a scale of intensity from the appearance to the disappearance (or resolution) of the banana. The final image is either a man with a full stomach and a lone banana-skin lying on the floor in existential isolation or alternatively, man alone deprived of the banana, again an important image of futility and existential isolation.

Musical Comedy—a tap-dancing banana

Brechtian Theatre—a banana standing side by side with its skin, one of the most common of Brecht's alienation devices. Several "blue-collar" working bananas would also dominate a production of this nature.

A Marowitz Collage—banana theatre indebted to a work such as Charles Marowitz's cut-up collage version of Hamlet would utilize a collective identification such as that of a banana in a fruit salad.

As has been noted the implications of Banana Analysis are truly astounding and it has been the hope of this author to take the reader some small part of the way in the long and never-ending task of attempting to come to terms with the theatrical importance of bananas. Those wishing to further enrich themselves in this area will be pleased to know that a second year course is being planned, which will take the insights developed here yet one trepidous (and often slippery) step forward.

Stylized realism: these bananas seem to real you could reach out and eat one; but a more thoughtful examination reveals the coldness and alienation born of too much precision.

Theatre of the absurd: A master stroke! There is no banana in this picture. But you are none the less thinking about a banana, which gives rise to the question, "What is reality?"

Review the camp

If you're old enough to know about sex...You're old enough to know about birth control.
Contact your local family planning clinic

For a year now, we at the Varsity Review have you with some pretty heavy cultural artifi devastating intellectuals like Norman Vincent Pe Brian Wilson Key PhD, and the nazis in the Ro But there's more to life than the obviously hi There's the culture of this great and wonderfu capture some of that culture, we sent our rovi around to sniff out some of the images that are the campus reader.

They've come back with not just well—images—patterns that express the meani on this great and wonderful campus, better than communication could ever hope to.

As we put these elements of visual poet remember that the great and wonderful sage of McLuhan, who at press time is speaking to people us.

And we hope he'd be proud of our little elfo global village.

So here they are—the images of YOUR lives,

Got a man-sized cold? Ordinary tissue papers just don't do the job for you? Buy Kleenol Man-Size Hankies and be done with mid-winter mess forever.

A scientist who other planets. Dr. Siro world in the universe.

Friday, May

ave been bombarding
artillery—articles on Peale, Pierre Berton,
Robarts library.
y highbrow.
erful campus. And to oving photographers
are important to you,
st pictures, but
ping of all of our lives an any linear form of poetry to paper, we

of our time, Marshall people just like you and effort at creating the es, readers.

Is the vet you're taking your Rover to a quack? According to Dr. John Duck, a Toronto veterinarian, most vets are "just out for a fast buck". "Most of them don't know their elbow from their fanny," he charged. "They sleep their way through veterinary college in some fancy 'individualized' course that doesn't call for any old-fashioned hard work and graduate without knowing the first thing about anything. When they set up to practice, they're no better than quacks." We're with you on that, Dr. Duck!

Dead dogs are quite plentiful at this time of year. Here one suns himself outside Massey College.

Investigative work researched and compiled a Varsity Task Force consisting of Elaine Farrager, Ulli Diemer, Gernot Wieland, Gene Allen and Tom Walkom.

Massey College is the home of the U of T croquet team.

Scientists call "mad" claims he has evidence that there is life on ptzzz says he can prove that Blortdz is not the only inhabited
For details, see P. 15.

But CompuDate says the last thing it intends to do is remove the romantic element from courtship... the procedures are simply reversed. In the conventional process of courting we fall in love and while in the grasp of our most powerful emotions, fail to evaluate the other person either accurately or objectively... In scientific mate selection... things are different. Compatibility between two people is established first, so that if they fall in love, it is with someone suitable... the emotions would still be intense but encouraged by the belief that they were being lavished upon a compatible partner.

So discovered Adrian Waller during his research for Data for a Candlelight Dinner, a study of computer dating that is just long enough—there are only so many times one can watch Waller, a musicologist, trying to figure out his computer dates' opinions on Beethoven.

Computate is only one of the dating services Waller examines, the one he signs up with in order to experience machine matches firsthand. His dates are interesting but he forms no long-term relationships. Like marriage, which, he discovered, is the goal of most who use these services.

Computate charges $45 for a half-year membership, $75 for a year and a special $60 for one's second year. Members fill in detailed questionnaires which are transferred into computer cards and, fed into the computer—named Buzz by those in the know. They receive a list of names and phone numbers of supposedly compatible dates.

Except when Buzz is capricious and deliberately mismatches people on the grounds that opposites attract.

Computate lists three basic conditions for a good relationship: strong physical attraction, "basic compatibility and mutuality of purpose and interests" and rational assumptions and expectations about each other and the relationship.

Waller presents his material laconically, mainly in dialogue with no hype or heavy sociological speculation. If you're curious about computer dating, it's worth the two hours or less you'll need to read it.

Data for a Candlelight Dinner;
Adrian Waller; Clarke Irwin;
elaine kahn

One of the most miraculous successes of computer dating occurred in Toronto in 1949, when the 7th Artillery Regiment took St. Beatrice's Convent out to the stock-car races and had a milkshake afterwards. A good time was had by all.

University of Toronto Press' latest entry into the literary world, Calendar 1974-75 University of Toronto Faculty of Arts and Science St. George Campus, hit the streets this week receiving unfavourable reviews from most informed students.

Behind the "new image" shiny cover, which has returned to its basic blue of two years ago, there are 344 pages of facts and figures to boggle the mind, and keep the most enthusiastic student bored.

Along with such helpful sections as how to read the calendar, moslem and hebrew holidays and that old favourite table of contents, the "book" also contains interesting blurbs on all the colleges including U of T's newest arrival, Woodsworth College.

Although the shiny paper is easily smeared and the glossy cover could cause eye strain, the type face in the book is legible, enabling the student to easily find out what the courses are about, until the course is either cancelled or altered in the fall.

The overall readability of the calendar is good, with the action flowing in a logical and systematic manner. The authors, Sincove Hall, not to be confused with the building, have done an admirable job.

However the plot leaves little to the imagination as one soon realizes it's the same old student-meets-course story.

The rumour that the calendar is soon to be made into a major motion picture has been denied.

briane nasimok

- Six months service
- One year theft insurance

OVER 30 MAKES AND 150 MODELS TO CHOOSE FROM

320 James St. North
(at Barton)
HAMILTON
529 1775

2863 Keele Street
(North of 401 Hwy)
TORONTO
633 1740

3011 Dufferin St.
(South of Lawrence Ave.)
TORONTO
783-1333

Southgate Mall
BRAMALEA
451.4514

KOSHER
FOR PASSOVER

פסח פסח

MANISCHEWITZ

CONCORD GRAPE
SPECIALLY BREWED
41% ALC/VOL (82° BY VOLUME)

MADE AND BOTTLED BY MANISCHEWITZ WINE CO. NEW YORK N.Y. U.S.A. B.W. 21

THE TRADITIONAL KOSHER WINE

Imported by
J. & W. R. H. Co.
New York, N.Y.

2.5 IMPERIAL OUNCES

Manischewitz Concord Wine is for people who find the taste of dry wine about as pleasant as smokers' tooth powder. Make something of it. Like:

Manischewitz Purple Cow

Stir together equal parts of Manischewitz Concord Wine and vodka. Serve on the rocks and add a twist of lemon.

Manischewitz Hi-Boy

Fill a tall glass with ice cubes. Add 3 jiggers of Manischewitz Concord Wine, and fill with ginger ale or club soda. Top with lemon slice. Stir.

Manischewitz Party Punch

A knock-out. Dissolve $\frac{3}{4}$ -cup sugar in juice of 6 lemons. Add tray of ice cubes, 1 bottle Manischewitz Concord Wine and 1 bottle of club soda. Stir gently until very cold.

For other interesting
Manischewitz recipes, write
Suite 800, 234 Eglinton East,
Toronto.

Manischewitz.
The start of
something great.

Library reports 'no trouble today'

Absolutely nothing went wrong at the Roberts Library yesterday. In what close observers of campus politics believe to be a faculty ploy to divert attention from the Banfield crisis, escalators were running both up and down in the new library complex.

Students, not sensing they were being duped, are reported to have checked books out at a fast pace despite heavy police guard.

Prof. Edward C. Banfield's The Heavenly City continued to top the most-requested book list. A plot to mis-shelve it in the erotic art section was uncovered early yesterday morning and the book was placed back on the reserve shelf by noon.

None of the elevators in the building were out of order by press time last night. Line-ups at the coat check did not extend beyond the main floor.

The only disturbance came earlier in the day when students failed to go on a rampage to protest the fact that the university had not invested more money in displays about the true history of the library and other good clean fun.

In a closely related development, at least six men were found simultaneously sitting fully clothed in the dimly-lit ante-room to the library's third floor men's washroom. Students have in the past shown a reluctance to sit in this room after dark.

Overize bookshelves at Roberts Library report no punies misshelved there last night

Humble Pie settles in for some serious work

THUNDERBOX HUMBLE PIE
A&M: $7.29

Are you tired of being ripped off by so-called "rock & roll" bands which neither rock nor roll, but prefer to crawl? Have you had enough of screeching guitar solos that are based upon the repetition of one off-key note, while the singer is making out with the microphone (or vice-versa, depending upon your vice or versa). Do you think that the pompously overinflated bands, which, have suddenly discovered culture in a 25-piece orchestra and therefore feel fit to make a "statement," are just full of shit? Then your salvation lies in going out and getting a copy of Humble Pie's Thunderbox, taking it home and playing it loud.

You can't miss it with its Penthouse-style cheesecake designed to turn on the Bay Street, closet pervert-to-liend. I mean someone could make a mint just by wrapping the album in brown paper and letting the moguls peek at the keyhole after a dismal day on the market. It should perk the old boys up good and solid. The inner sleeve is good enough to convince anyone that cleanness is indeed next to godliness and you're bright enough you can frame it in such a way as to be able to alternate the side you want to see according to your mood. And if some liberated female calls you sexist, just follow the Jerry Jeff Walker method by taking two steps back and giving her a drop kick in the crotch. It might get her attention, or drive her off. Either way you win. (Not necessarily, Serge; some women kick back - ed.)

But don't think that the cover steals the thunder from the record. Indeed, with Steve Marriott doing the vocals, Humble Pie roars along in excellent fashion. It would probably be correct to say that Marriott is Humble Pie, yet the band, despite personnel changes, works in perfect unison with the singer who, in turn, gives them enough room to display their skills. The group, which includes Clem Clempson on guitar, bassist Greg Ridley, drummer Jerry Shirley and Marriott on vocals, harp and keyboards, with the help of Blackberries on backup vocals, harp and keyboards, with the help of the Blackberries on backup vocals, plays the kind of rock once provided by the top acts in the business.

Overall, the Pie hasn't changed all that much although there is a greater emphasis on the fast rock material as opposed to the slow bluesy compositions which tended to slow down previous releases. The opening cut "Thunderbox" kicks the LP off to a roaring start as Marriott, at his suggestive best, wails away while the band almost explodes in trying to keep up. As drummer Shirley plays off against the lead guitar, the Blackberries provide the most soulful backup vocals I've heard in a long time. Tunes in the same vein and of the same quality include "No Way", "Ninety-nine Pounds", "Every Single Day", and "Oh La De Da".

Included on the LP are several compositions based on a loose blues shuffle style which seems perfectly suited for Marriott's voice. On "I Can't Stand the Rain" Marriott takes on a different tone which infuses the tune with just the right amount of feeling and sincerity. Musically this song is enhanced by a horn backup mixed in to balance out the drums and piano duet. "Anna", which was done by the early Beatles, comes off much better since the band as a whole slows it down to the point where, despite the basic structural weakness of the song, it becomes quite passionate. Then there are the slow, almost spoken tunes "Don't Worry, Be Happy", "No Money Down" and "Drift Away", the only tune where a band member does the vocal. "No Money Down", a Chuck Berry tune, done so perfectly that the old master must be very proud, gives Marriott a chance to use his voice to its limits. The band wails away, with an excellent lead guitar and piano break which emphasize the lyrics of a typical Berry car song.

The band does a good version of "Drift Away", recently recorded by John Kay, but unfortunately no credits are given as to who is the lead singer. Then there are two songs that just don't seem to come off quite right, "Groovin' with Jesus" and "Rally with Al". Both tunes seem overcrowded and come out forced and lifeless, although the band never lets up in its playing.

Overall this is an excellent LP from a band which seems to have settled down to do some serious work. Despite the loss of some excellent musicians, like Peter Frampton, Humble Pie appears to be living up, at last, to expectations. Thunderbox comes on like a real tiger and not like just another pussy.

serge schardt

Tequila Sauza makes every party a fiesta!

Coming June 14, 15, & 16

The Labatt's Blue
Can-Am Weekend
at Mosport

Featuring the CAN-AM and Formula 5000 Races

Labatt's Blue smiles along with you

DAVID MIRVISH BOOKS ON ART

599 Markham St. (Bloor & Bathurst) 531-9975

SPECTACULAR SPRING ART BOOK SALE!!!

SAT., MARCH 30 AND SUN., MARCH 31 FROM 1:00 to 5:00 p.m.

HUNDREDS OF BEAUTIFUL BOOKS ON SALE WHILE THEY LAST!!!

Free Parking in Tony's Lot Behind Store On Sundays

DAMAGED BOOKS

Toulouse-Lautrec, Kandinsky, Artist and the Nude, Paul Klee, Erotic Art, European Folk Art, World Ceramics, Kroller-Muller Museum, Female Figure in Movement, Twenty Thousand Years in Fashion, Marino Marini, Amorous Illustrations of Thomas Rowlandson, Larousse Encyclopedia of Modern Art, Oldenburg, The Moderns, French Painting (Skira), Flemish Painting (Skira), Michael Snow, History of Painters Eleven, Circle, Diane Arbus, Yvette Guilbert, Francis Bacon (Grand Palais Eleven), Aubrey Beardsley, Les Diners de Gala by Dali, Five British Sculptors, Graham Sutherland.

ORIGINAL VALUES
UP TO $50.00!!!

FROM 50¢

99¢ SPECIALS

Twentieth Century Graphics, Arts of Man, English Silver, Decorative Ironworks, German Painting in the Twentieth Century, Posters, Gothic Illuminated Manuscripts, Greek and Roman Jewellery, Venice Biennale (hardcover), African Masks, Ivories of the West, The Bohemians, Italian Sculpture, Dutch Painting, Venetian Painting, Gauguin, Nancy Graves, German Expressionists, Paul Klee, Maps and Prints for Pleasure and Investment, Nineteen Twenties Style.

OUR
PRICE
99¢

VALUES UP TO $7.50!!!

LICHTENSTEIN Guggenheim, hardcover, publ at $8.50	WAYS OF SEEING 30 colour ill. publ at $10.00	BRIDGET RILEY N.Y.G.S., hardcover, publ at $14.50	MONDRIAN N.Y.G.S., hardcover, publ at $13.50	DUALITY OF VISION 149 plates, publ at $15.00	TOULOUSE-LAUTREC Phaidon published at $18.00	CYBERNETICS, ART AND IDEAS publ at $13.50	ANDY WARHOL N.Y.G.S., hardcover, publ at $10.00	LOUVRES DIALOGUES by Pierre Schneider publ at $10.00
$1.99	$2.49	$2.99	$4.99	$4.99	$4.99	$2.99	$2.99	$1.99

FOUR FABULOUS FACES

The most sumptuous film book ever published. Over 1,000 rare photos and a 16 page colour selection of priceless old movie magazines. A lavish testimonial to the ageless beauty of Swanson, Garbo, Crawford and Dietrich.

PUBLISHED AT $40.00

OUR PRICE
11.99

MAXFIELD PARRISH:

THE EARLY YEARS: 1893-1930. Includes more than 200 reproductions, 150 in full colour (suitable for framing), of Maxfield Parrish's best paintings, murals, illustrations, and calendars, together with a biography and informative critical commentary on his art. 356 pages, 11 x 14 inches VALUE $59.95

OUR
PRICE
33.00

MORE! MORE! MORE! SPECTACULAR SPRING SPECIALS!!!

WORLD CULTURAL GUIDES:

FLORENCE, PARIS, ROME, VENICE, LONDON, MADRID AND TOLEDO. Each guide book features over 150 ill. in colour and b. & w. A must for all travellers who love art! Published at $11.50 each.

$2.49

CHARMED CIRCLE, GERTRUDE STEIN AND COMPANY

by James R. Mellow. This new publication unlocks not only the world of Gertrude Stein but also the far more private world of her art. Published at $14.95.

$9.99

BEST OF LIFE

304 pages, 100 of them in colour, and 680 photographs (including 77 LIFE covers) span 36 years of LIFE from 1936 to 1972. Published at $19.95.

$12.99

PICASSO POSTERS

Handsome bound collection of Picasso's huge output of posters. Reproduces more than 300 posters, 72 in full colour, 55 superb Tip Ins. Published at $72.00.

$24.99

CUISINE DE FRANCE

Complete 12 volume set. Each volume illustrated with 20 full colour photos of the gourmet dish together with the easy-to-prepare recipe. Published at $14.95 a set.

$4.99

THE HAGGADAH FOR PASSOVER

Designed and illustrated by BEN SHAHN Translation, introduction and historical notes by Cecil Roth. Printed in France by Trianon Press. Value $25.00.

$6.99

A YEAR OF PICASSO; PAINTINGS 1969

Nearly 200 paintings shown in full colour created by Picasso during 1969, accompanied by a group of related drawings in duotone; subjects range from the lighthearted to the erotic. Published at $37.50.

$13.50

THE ART OF COLOUR by Johannes Itten

The standard work on colour throughout the world-acknowledged to be one of the landmark contributions to art and art education in this century. 156 pages, 74 colour illustrations and 28 reproductions of paintings. From April 1st, $49.95.

$33.00

THE HOLOCAUST

The tragic fact that six million of our people were murdered in the years 1933-45 at times seems to slip into a mundane complacency within our consciousness. While we may promise ourselves to forever remember that which transpired, rarely can we comprehend the endless suffering and pain of the victims. To dismiss the holocaust as just another evidence of man's corruption and evil in history is to disregard the extremely unique nature of that crime. By ignoring this fact we indeed compound the obscenity of the evil.

The purpose of the Holocaust Remembrance Week is to broaden and deepen our knowledge and understanding of that period — not only to reveal the tragic events, but also as a warning to the future.

REMEMBRANCE WEEK

A HOLOCAUST REMEMBRANCE SHABBAT

A Shabbat dedicated to the memory of the victims of the holocaust, the programme will consist of singing and reading of poems and writings from the works of Katznelson, Wiesel, Steiner, Schwartz-Bart, Ringelbaum and others. In addition we hope to create a dramatic presentation and talk with some special guests.

Gearred primarily for the student community and interested faculty, the Shabbat in Memoriam will involve services and the three traditional meals. Please make reservations no later than Wed., Mar. 27 by calling 923-9861.

FRIDAY-SATURDAY MARCH 29-30
HILLEL HOUSE 186 St. George

LECTURE & SLIDE PRESENTATION

זכור

"THE VANISHED WORLD OF THE SHETTEL"

Audio-Visual Documentary of European Jewish Life Between The Two World Wars

BY

The World Renowned Physician Biologist, Master Photographer

ROMAN VISHNIAC

From 1936-1940 Dr. Vishniac travelled 5000 miles across Europe to capture on film the faces and lifestyles of the 2. Shetlach of eastern Europe. The resulting photographs are, as Edward Steichen called them, "A last minute look before the Nazi brutality exterminated them". Thirty of the photos were collected in a volume entitled, Polish Jews: A Pictorial Record (Schocken, 1947) which "showed mankind the beauty of the world as it cannot see."

The students and staff of 'B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation' at the University of Toronto (under the sponsorship of the Bergen-Belsen Association and The B'nai Brith Department of Adult Jewish Education) have arranged this programme for the entire community to sanctify the martyrs of the holocaust. We hope all will make use of these unique opportunities to fulfill their personal obligations to commemorate the lives of those who perished.

SATURDAY
MARCH 30
9:00 p.m.

SHAAREI TEFILLAH
SYNAGOGUE
3600 BATHURST ST

POLISH JEWS

FILM & LECTURE
"TRANSPORT FROM PARADISE"
the human dimension of life
in the TEREZIN GHETTO

BY

ARNOST LUSTIG

Professor of Theatre Arts at American U. Wash. D.C. Prof. Lustig is a film writer and a member of the Bergen Belsen Association born in Czechoslovakia in 1926. With his parents he was sent to Theresienstadt and Auschwitz and Buchenwald. After the war he returned to Prague where he became famous as a screen writer and novelist. His book, A Prayer for Katerina Horowitzova, won the Gottwald prize in 1967.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31 8:00 p.m.
MEDICAL SCIENCE BLDG. U.T. Rm. 2172

THE ACADEMY-AWARD WINNING
FULL-LENGTH FEATURE FILM
"SHOP ON MAIN STREET"

A Haunting Tragic-Comedy during early days of the Nazi occupation of Czechoslovakia

STARRING — IDA KMAINSKA — Academy-Award Nominee

MONDAY, APRIL 1

8:00 p.m.
MEDICAL SCIENCE BLDG. U. of T. Rm. 3153

THREE IMPORTANT FILMS

1 "ACT OF FAITH" — A simple statement of man's humanity to man

2 "DENMARK '43" Eight dramatic days of WW II are relayed by 8 teenagers in this remarkable experiment in a history class

3 "I NEVER SAW ANOTHER BUTTERFLY" — Based on book of same title containing drawings and poems of children in Czechoslovakian concentration camps

TUESDAY, APRIL 2

8:00 p.m.
HILLEL HOUSE, 186 ST. GEORGE

FILM FOLLOWED BY DISCUSSION

LED BY

DR. EMIL FACKENHEIM
Professor of Philosophy, U. of T.

"THE BLACK FOX"
with Marlene Dietrich

WED. APRIL 3, 8:00 p.m.
NEW COLLEGE, U.T. Rm. 1017, 40 WILLCOCKS

MARCH 29 - APRIL 3

Maybe you think it's all in the bag, now that we've got some state ownership. Not so. Socialists of all stripes and all camps should agree it's time to wake up

Public ownership:

The seductive fallacy

One of the more dangerous social myths of the twentieth century welfare state is the idea, propounded by left-wing liberals and social democrats, that state intervention in the economy is the way to a better society.

Unfortunately many people still equate state intervention with socialism.

But fortunately there have been some attempts by various socialists from different perspectives to refute this seductive fallacy and show the state as a pillar of the modern capitalist system.

The Political Economy of the State, edited by Dimitri Roussopoulos of Our Generation, the Montreal left libertarian journal, is one attempt at providing this type of hard look at the monopoly capitalist state. Using Canada, Quebec and the United States as examples the various writers dissect the state incisively.

This book should be mandatory reading for social democrats, who think change will come if the NDP achieve power and institutes a more comprehensive and humane welfare state.

The truth is the capitalists support this kind of development because the state takes over many of the most unproductive and least profitable services and administers them. Not only that, these services are paid for out of the taxes of the working class because the Canadian taxation system is regressive with small corporate taxes, regressive sales and property taxes and income taxes which place the heaviest burden on the lower middle and middle classes, not the rich.

It should be no surprise that only two weeks ago the so-called "socialist" government of British Columbia, led by Premier Dave Barrett was saluted in a glowing report in the organ of the Canadian capitalist class, The Financial Post. Barrett's reforms are now being supported by the capitalists who fought against his election.

They have found out the truth which Political Economy of the State makes so apparent, that the state actually serves the best interests of the capitalist classes.

For example, it operates the education system which socializes the young for their future roles in production.

The state, however, is now feeling the effects of its intervention in the economy. The capitalist economy was on the verge of collapse during the depression and was only saved by the war economy, which stimulated production and let to the post war and flifies booms.

However, as Mickey Ellinger and John Rowntree argue in an essay On Revolution in the Metropolis, the solutions used to increase prosperity have generated further problems that the capitalist state is unable to solve.

The war economy in the US has led to a situation where as much is spent on defense ($80 billion) as is spent on all food products by its 200 million citizens. Any cutbacks would directly affect almost five million workers employed in industries directly related to war and defense activities. All this has ironically been financed with the taxes of other American workers, with the support of their union bosses.

The state cannot maintain this level of expenditure indefinitely in a peace-time economy but the alternative is massive unemployment unparalleled since the depression. So the US is in a fiscal crisis along with its balance of payments problems and the energy crisis.

Ellinger and Rowntree see this as eventually leading to a coalition of the direct targets of these exploitative policies: blacks, youth and women, the most oppressed groups in US society. These groups they argue will, through organizations in the schools, the communities and the workplaces lead to the growth of a socialist movement that will topple the world's largest capitalist imperialist power. They stress this is not around the corner, but the roots are there for revolution.

On the Canadian situation we are treated to incisive, extremely brief and well argued essays on the parallel situations in Canada and Quebec. Although not as long as the rather ponderous and long-winded essay on the US, these essays are good. Rick Deaton on The Fiscal Crisis, Roy Lemoine on The Growth of the State in Quebec, and Lorn Houston on The State as Socializer and Grame Nicholson on Authority and the State.

In Quebec we probably have the best example of how the state has been used to increase the profits of the capitalist class, especially foreign capitalists. Quebec under Liberal and Union Nationale Governments since 1960 has experienced an unparalleled rise in prosperity and economic growth.

This has been achieved by huge state intervention on a scale not present in the rest of Canada. Lemoine shows that while the state received 43.4 per cent of the Gross Provincial Product in revenues and 45.9 per cent in expenditures, the profits went to largely foreign corporations.

Because the state is so powerful some would expect the citizenry to reap the benefits, but much of the state intervention was in services to the corporate sector. This was through massive expenditures on a modern educational system, a nationalized hydro development corporation to serve industry and increased government loans and grants for industries to provide more jobs in underdeveloped areas. The nature of this type of grant is shown by the fact many of the grants went to the Montreal area because it was designated as an "underdeveloped" area.

Muston and Nicholson expose some of the other ways the state operates in the interest of the wealthy and powerful by acting as authority and socializer. Huston shows how sophisticated projects such as Opportunities for Youth and the Local Initiatives Projects do little to solve unemployment but channel potentially explosive forces for dissent such as the young into free-form community enterprises, mainly social services. These operate mainly to socialize and diffuse dissent rather than to solve the problems of those being helped. They perpetuate a band-aid approach to social problems.

Nicholson's essay deals with the state as authority in society. Through its power the state is able to make significant decisions which influence the life of its citizens. But most are in the role of defender of property and wealth through the courts and the police.

When there is a strike which society does not approve of, especially among public employees, the states authority becomes most evident. Recent manifestations of this enforcer role were in the crushing of the railway workers' and Quebec public employees' strikes by state action. Quebec's three top labor leader were jailed for a year for daring to defy the state in advocating defiance of the law ordering a return to work.

Although this book will not achieve the wide distribution it deserves, it is a valuable contribution to literature on the modern state by writers for an intelligent left wing journal. Political Economy of the State does a workmanlike and effective job in its demolition of the myth of the state as a benevolent force in society. The state supports capitalism and will forcibly crush opposition to the capitalist order, if threatened. There can be no debate on this fact of life.

The Political Economy of the State
ed. by Dimitri Roussopoulos
Black Rose Books, $2.95

bob bettson

The Varsity 35

"Best Of" albums: the pros and cons

With all the troubles plaguing the music industry these days it's comforting to know that some of the established traditions will never die. These collections of songs that usually bear the prefix, "Greatest Hits" or "The Best Of..." fall into that category (along with ever increasing prices).

But everything is far from being as rosy as we'd like. Such song collections have both positive and negative aspects. Most record buyers are aware of at least some of the advantages of "Best Of" albums but the disadvantages are rarely considered or discussed. The advantages seem almost overwhelming but the disadvantages explain why such albums aren't always all they should be.

The idea of a record that contains only familiar and popular songs is one that has always appealed to the public (K-tel has made a fortune from that knowledge). Best Of albums afford buyers the opportunity to enjoy an artist's music without going to the expense or expending the time involved in acquiring and wading through that artist's entire discography. That could be important when, as is so often the case, a performer has one or two albums with only a few good tracks on them. Also, one can usually make substantial savings in album purchases, as many Best Of sets are double LP's offered at a reduced list price.

In order for the negative aspects to be more clearly understood one should explore the reasons underlying the release of Best Of's. At the root of all intentions are, of course, the pecuniary motivations of rarely altruistic record companies. In fact it wouldn't be unreasonable to presume that such intentions are basically distinguishable only as varying degrees of exploitation. The specific possibilities are usually one of the following: 1) The artist honestly feels the need to collect his best material on one record. (This has happened before, but it's rare. The usual procedure now is to release live versions of such material); 2) The artist is under contract to produce a fixed number of albums and can't meet the quota — so he or the company opts for the Best Of as a quick solution; 3) The artist leaves the record company, dies, or in the case of a group splits up. The record company can usually do what it wants with the old material (which happens often); 4) The artist just has no control.

The record company's position is easy to understand. They have no real risk in releasing the album. There's no costly studio time, all the cuts are proven winners and all that's left to do is put together a new cover and sit back and let the money roll in.

Another consideration for the consumer (the more discriminating one), is that these records are usually put together from tapes, not masters, and dubs of those tapes are sent to branch plants for local mastering. This haphazard treatment results in "noisy" discs that are usually considerably poorer in sound quality than the originals (there is a very definite "hiss" that results from the tape transfers).

It's most odd that while editors of collected literary works are customarily credited, that the same does not hold true for the recorded medium. The Best Of's are often put together by some unnamed corporate designate and the criteria for inclusion are questionable. (many poor anthologies have turned up). But I should add that there has been noticeable progress in this area in the last year.

With this background, some recent additions to the group of Best Of's can be discussed.

Grafitti:
lots of goodies,
poor pressing

American Grafitti
Various Artists
GRT; $11.98

The success of an album of this type was almost predictable. It's really the end product of combining the cumulative effect of all the "million dollar weekends" of radio-land with a soundtrack from a hip, popular movie.

Yeah, but what about "The Best of Captain Beefheart?"

Bad choices
mar "Best Of Procul
Harum"

The Best Of Procul Harum
A&M; $6.49

The raison d'être of this LP was the departure of Procul Harum from the protective shelter of A&M Records to the Chrysalis label.

The album wins points for including a vast amount of information about the group and each of the songs. Unfortunately the LP still falls flat on its face. The problem is that A & M tired too hard to include new material, so as not to be accused of ripping off the public, I would assume.

One finds that a couple of "B" sides of singles have been put on the album. The material isn't of very good quality to begin with and most are in mono. As a result, they just interfere with the songs that do deserve to be on the album. Otherwise the tracks that appear are well chosen from among Procul Harum's seven previous LP's.

Joplin doesn't need editing

Janis Joplin's Greatest Hits
Janis Joplin
Columbia; $7.29

Before she died three years ago Janis Joplin's total recorded output was two LP's, Cheap Thrills with Big Brother and the Holding Company and Kozmic Blues. Her hard-driving living style usually spilled into her live performances and she was quickly building up an image of a "legend". Death from an overdose of heroin cinched the label. Her unfinished sessions were later released under the title Pearl.

While Greatest Hits is a reasonable representation of Joplin's high points from her three LP's (one cut "Ball And Chain" came from an in-concert album that was released last year), it does a disservice to Joplin the artist. Her total output was just too small to begin with to edit out parts. Kozmic Blues is only represented by one track, "Try Just A Little Bit Harder" and some of her most popular songs, "Mercedes Benz" for one were omitted.

There is no information about Joplin anywhere inside or on the cover and the editor and remix engineers are not listed. The sound is good.

Mayall double LP misses early work

The Best Of John Mayall
John Mayall
Polydor: $10.98

John Mayall has been playing the blues for some time now. Almost everyone knows that he was responsible for helping to shape the career of the great musicians he worked with in a succession of bands. That includes such well known artists as Eric Clapton, Dick Heckstall-Smith, John Hiseman, Keef Hartley, John Mark, Johnny Almond, Jack Bruce, Ansley Dunbar, and Mick Taylor.

His total discography spans well over a decade, and several record labels. This double record, Best Of, covers his most recent works for Polydor.

Almost every cut was recorded live and the quality is superb. The producers have run all the cuts together by blending the applause from each song, to form what is essentially an uninterrupted, unbanded record. Music is included from Turning Point, USA Union, and up through the Jazz/Blues Fusion period, to several cuts from his most recent album, Ten Years Are Gone.

It's a well-collated album. About the only complaint I have is that I would have liked to see less emphasis on the later material and more cuts from the earlier LP's.

THE
GIPSY QUADRILLES

STEPHEN CLOVER.

ROBERT COCKS & CO. NEW BURLINGTON, IRELAND

MUSIC PRODUCTIONS LTD. LONDON, ENGLAND

Gypsy Quadrille fans will have to wait with bated breath for the new release of their hero's greatest hits

The Hollies:
nothing but nostalgia

The Hollies' Greatest Hits
The Hollies
Epic/Columbia; $7.29

There's certainly no arguing with the title of this album. Every one of the twelve songs, "made it" on the charts and the liner notes help your memory out by recalling every gory detail.

There are no qualms with the quality of the disc either. You'll find that the same shrillness that came over your transistor radio is still in effect. It's hard too believes that any band would ever clip the lower frequencies to the extent represented on this record. Fortunately, the later songs exhibit less and less of this flirtation with the bass-less, super-treble sound. The wide dynamic range explored on "Long Cool Woman In A Black Dress" is enough to convince me that this group has matured.

The Hollies' Greatest Hits is a great nostalgia trip but don't expect anything more than that.

Best Of Spirit
a good album
in many ways

The Best Of Spirit
Spirit
Columbia; $7.29

Spirit was one of the many American "progressive" rock bands to emerge in the late 1960's. Their brand of heavy well-produced rock was lost in the glut of that period's music. It's only been very recently that a mass audience has come around to believing that the group was indeed ahead of its time. Unfortunately the original group has since split up.

Musically speaking, The Best of Spirit is a good album. All the songs chosen represent Spirit in the best possible light. It was especially pleasing to find that five of the eleven songs were from their best album, The Twelve Dreams of Doctor Sadonius. That album never achieved the success it should have despite the number of popular songs ("Nature's Way" and "Animal Zoo") it contained. Actually, I would recommend it above this Best Of LP.

Springfield is hard to resist

Buffalo Springfield
Atco/WEA;
$7.29

The author of the liner notes of this fine two record set wastes a lot of breath trying to play down the importance of Buffalo

Springfield as the jumping off point for groups like Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, Poco and Loggins and Messina. It really doesn't matter what the reason is behind coming to this LP to appreciate the music. But it's awfully hard to miss the fact that much of the music from the groups mentioned above was a derivative of the Buffalo Springfield sound.

Like Janis Joplin, the total output of the group was only three albums, Buffalo Springfield, Buffalo Springfield Again and Last Time Around. The two LP's faithfully repackaged the very best of these. But despite the disclaimers in the liner notes, it's clearly the Neil Young and Steve Stills compositions which steal the spotlight.

The quality of the recording is very dependent on that of the original. The earlier songs are the roughest but things improve towards the middle of the LP.

There was an earlier Buffalo Springfield Best Of called Retrospect. All the songs that appeared on it are included here. In addition there are more tracks from Last Time Around plus the inclusion of the original nine minute version of "Bluebird".

Anyway, it's hard to knock any album that features songs like "For What It's Worth", "Kind Woman" and "I Am A Child" in the same package, and sells for the price of a single LP.

A good introduction to the Dead

Skeletons From The Closet
The Grateful Dead
Warner Brothers/WEA; $6.29

Grateful Dead fans are among the most insolent defenders of a group's music as any I've met. The rift between them and myself is usually widened by my take it or leave it attitude to the Dead's music. They are the best proponents of their style of laid back country-bop drug rock, but all the arguments for labelling the Dead as the world's greatest musicians seem little more than unsupportable preferences of the same kind that win Anne Murray her loyal following.

Skeletons From the Closet is the finest of the Grateful Dead collections to come out. Its release follows that group's formation of their own record label. The best cuts though are still essentially those from their two best LP's Workingman's Dead and American Beauty—they make up five of the eleven songs. The pre-Workingman cuts, I would class as something less than "the best" for any other group. But if you're only remotely interested in the Dead this might be the record to get. A good second choice is American Beauty.

allan mandell
The Veracity 37

NEW MUSIC CONCERTS

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

SAT. MARCH 30 AT 8:30 P.M.

devoted to the fascinating and enchanting music of

Guest Composer: GEORGE CRUMB

Pulitzer Prize Winner

featured performers:

ORFORD STRING QUARTET, MARY MORRISON - soprano,
SHAMBHU DAS - sitar, WILLIAM KUINKA - mandolin

Edward Johnson Building,

University of Toronto

Adults $2.50,

967-5257

Students $1.50

Chargex Accepted • Student Discount

CONTACT LENSES
$79

SOFT LENSES
AVAILABLE

GLASSES
large selection
of imported
frames

HAL BROWN OPTICAL LTD.

354 Yonge St.

364-2607

THE DEBUT OF THE EXCITING NEW CANTATA SOLOISTS

• Thursday, April 11, 1974 • 8:30 p.m.

Great Hall, Hart House • University of Toronto in a CONCERT of Vocal and Instrumental
"MASTERPIECES of the BAROQUE ERA"

Douglas Stewart, Flute

Stewart Grant, Oboe

Adele Armin, Violin

Kristine Bogoy, Violoncello

Edward Philip O'Keefe, Continuo

Rosemarie Landry, Soprano

Janet Stubbs, Mezzo Soprano

John Martens, Tenor

Robert Mang, Baritone

TICKETS: Adults $3.00

Students $1.50

AVAILABLE AT: Cantata Soloists, 120 Avenue Rd., Toronto
Internat. Music Sales, 32 Avenue Rd. Toronto

FOR TICKET INFORMATION AND RESERVATIONS CALL
967-3550

When you get your engineering degree where will it get you?

Will it take you from door to door looking for an opening? Searching for a chance to practice all that you've learned?

We have openings. And we need your talents.

With your degree you can join the Canadian Forces as a Lieutenant. From then on your experience and qualifications can take you just about anywhere. You'll work with some of the most sophisticated equipment in the world. We offer you security, advancement, travel, a satisfying and fulfilling life where you can not only practice your skills, but do something worthwhile with them.

It all depends upon what you want to do with your degree.

We have an answer. Think about it then talk to a Canadian Forces Recruiting Officer, or write for more information to Box 8989, Ottawa, Canada.

GET INVOLVED WITH THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Here it is: the review I've been dreading making for a while. In the course of a year of listening and evaluating new records,
there have been some I've put off, and I'm publicly here to recant my sins of omission, 'cause there are some I've truly liked, and neglected. And, as chairman Mao says, "guard against subjectivism, arbitrariness and the vulgarization of criticism" (absolutely marvellous, that Little Red Book. You can dip into it anywhere and find a quote for All Occasions. Or did Junius say that? Hmm.)

Opera-goers the last few seasons at O'Keefe have been alternately entertained or bored
by Lehar's "The Merry Widow"; really the only survivor of a long-dead age of operetta. It is still very much alive in the concertgoer's eye, though: it was the only solidly sold-out attraction in last year's season. Well, a stellar assemblage has gathered to issue the widow to end all widows, led (surprisingly enough) by that stone-faced giant of the European scene, Herbert von Karajan. Elizabeth Harwood, Teresa Stratas (of our own Faculty of Music several years back),
Werner Hollweg, Rene Kollo and Zoltan Kelemen and the Berlin
Philharmonic finally show you just why the music has endured.

It's not likely we'd ever get to see such a cast, orchestra and conductor give a live performance of such a second-rate work, but here they raise it to the standards of grand opera. Thnkfully, the performers bring a genial sense of comedy to the proceedings and stave off the possibility of the music turning into a reverent occasion. It is the soul of Viennese Operetta, after all

Production is up to regular DG standards, down to the fancy booklet and linen-covered box.
Awright, awright, bend my leg far enough and I'll have to admit that it's a first-rate performance, but if I hear that goddamn "Merry Widow Waltz" once more, it goes in the recycle bin along with my souvenir review copies of Deodato and Waldo de los Rios.

More and more "Greatest Hits" slosh onto the market, sure signs of insecurity in the higher reaches of record-exec-land. Times are getting slim, so just repackaging the tried-and-true, and the flow of bucks is at least partly assured.
One can understand their fears,
but after all, a "Greatest Hits" doesn't have to be bad; hits are hits, and if they worked before,
there must have been a reason.
Zubin Mehta is another former member of the Conductor's Wunderkind Society, along with Lenny and Seiji, and although now safely ensconced with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, he had his salad days in Montreal, of all places. London has assembled his greatest hits, and what a difference from Georg Solti's collection, reviewed just a while back! That record featured some heavyweight numbers, such as Strauss' "Don Juan" and two Beethoven overtures, but ol'
Zube leans a little more toward the light side.

For once, this is a fair assembling of hits: Jupiter (from Holst's Planets), Ravel's "Bolero", the prelude to Act I of Carmen, the 1812 overture (with real cannons), Suppe's Poet and Peasant overture and (inevitably) the opening of Zarathustra, by Strauss. All the music is competently played, and downright exciting at times as in the Ravel.
It's encouraging to see the record companies paying attention to classical beginners—so have no fear of this one, despite my general feelings about "Greatest Hits" collections. It's really quite fine for the newcomer to the classical field (London CS6823, $6.98).

Less to my liking is London's fourth volume of The Greatest Hits of All Time, a group of eleven undeniable biggies, but so very overplayed. Do we really need
Wagner's Act III Lohengrin
Prelude again? Or the Pizzicato
Polka by Strauss? or the Ritual

Fire Dance? Not at $6.98 we don't. The performances are all expert, with some of the great names in the music world present: Karajan, Maazel, Mehta and others. But it simply doesn't make sense to pay full price for these selections, when for the same money you could have the complete pieces these are taken from. After all, all the selections on this disc are taken from the London catalogue, so go hunt up what they have to offer. If it's greatest hits you're still after, all the companies have budget lines, and for half the money you can have hits to your heart's content.
(London OS26340)

Schumann's piano music has never been in the "Hits" category, but popularity (in the mass market sense) is rarely an indication of worth. His piano suites and pieces have been pianists' favourites for years, with abundant melody and technical challenge. Yet his "Kinderszenen" (Scenes From Childhood) hold a very special place in the hearts of many musicians, reminding almost everyone in some ways of days gone past. In 15 short vignette-like pieces, each with a title and an obvious "Program",
Schumann lays out the elements of our earliest years, couched in seemingly simplicity. Schoenberg (of all people) once said that "Traumerel" ever ("Dreaming") was the most complex piece of music ever written. In a new DG release (#2530348), "Wilhelm
Kempff plays the Kinderszenen and the op. 22 Sonata in convincing fashion, although the recording is a few years old now. This doesn't detract from the music (or have anything to do with it, in fact) but should just be a warning to those looking for DG's currently gorgeous recorded sound.

If you could care less about the technical fine points, and want some splendid pianistics, don't hesitate on this one. Also included is a full-colour DG catalogue.
Very Mouthwatering.

dave basskin

Classical musicians gather together to plan their nefarious "best-of" records.

A stone-faced giant, a dull widow and some fast-busk disc-pressers

"OK! Which one of you knows anything about opera records?"

And I thought South Pacific was the greatest opera ever...

It's the end of a long school year, a cause for celebrating. Few things in music are as celebratory in nature as opera; the glamour of the stage, the gathering of dance, song, story all make for the greatest experience in the musical world. Yet we're only allowed the treat of the real thing in the fall, when the Canadian Opera Company makes its annual Toronto presentation. Frankly, there's little time for it in the rigors of the beginning of the school year...so your trusty reviewer here presents a few albums that take you into the opera world anytime you care to put the needle on (on the record, that is).

Collections rarely come off on disc, due to their mix-and-match of arias, overtures, trios, choruses, and so on. However, London's new Mozart Opera Festival (2 discs, OSA 1297) manages to avoid the usual pitfalls. This set wasn't put together from previous recordings, but recorded in one group as an honest-to-goodness festival, something almost unheard-of in record circles. An all-star cast (Lucia Popp, Brigitte Fassbaender, Werner Krenn, Tom Krause and Manfred Jungwirth) led by the late Istvan Kertesz performs music from "The Marriage of Figaro", "Idomeneo", "The Abduction from the Seraglio", "The Magic Flute", "Cosi fan Tutte", "Il Re Pastore", and "Don Giovanni". These aren't the same performances you'd get in a complete set of any given Mozart opera, but Kertesz and the Vienna Haydn Orchestra give solid, amiable readings, backing up some really fine singing.

Top marks have to go to Tom Krause, star of the new DG recording of "Carmen". His "Non più Andrai" (Figaro's mocking aria from "The Marriage of Figaro") is as good as I've ever heard. The sound is bright and clear, making this an ideal starter for the opera fan with no Mozart in his or her collection.

The one and only Sophie Keles was recently in town, commanding $25 a seat for a comeback tour, and even if we didn't hear her at her legendary peak, it was still a thrill to hear her. The name isn't familiar? Try Maria Callas, then. To mark the occasion (read: get on the bandwagon, $$-wise) Angel has re-released, several of her fine opera recordings, starting with Verdi's "La Forza del Destino", a blood-and-thunder piece from the composer's best years.

All of Callas' opera recordings sold in the tens of thousands in their time, and are pretty much beyond criticism. True, some just don't like her style, but I just don't see how. Callas' greatest strength lay in her acting ability. I don't think there's a soprano on the scene today (with the possible exception of Marilyn Horne) who can put such vibrant realism into the often pithy lyrics of many operas. Backed up by Richard Tucker (as Don Alvaro) and the Orchestra and chorus of La Scala in Milan, this recording is a delight to have back in the catalogue again. And the best news is that Angel has released it on their budget Seraphim label, at $2.98 a disc, list price. Judicious shopping can put it in your hands for under 8 bucks, amazing in these inflation-ravaged times, for three records and full libretto. Thankfully, Angel has left it in its original mono, and has resisted the temptation to diddle about with "simulated stereo".

Mozart's "The Magic Flute" is, unfortunately, heard rarely in this country. Because of its extensive sections of spoken dialogue (in German) it remains a favourite of European houses. Angel has picked up a new recording of this work from EMI-Electrola, its German subsidiary, and it makes a welcome addition to the catalogue. It's strictly an old-hands' meet here, with some of the biggest names in German Opera gathered before the microphones: Walter Beery, Theo Adam, Edda Moser, Peter Schreier and others turn in a splendid rendition, held together ably by conductor Wolfgang Sawallisch and the Bavarian State Opera orchestra and chorus.

Part of the fascination of this recording is the dialogue, spoken with great relish by this all-German cast. I don't understand much of the language, but so much of what they're saying comes across in the smooth and expert reading that you might as well be on the stage with them. The recording is faultless, down to the off-stage panpipes that pop up mysteriously throughout the music, the "magic flutes" themselves. Incidentally, after this opera was premiered, "magic" operas became the rage across the continent. Magic horns, tympani(!), trumpets, violins and probably even zithers made their ways across the stage and into the footnotes of musical histories. The only strong competition this set has is in the shape of Solti's version on London records, but the dialogue really carries this one along. As the wily Papageno, Walter Berry gives his all in a role that has been a personal favourite for years. The liner notes say he's outgrown the part, but I think not.

There you are—a trio of new operas (although the Verdi isn't actually new). If September is too far away for all you opera fans, these are a sure-fire cure for the summertime blues.

dave basskin

YOUR ESSAYS CAN WIN YOU $$$

ESSAY CONTEST: $100 CASH PRIZE for the best essay in EACH of the following categories: Humanities; Social Sciences; Science. $50 cash to runner up in each category plus many $10 honourable mention prizes. No restrictions on subject matter, length, number of essays submitted in any category. Essays will be judged on originality, quality of writing and research and must be typed with footnotes & bibliography. TO ENTER: send essays, together with a 5-line content summary to Essay Services, 57 Spadina Ave., Suite 105, Toronto, Ont. We will acknowledge receipt of your essay(s) and refund postal expenses over $1.00. Contest expires June 30, 1974. All entries become the property of Essay Services.

Arts and Science Full-Time Students are reminded that the last dates of application to take a summer course are:

Summer Evening Session—April 1
Summer Day Session—May 15

Those intending to continue as full-time students should apply as Special students at the Faculty Office, Sidney Smith Hall.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

SF Writing Workshop

JULY 3-13, 1974

AN INTENSIVE RESIDENTIAL PROGRAMME FOR SCIENCE-FICTION, FANTASY, SYMBOLIC AND SURREALISTIC WRITING.

RESOURCE TEAM

- JUDITH MERRILL
- SAMUEL R., DELANEY
- PETER FITTING

FOR COMPLETE INFORMATION:

SCHOOL OF CONTINUING STUDIES
119 ST. GEORGE STREET
TORONTO, M5S 1A9
928-2400

GET YOUR BACHELOR OF EDUCATION DEGREE

IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

If you like the thought of clean, fresh air, excellent skiing five minutes from campus, clear, unpolluted lakes and rivers and fifteen miles of hiking trails right on campus then Nipissing University College is the place for you.

If you have completed your Bachelor's degree, we can offer you a one-year course which will give you the B.Ed. degree and certification to teach elementary school where the jobs now are.

And if you have a minimum average of seventy-two percent in the final year of your degree required for admission, we have a guaranteed tuition scholarship of $1000 for you.

Now that's what we call a good deal!

For more information and application forms write:

The Registrar
Nipissing University College
Box 500, G. C. on all R.R.
North Bay, Ontario
P1B 8L7

STUDENT TRAVEL 1974 AOSC

44 ST. GEORGE ST. TORONTO M5S 2E4 962-8404

"The Student Travel Co-Op"

EUROPE: GETTING THERE!!

BY AIR: —
Charters — ABC's Advanced booking charters to Europe. These are round trip flights which must be booked a minimum of 60 days in advance of the departure. Prices to London range from $239.00 for departures between the beginning of May and the 21st of June to $278.00 for departures between June 22nd and August 10th. These flights are open to anyone (not just students) and are primarily of 2 to 6 weeks duration. AOSC lists hundreds of these departures to London, Amsterdam, Paris and Frankfurt. * A free 200 page "Student Guide to Europe" is given out for each booking.

Student Groups Flights: — AOSC has programmed a number of student group flights to Brussels and/or London from Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto and Halifax.

You DO NOT have to book these flights in advance, however, seats are allocated on a first come, first served basis — there is no age limit on these flights.

Flights from Toronto to London to Brussels

April 29-June 13	$284.00	May 21-Aug. 15	$284.00
April 30-July 02	$284.00	May 23-Aug. 29	$284.00
May 02-Aug. 01	$284.00	May 27-July 30	$284.00
May 06-Aug. 30	$284.00	May 28-Aug. 16	$284.00
May 07-Aug. 13	$284.00	May 30-Sept. 03	$284.00
May 09-July 11	$284.00	June 06-Aug. 15	$365.00
May 13-Aug. 05	$284.00	June 10-Aug. 26	$365.00
May 14-Sept. 02	$284.00	July 02-Aug. 27	$365.00
May 16-Aug. 12	$284.00	July 15-Sept. 05	$365.00
May 20-July 25	$284.00	July 29-Sept. 06	$365.00

Group fares quoted are per adult, children 2-12 pay 50%; infants under 2 pay 10%. If you fly on one of these student group flights from Toronto, you may disembark in either London or Brussels. (At no extra cost).

Reservation forms and schedules from other Canadian cities are available from AOSC.

Youth fares: — Youth fares are available to anyone between the ages of 12 and 23 (inclusive). Youth fares are on regularly scheduled airlines and are available from any Canadian city to almost every city in Europe. You can fly into one European city and back from another. Fares begin at $278.00 Toronto - London return. The youth fare is an 'open-date' ticket good for one year.

Contact AOSC for details and application forms. (FREE STUDENT GUIDE TO EUROPE WITH EVERY YOUTH FARE PURCHASED.)

BOOK EARLY TO GET THE DATE YOU WANT!!

BY SHIP: —

CUNARD, ITALIAN LINE, FRENCH LINE: — Students between 12-25 (inclusive) may purchase one way youth fares on transatlantic crossings on a standby basis from New York to Europe. Prices are advertised as low as $225.00 but at departure time the price will be about $300.00 (taking into account fuel surcharges). Check with AOSC for sailing dates and tariffs.

ONE WAY FLIGHTS: —

One way charter flights to and from Canada are not permitted by the Canadian government, (we'll remember you at election time, Jean Marchand). However, AOSC does have a limited number of one way charter flights from New York to Brussels and from Brussels to New York in July, August and September. The price will be $150.00 per person.

GETTING AROUND OVER THERE!

AOSC Bargains

International Student Identity Card: — A must for every student traveller. The ISIC card is the only internationally accepted proof of student status. All sorts of travel, accommodation and admission discounts are available throughout Europe to the holders of this card. Send your name, address, birthdate, citizenship, and an automata-sized photograph together with a photocopy of dated proof that you are a student (ATL card or fees receipt) and $2.00 to AOSC. The ISIC card offers you access to Student charter flights (SATA) within Europe.

Africa and Asia. More than 5,000 flights are available to all students up to the age of 30 in possession of a valid International Student Identity Card.

Sample fares: —

From	To	AOSC Fare	Regular Fare
London	Tel Aviv	$85.00	$296.00
London	Athens	$66.90	$220.00
London	Nairobi	$168.90	$524.61
London	Bangkok	$201.60	$719.92
Copenhagen	Rome	$46.10	$150.71
Amsterdam	Istanbul	$75.10	$117.60

An almost unlimited number of combinations are possible. Schedules, reservations and tickets are available from AOSC—hurry, they fill up quickly.

RAIL TRAVEL

Studentrailpass: — Unlimited second class travel on railways in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. 2 month pass $165.00 + ISIC card.

Eurailpass: — Unlimited first class travel in Britain on British Rail.

	1st class	2nd class	Youth pass (2nd class) Under 22
8 days	$60.00	$40.00	$32.00
15 days	$75.00	$55.00	$45.00
21 days	$90.00	$70.00
1 month	$115.00	$95.00	$85.00

Car Rentals: — AOSC has arranged the best rates for car rentals in Europe. i.e. A new Renault R 4, 4 passenger sedan with unlimited mileage, touring documents, non-deductible insurance and manufacturers warranty for 2 months is only $483.00.

Check with AOSC for shorter or longer term rates on all Renault models.

Tours: — Camping trips throughout Europe.

Join an international group of mixed young people 17-30 years of age for a fun loving tour of Europe.

- 1) All Summer Grand Tour, 9 weeks including Turkey, Greece and Spain $708.00
- 2) Scandinavia & Russia 5 weeks $398.00
- 3) Central Europe, Italy and Spain 6 weeks $459.00
- 4) Spain, Portugal and Morocco 5 weeks $369.00
- 5) European Sampler 3 weeks $269.00
- 6) Eastern Europe, Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia 3 weeks $269.00

* Basic prices quoted are from London.

Tours of Israel — AOSC is the official representative of the Israel Student Tourist Association.

Sample Tours: — 10 day Israel Tour $147.00 Three days in the North, Three days in Jerusalem, Four days Dead Sea, Red Sea and Sharm-el-Sheikh.

Sinai Safari: — by command car 5 days $120.00

Kibbutz stays and Archeological Digs.

ALL ARE AVAILABLE FROM AOSC

Other Tours: — AOSC can offer you a tour of almost any place in Europe at very reasonable rates. Write to: Tour Information, AOSC, 44 St. George St., Toronto, Ontario M5S 2E4, and enclose $0.35 to cover postage and handling and we will ship you what we have.

Youth Hostels: — Still the best accommodation bargains in Europe. Youth Hostel membership permitting access to the International Youth Hostel Network is available from AOSC.

Membership fees: — under the age of 18

- $5.00

18 years and over :10.00

Contact AOSC for applications.

FAR EAST: — Getting there and thereabouts!!

Toronto - Kong Kong - Toronto

May 12-Aug. 14	$750.00	July 1 8-Aug. 14	$550.00
May 12-June 11	$550.00	July 8-Sept. 10	$550.00
May 12-July 9	$550.00	July 8-Oct. 8	$650.00
June 10-Aug. 14	$550.00	Aug. 12-Sept. 10	$550.00
June 10-July 9	$550.00	Aug. 12-Oct. 8	$650.00
June 10-Sept. 10	$650.00

EUROPE to the FAR EAST: - LONDON to BANGKOK from $201.60!!!

AOSC has special student fares on scheduled airlines in the FAR EAST.

Sample routes and fares: —

Bangkok - Tokyo	$187.30	Bangkok-Manila	$115.00
Bangkok - Singapore	$71.40	Jakarta-Hong Kong	$145.80
Bangkok - Jakarta	$136.60	Singapore-Hong Kong	$10.60
Bangkok - Hong Kong	$76.90	Hong Kong-Bangkok
Bangkok - Kathmandu	$110.20	Kuala Lumpur	$664.20
		Bangkok-Calcutta	$81.10

AUSTRALIA: — Special AOSC fares from Vancouver!!! Vancouver Sydney Return $630.00.

Flight dates: —	May 1 - August 28	July 3 - August 28
	May 1 - June 30	December 20 - January 5
	May 15 - June 30

Book early as space is limited!! AOSC can also arrange connecting fares from anywhere in Canada to Vancouver.

TRAVEL WITHIN CANADA AND U.S.A.: — Going home at the end of term??

AOSC has special airfares for students and university staff travelling to other parts of Canada.

Toronto to Vancouver: -	AOSC fare	Regular fare
	$105.00 o.w.	$131.00 o.w.
	$210.00 return	$262.0 return

Return fares are open date. i.e. you can return to Toronto anytime!! These rates are based on a minimum of 15 people travelling together. AOSC therefore reserves the right to cancel any departure if the minimum requirement is not met. In such an event all monies will be refunded in full without delay.

AOSC can provide tickets to anywhere, at worst we offer the same price as the airlines - at best, we can do better.

DOMESTIC HOLIDAYS:

Canoe trips - $75.00 8 DAYS FROM TORONTO

Join a small international group of young people 17-30 years of age for a paddling holiday in Algonquin Park. Price includes the use of all equipment (participants should supply sleeping bag and items of a personal nature). All trips are accompanied by an experienced AOSC "Canoe tripper" (guide). This is one of our most popular trips - so book early - Departures - Every Sunday.

Canada/U. S. A. Overland: - Another fun trip - mini-bus camping trips through Canada and the U. S. A.

- 1) Toronto to West Coast of Canada and U. S. A. 24 days $369.00 return
- 2) Toronto to Eastern Canada and the Maritimes. 18 days $289.00 return
- 3) Toronto to Eastern U. S. A. 13 days $239.00 return

Write to AOSC for details and application forms.

IF YOU'RE GOING SOMEPLACE, START WITH THIS PLACE!!!

AOSC

44 ST. GEORGE ST. TORONTO M5S 2E4

962-8404

Live Morrison shines

"It's Too Late To Stop Now..."
Van Morrison
Warner Brothers; $12.58

T.B. Sheets
Van Morrison
Bang/GRT; $7.29

It wasn't until I first heard Van Morrison's Moondance that I became a converted Morrison follower. The same LP was also instrumental in breaking Morrison out of the rock mold of Them and into a looser more jazz oriented approach to music. The use of horns was absolutely brilliant and rarely equalled by Morrison since.

It's Too Late To Stop Now is a summing up LP, that remains true to Van Morrison's live performances. The two record set, recorded in London and Los Angeles last summer, contains versions of most of his popular songs from almost every album he's recorded. The only noticeable omissions are, "Moondance" and "Brown Eyed Girl". Morrison has always been accused of being a lacklustre performer, mostly for his lack of acknowledgement of the audience. The music, and the reaction of the audiences to it don't provide any support to that charge.

Without a doubt this is one of the best live recordings quality-wise, ever put out. Much of the reason for this is that Morrison is backed up by his own ten piece band made up of key personnel who played on the original versions of most of songs presented. Of special note, there is a four piece string section, and inspired performances by Jack Schroer on saxophone and John Plantania on guitar.

Morrison has almost become a stylized classic soul - R & B singer — a white Ray Charles. Besides the incredible renditions of his own songs Morrison succeeds entirely with some classics, like Willie Dixon's "I Just Wanna Make Love To You", Sam Cooke's "Bring It On Home" plus tunes by Sonny Boy Williamson and Ray Charles. Side four is a particular treat. It includes his old hits with Them "Here Comes The Night" and "Gloria" plus "Cypress Avenue", a much looser song that ends the album, and makes up for much of the structure that preceded it.

T.B. Sheets isn't really a new LP. It's a repackaging of Morrison's first album, called Blowing Your Mind. The only new material is two songs which were recorded immediately after they were written, "Beside You" and "Madame George". Except for those two cuts the same album again found its way into record stores under the title, The Best Van Morrison (could this be another Eric Clapton caper?).

This was Morrison at his most tense moments. I've always found T.B. Sheets to be grating and almost unbearable. The liner notes say the song was written for a girl that Morrison lived with and watched die of tuberculosis. The song always gave me the impression he was in a manic state, on the verge of a breakdown. He apparently broke into tears after recording the song and had to cancel the rest of the sessions.

The remainder of the album is quite worthwhile. There's really only a spark of the changes to come, but that doesn't diminish the importance of songs like "Brown Eyed Girl", "Ro Ro Rosey" and "Who Drove The Red Sports Car?"

The words have been very thoughtfully included too.

alan mandell

Strawbs lack direction

Hero & Heroine
Strawbs
A & M

It's been a long wait for this latest LP from the Strawbs and somehow it just doesn't seem to live up to expectations. The difficulty lies in the fact that the band has been undergoing constant personnel changes over the period of their last four releases. But on Hero & Heroine there are three new members, John Hawken on piano, electric piano, synthesizer, organ, and mellotron, Chas. Cronk playing bass and percussionist Rod Coombes. They joined founder David Cousins and Dave Lambert vocals and acoustic and electric guitars, and while the overall sound of the band's music hasn't changed, it certainly has been toned down.

Hero & Heroine seems to be a logical evolution of Cousins' work on Grave New World as well as on his solo LP, and unfortunately there is no one to balance this force out. Although the Strawbs were given to the use of very elaborate and dramatic musical themes, on their last two recordings this tendency was counteracted by an increased use of rock progressions, which seem to have been pushed back by the keyboard instruments. Finally the trouble lies in the fact that Cousins, while doing most of the vocals, has a voice that can be very irritating and on Hero & Heroine he has ample opportunity to exasperate the listener.

As already mentioned, the new LP is a direct continuation of Grave New World and the theme of despair, which arises from the inability of one individual to affect changes upon his world. The quest for love and a meaning in life is followed through until the Hero discovers that the only way out is through death. It's a concept album based upon despair and isolation as the main destructive forces which, if they are able to destroy one being, can destroy the world.

The LP opens with "Autumn" which is divided into three sections: "Heroine's Theme," is a good instrumental introduction relying heavily upon the mellotron as it builds up the mood. I assume that the reference to Autumn implies that life is withering away and dying. This is followed by "Deep Summer's Sleep," a slow but excellent acoustic tune which is sung quite beautifully by Cousins, as the mellotron weaves in and out of the background. A piano break leads us into "The Winter Long" which sounds rather strained as Lambert does the singing but then evolves into a hymn-like chant as the rest of the group joins in for the vocals.

The last four compositions are excellent, on "Midnight Sun" Cousins and Lambert sing with a basically acoustic accompaniment that leads into "Out in the Cold" with its slow harp opening which combines with the piano and electric guitar to convey a feeling of isolation. Death enters in "Round and Round" and as the Hero slashes his wrists the band builds up its momentum as the ominous tone of the organ reveals the final act in "Lay a Little Light on Me". And as the blood seeps out the band re-enforces Cousins' vocal fading out into a chant.

Basically there is nothing wrong with the idea behind Hero & Heroine, but the Strawbs just don't seem to be able to carry it out properly. One gets the feeling that the band is grasping for directions but Cousins gets in the way too often and slows down the pace. Maybe the group as a whole just wasn't coherent enough to establish itself as a unit and hopefully they'll last long enough to put out a solid effort. As final observations I would like to point out that the lyrics on this particular Strawbs LP are atrocious, with one or two exceptions, and it would be best if they weren't included in the future. Also, A & M is congratulated for producing records that had the least, almost insignificant, amount of surface noise or flaws at a time when we're paying more and getting less in return.

serge schardt

Introducing

DOC HOLLIDAY

Glendon's new Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Let me get to know you.

Love and Marriage go together with a HORSE AND CARRIAGE Getting Married?

Our coachman will get you to the altar in time in one of our HORSE-DRAWN CARRIAGES.
Booking now for Spring & Summer
Call any evening until Midnight.

Horse and Carriage

SERVICES • AND RENTALS
484-8124 or 787-3301

* Other services available including HAYRIDES.

Hart House Music Thursday Night Iachryma Jacobi

When I consider everything that dies,
And in imagination only stays,
I clutch the fanciful, although it lies,
In lieu of trusting transient trysting-days.
For reason's light illumines reality;
And what a dreadful dreary thing is there,
Or else 'tis but a bleak banality -
To know which is to add another care.
The fact is that the lady lyes in May Too true! I'll bathe in Lethe's lethal art,
Where flowers smile forever, Springs delay,
And fancy is the province of the heart.
While truth, like gaudy day, glares its presence,
I shall be lamenting evanescence.

Eleanor James, soprano,
Thursday, April 4, at eight.

SAC Cinema presents:

Double Horror Bill Friday March 29th Med. Sci. Auditorium

CURSE OF THE WEREWOLF

7:00 & 10:00

KING KONG VS. GODZILLA

8:30

Both for only 95¢

Carnal Knowledge

Friday
April 5th
8:00 & 9:45
only 95¢

Joseph E. Levine presents a Mike Nichols Film starring Jack Nicholson • Candice Bergen
Arthur Garfunkel, Ann Margret and Jules Feiffer.
—Liz Smith, Cosmopolitan Magazine

Mike Nichols, Jack Nicholson, Candice Bergen,
Arthur Garfunkel, Ann Margret and Jules Feiffer.

Carnal Knowledge.

☐-

An Arco Embassy Picture

Mike Nichols - An Arco Embassy Release
Joseph E. Levine - Executive Producer
Joseph E. Levine - Producer and Directed by

SPECIAL MIDNIGHT SHOWING

Friday April 5th
Saturday April 6th
Admission $1.50

Medical Sciences Auditorium
Free Munchies!!!!
Last flick of the Season.

Whatsup

books

Philip Sykes' Sellout: The Giveaway of Canada's Energy Resources; Hurtig; $2.95 is a much better book than you'd expect from the editor of Toronto's Sunday Sun. It's a competent and fairly thorough discussion of the misdevelopment of Canadian energy resources, covering a broad range of questions. It's a valuable indicator of the extent of the problem, but unfortunately it has no solution to offer except pessimism and the bland hope that maybe business and government will change their evil ways before it's too late and we're all caught up in ecological disaster and economic ruin. It's too bad Sykes is unwilling to contemplate the thought that maybe system of business and government (it's called capitalism) is at fault.

Hakkert Publishers, who have been doing their bit to change the world by publishing some useful books on lighting the powers that be (Marlborough Marathon: One Street Against a Developer; Fighting Back: Urban Renewal in Trillium Court) has come out with The Movable Airport, by Sandra Budden and Joseph Ernst, $3.95. It's certainly a good record of the manoeuvring and bureaucratic runaround that went into the planning of the Pickering airport, and of the resistance that it produced. For those who can still be shocked by the actions of governments, it has shock value. For others, it is, as Hakkert calls it, a case study in community action. On the negative side, there is a political naïveté running through the book that puts too much stress on "bad politicians" and "bad planners" and that offers no perspective for shifting the balance of power so that events of the sort described in the book don't keep on being repeated. It's certainly useful to produce "case studies of community action" but it would be good if the people involved in the ever-increasing number of "cases" found ways of linking up to broaden their power and impact, and to produce a more positive approach to changing the balance of power in Canada. At present, the approach is very largely negative and defensive: a community doesn't organize itself until it is attacked, by which time it may be too late, especially if it finds that the bureaucracy or corporation mounting the assault has more power.

theatre

Whatsup leaves you to your own resources with a wide choice of theatre-geography reminders. Toronto continues to be a prolific theatre centre and if quality is still not the key-note of many productions, at least there is no lack of quantity and it is hoped, practise. Currently in practise and performance is a highly competent production of Harold Pinter's fascinating play Old Times at the Firehall Theatre. The Toronto Tru Theatre is handling George Bernard Shaw's delightful romantic farce Arms and the Man at the Colonnade and Samuel Beckett's already classic Waiting For Godot is presently in performance at the Central Library Theatre. The Toronto Centre for the Arts at 390 Dupont Street is showing a production of E.A. Whitehead's The Four Seasons until April 20. And of course there is much more already playing around town but no room to list everything else.

Of imminent future interest is an equally rich collection of new productions. A new women's theatre, the Red Light Theatre, premiere their first work Entrances on April 3 at the Matador Club (Dovercourt and College). Hey Justine, a new musical sequel to the popular Obie winning Justine I, opens Thursday April 11 at the Global Village Theatre. The show is a musical portrait of a moment — the split second before a young woman gives birth to her first child. The play enters her mind and explores the joys and fears, doubts and comedy, that make up her life and consciousness. On Saturday March 30, the Tarragon Theatre opens Four to Four, a play in which four generations of Quebec women talk about their twenties, their lives, frustrations and their men, and in a special double bill, James Reaney's One Man Masque a one-man epic through life and death. The Tarragon Theatre is also bringing David Watmough, Canada's only Monodramatist-playwright, from Vancouver to the Poor Alex Theatre, Wednesday April 3 to Sunday April 7. He is apparently one of the finest of natural storytellers.

Coming up soon on campus are several note-worthy evenings. A Phoenix Too Frequent will be playing at the Studio Theatre April 3 - 6. At the same time a selection of one-act plays by Beckett and George Ryga's Indian will be in performance at UC Playhouse. Sonata Pathétique plays April 16 - 20 at the Studio Theatre and also at the Studio Theatre, May 1 - 4, will be a production of Michael Ondaatje's highly recommended play Billy the Kid. Keep busy until the next stage in the dramatic life of The Varsity — September 1974.

classical

"Go out and dig up this story," said the gruff, hard-hitting review editor, his long-extinguished stogie held between clenched jaws, "the fate of this rag depends on it!"

Well, through a year of careful investigation and digging, I finally came up with the unvarnished truth, the facts as I see 'em: one watsup column just isn't enough to cover what goes on in this burg, music-wise. Why just next April 11th a new group appears on the scene, the Cantata Solists, who specialize in vocal and instrumental music of the Baroque era. All Canadian musicians of soloist calibre with hefty credentials, this 9-member group should be a winner in the tradition of the New Chamber Orchestra. The concert is in the Hart House Great Hall, tickets $3, half that for students.

Speaking of the NCO, I wasn't able to make their last concert on the weekend previous, but my secret informers tell me it was a fine show, featuring Haydn, Grieg, Hindemith and other composers. If you get a chance to see or support this top-flight ensemble this summer, don't hesitate. Toronto and the musical world as a whole need groups of this type. Don't give up in your fight for funding, NCO; you've got a lot of friends behind you.

One of these days the TSO will return from Europe; they'll round out their season at Massey Hall, and then, in all likelihood, the summer season will start again at Davis-land. Other musical attractions may even include ballet or opera, but they haven't given final word yet.

This weekend up at York there's a 3-day festival of electronic music, and, in another glorious display of uncoordination between cultural groups in the city, the New Music Concert series winds up at the Edward Johnson Building with an appearance by composer George Crumb. One of today's best, who will lead "Voices of Ancient Children", among other things.

The CBC rolls along evermore, and if you're close to an FM radio in the summer months, you can get the same mixture of good music, thought-probing drama and discussion and inane announcing. CJRT continues as well with pretty much of the same bag, including Ted Talk, the all-world jazz DJ. Lots of good music on his program, though.

Park concerts remain a dismal aspect of the summer music scene. Every year the Toronto Star gangs up with the executive of the Toronto Musician's Association to pay off favoured bandleaders in a series of uninspired evenings of music. It's damn hard for a new group to break into this little family compact of media and union control; if there's a performing organization you'd like to hear in the great outdoors, but doesn't seem to make any such appearances, write to one Vic Bridgewater at the Toronto Musicians' Association and also to the Toronto Star and try to apply a little pressure. Organizations like these are surprisingly attuned to public ill-favour (possibly a sign of compulsive paranoia) so do your bit for your favourite groups.

The record scene shows little in the way of encouragement for the beleaguered consumer. There's no guarantee that we won't get those dreaded 9-dollar price tags on albums before the year is out, so get together with friends and plan for joint record libraries before the squeeze really hits. Round Records still manages to retain good prices, but even they've been forced to raise prices.

Trends: watch for ragtime. It'll probably peak late this year. The film "The Sting" has propelled the music of Scott Joplin to undreamed-of popularity and it won't be long before Hugo Montenegro and James Last treat us to MOR versions of "Maple Leaf Rag". Another trend is a resurgence in the Baroque boom, thought dead the past year or two. Brahms and the Romantics were thought to be the coming crazes among those who actually get into such moods, but so far that hasn't surfaced on this side of the border. Opera tickets will probably be hard to get this year due to the increased numbers who subscribe, so if you want good seats (seems so far off now, doesn't it?) send in yer bread.

rock

The final results of the first annual "contest" have been tallied, and here they are:

The grand prize winner is... (drum roll)... Jack Martin of Innis College.

The runners up are: Erwin Buck, Anne Britton, John Near, Tita Griffin, Margaret Manson, David McCormick and Geoffrey Boubonhead.

All prizes must be picked up in person at the Varsity Advertising offices...91 St. George St. Many thanks to all the people who entered.

John Mills Cockell is at the Riverboat, 134 Yorkville (922-6216), until Sunday. Cockell, ex of Syrius, has augmented his battery of synthesizer equipment with a drummer and a singer. The next performer of note to turn in an appearance will be Roger McGuinn, the former leader and driving force of the Byrds. He'll be at the Riverboat, April 9 to 14.

Fiddler's Green Folk Club is a nonprofit club that operates every Tuesday and Friday with both local and out-of-town performers. It's located behind the Y on Eglinton, east of Yonge and admission is $1 (plus 50¢ membership the first time). Enoch Ken Owen McBride and Ian Robb are featured tonight.

The El Mocambo, Spadina south of College, usually has big name rock, country and blues entertainers on hand. The upstairs room features those acts and charges anywhere from $2 to $4 for admission (plus a coat check fee of 25 cents while the downstairs room is free and offers local talent. Capitol recording artist Christopher Kearney and his band are downstairs (yes, free) all next week beginning Monday. Jimmy Witherspoon is still on hand upstairs until tomorrow night. Then it's Scrubbae Caine from Monday to Wednesday, with Charlie Daniels filling out the rest of the week. The acts for several weeks ahead will be, Eric Weissberg and Delverence (April 8-13), (April 15-20), The Good Brothers (April 22-27), Willie Dixon (April 29-May 4), Howlin' Wolf (May 6-11), and Olis Rush (May 13-18). There are often changes in the lineup so call before you go.

Mackenzie's Coner House, Church and Charles (922-8954), is a beer house along the lines of the El Mocambo, but the room is much larger and more rambling with all sorts of pillars and poor acoustics. Jesse Winchester is on hand tonight and tomorrow, while Byron Berline and Country Gazette perform next week starting on Monday. Acts to follow include, John Hammond (April 22-27). The cover charge varies from $2 to $4, so its best to call ahead here too.

The number of concerts scheduled for the next two months is quite staggering. Here follows a very tentative list including some dates that haven't been finalized. So anything is liable to change between now and then.

Badfinger, the group that features

Beatle-like harmonies, is at The Victory, tonight, for two shows, $4.50 plus tax.

Electric Light Orchestra, at Massey Hall, tomorrow, 8 pm, $4.40 to $6.60.

Dick Gregory, Ryerson Gymnasium, tomorrow and Sunday, 7:30 pm, $5.

Straws, at Massey Hall, Sunday, 8:30 pm, $3.85 to $6.05.

Shawn Phillips and Valdy (who was named Folk Artist of the Year, on Monday at the Juno awards), at Massey Hall, Thursday April 4, 8:30 pm, $4.40 to $6.05.

Quicksilver Messenger Service, at The Victory, Friday April 5, 2 shows, $5.

The Guess Who, Maple Leaf Gardens, Friday April 5, 9 pm, $4 to $8.

Captain Beefheart And The Magic Band, at Convocation Hall, Sunday April 7, 2 shows, $4.95.

Nazareth, at The Victory, Monday April 8.

Hawkwind and Man, Massey Hall, Tuesday April 9, 8 pm, $3 in advance or $3.50 at the door.

Chuck Mangione with the Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra, O'Keefe Centre, April 9 to 13, $2.50 to $6.50.

Bloodrock and Rush, The Victory, Friday April 12, 2 shows, $3.85.

Dr. Hook, The Victory, Saturday April 13, 2 shows, $5.50.

Redbone, Massey Hall, Sunday April 14. The New Riders of the Purple Sage and The Good Brothers, Convocation Hall, Thursday April 18.

Renaissance, The Victory, Friday April 19.

Argent and Kiss, The Victory, Friday April 26.

Poco, Massey Hall, Sunday April 28.

Genesis, Massey Hall, Thursday May 2.

Roxy Music, Convocation Hall, Saturday May 4.

Fairport Convention with Sandy Denny, The Victory, Saturday May 4.

George Carlin, Massey Hall, Friday May 10.

Z Z Top, The Victory, Friday May 10.

Chick Corea and Weather Report, Massey Hall, Saturday May 11.

Billy Joel and Leo Kottke, Massey Hall, Sunday May 12.

Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, The Victory, Saturday June 8.

David Bowie, O'Keefe Centre, Sunday June 16.

Other performers who are rumoured to appear, but haven't been held down to final dates are, Brewer and Shipley, Ry Cooder and Maria Muldaur. Cat Stevens will be bypassing Toronto this year.

The Good Old Mariposa Folk Festival, is being held two weeks earlier this year. The dates are June 21 to 23. The cost has also been used. Weekend passes will now cost $15 and day passes will be $6. Passes are now available by mail order only. Tickets sales will be limited to 8,000 (5,000 weekend and 3,000 day passes). There will be no tickets sold after June 1, so it's best to plan ahead. It's interesting to note that the festival has been getting progressively duller as the years go by. This year's lineup is made up of many of the same old faces—Michael Cooney, and Steve Goodman. Maybe next year.

Gunfight At Carnegie Hall, Phil Ochs (A&M): It's Ochs' first LP in four years — a live recording at Carnegie Hall where the leftist protest singer of the '60s appeared in a gold lame suit. The audience reacted negatively at first so Ochs was trying to do a lot of fast explaining. Included are a couple of Ochs' own compositions, "I Ain't A Marching Anymore", "Pleasures Of The Harbour", "Tape From California" and "Chords F Fame." As well there are two medleys — one of Buddy Holly tunes and the other of Elvis Presley songs. Ochs' voice sounds better than it ever has, melodic and flowing. The Buddy Holly songs are absolutely perfectly performed.

For those whose interests have a bent towards folk music, make sure you get to sample the wares on Dave Essig's fine new album Redbird County (Woodshed). Essig is a native American who now makes his home in the pleasant solitude of the Emsville, north of Huntsville.

review

editor	tom walkom
art	david wise
books	uldi diemer
movies	bob bossin
classical	david basskin
rock	allan mandell
theatre	sandra souchoffe
production	gene allen

Why is Falconbridge so active in the field?

To find nickel?

Sure, that's the main reason.

That's why its geological teams are scouring the world.

The Falconbridge group already produces nickel, copper, cobalt. Plus two dozen other metals, minerals and related products.

So it's easy to appreciate why Falconbridge has a real interest in any minerals that can be developed, mined, refined and marketed internationally... using Falconbridge knowhow and its unique, patented processes and technologies that embrace the treatment of sulphide and laterite ores.

Falconbridge has a lot of attractive, seasoned exploration, mining and metallurgical knowhow to contribute to any venture in which it participates.

You have a proposition, an inquiry?

Then please contact

Falconbridge.

FALCONBRIDGE
Toronto

1959 has continued to grow. Today SWAPO, the South West African People's Organization is a mass-based party representing a large majority of the African population.

Through its military arm, People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN), SWAPO has successfully waged a guerrilla war in the north, principally in the Caprivi Strip and along the border of the Portuguese colony of Angola.

Casualties among South African security police climb as workers' organizations grow stronger and more effective. Falconbridge's haste to remove the ore has obviously been carefully calculated.

African investments extend to Rhodesia

It is recognized as clearly illegal for Canadian firms to invest in, or trade, with the illegal Smith regime, nevertheless Falconbridge is right in there making a bundle out of a gold mine near Gwanda, Rhodesia.

Although the Canadian government professes ignorance of any Canadian company breaking sanctions by operating in Rhodesia, the May 1967 issue of Mining in Canada states that Falconbridge has two gold mines in Rhodesia. One of the mines is the Giant Consolidated Gold Mines Ltd., and the other is the Blanket Mine, P.O. Box 4, Gwanda, Rhodesia.

This arm of Falconbridge made a profit of $1.3 million last year by paying black miners a basic starting pay of 56 cents per day. Of the 500 miners in the Blanket Mine, those with over 20 years service receive between $43.74 and $48.60 per month, not even half the salary required to reach the Poverty Datum Line.

Housing for blacks consists of two-room asbestos corrugated sheeting huts crowded together, while the 11 whites who work at the mine receive $810.00 per month and live in luxury with cars, a swimming pool, tennis court and recreational club.

To all intents and purposes, Falconbridge operates a slave-labor mine.

In 1963, Falconbridge sold the depleted Connemara Mine at Hunters

Road between Que-Que and Gwelo to the Southern Rhodesia Government for $45,000 with the knowledge that it was to be turned into a detention centre for political prisoners.

Falconbridge's support for this racist government, however, does not stop at the taxes from the Blanket gold mine.

After the illegal declaration of independence in 1965, the Smith regime set up the Mining Promotion Corporation in order to increase foreign investment and sales to offset UN sanctions (which Canada verbally supports) and the loss of foreign currency.

Falconbridge and the MPC were involved in a joint project at Umuva about 60 miles from Gwelo late in 1972 resulting in an option being taken out on the Aitens mine at Umuva in 1972. This option was dropped after several months only to be picked up by the British company Lonrho.

Lonrho was exposed in May 1973 in the British Press for sanctions busting and other deals, prompting former Conservative Prime Minister Edward Heath to condemn this "ugly face of capitalism".

Multinationals team up with apartheid

While the Canadian government occasionally protests the 'cancer of apartheid' of South Africa, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce urges businessmen to take advantage of the ideal investment climate there.

By paying Africans below poverty wages, Canadian companies can get a fat 15 per cent or more return on investments. Falconbridge needs little prompting when it comes to exploiting blacks.

Falconbridge has a 25 per cent share in Western Platinum Ltd. with Superior Oil of Texas and Lonrho Ltd. of Britain (51 per cent). Labor conditions and wages for Africans, it should be noted, are as bad in South Africa as in Namibia and Rhodesia.

Western Platinum has a mine and smelter in the Rustenburg area of the Transvaal, South Africa. This is in the Bophuthatswana 'homeland' where no royalties or other payments, let alone permission, are required. Some payments are made to the local village, but only for limited pit work.

To date, two platinum mines have been brought into production of the Middelkraal and Wonderkop farms in the Markana area 15 miles from Rustenburg. Output is expected to exceed 300,000 ounces by 1975 and this would place Western Platinum as the third or fourth largest producer in the world. Since platinum is seen as a replacement for South Africa's diminishing gold reserves, its value to South African government is strategically important.

Other African holdings

Falconbridge, like other mining companies, is having difficulty in other areas of Africa where, before independence, wholesale looting was acceptable to the colonial overseers.

Falconbridge is exploring in several areas, but its main revenue comes from its 70 per cent interest in the Kilembe Mine in Uganda. When Milton Obote was the Prime Minister of Uganda, legislation was prepared for Uganda to nationalize 60 per cent of the Kilembe Mine.

When Amin staged his coup, Falconbridge heaved a sigh of relief. In June 1972, Amin abolished the export tax and reduced the corporate income tax from 40 per cent to 22.5 per cent. Unfortunately for Falconbridge Amin has proven to be an uncomfortable risk. Amin's expulsions cost Falconbridge many key personnel, and many other companies have been nationalized.

Falconbridge's 1972 annual report states that 'Events in Uganda during 1972 have had an unfavourable effect on the production and financial results of this company's subsidiary, Kilembe Mines Ltd.'

Another unfavourable effect on Falconbridge's profits is the strike which is currently going on at Kilembe.

Falconbridge is currently mining just under one million tons of ore a year from the Kilembe mine. It estimates that proved and probably ore reserves were 5,727,000 tons at the end of 1972. If Idi Amin ever needed an excuse to nationalize Falconbridge, he has one now since years the mine will be exhausted in four years.

Falconbridge Explorations Ltd. has apparently been active in several areas in south and central Africa, particularly in Zaire. In Falconbridge's 1972 Annual Report, Superior Oil will earn a 50 per cent interest in Falconbridge's exploration activities in South Africa and South West Africa.

Falconbridge is in the Third World to Stay

Falconbridge's role in the underdevelopment of the Third World and Canada is unlikely to change. By locating and expanding its refining and smelting plants in countries like Canada and Norway, it makes the workers of industrialized countries dependent on the flow of cheap raw materials from Third World countries, while at the same time creating unstable dependent economies in the Third World.

As the Canadian Government displays no intention of curbing or indeed even suggesting change in the exploitative operations of multinational corporations such as Falconbridge, perhaps only a common front of workers from Canada, the Dominican Republic, Namibia and other countries can facilitate any fundamental and meaningful change.

An interview with Paul Sweezy

Economics: a Marxist perspective

Paul Sweezy is the co-editor, with Harry Magdoff, of Monthly Review, an independent socialist magazine in the United States. He is also the author of The Theory of Capitalist Development and co-author, with Paul Baran, of Monopoly Capital. He has also written on the Cuban revolution, American economics, and the problems of the transition from capitalism to socialism.

He was at McGill recently to speak on the United States and multi-national corporations. In this interview, conducted by Nesar Ahmad, Michel Celermanski, Joan Mandell, and Herman Rosenfield of the McGill Daily, he speaks on his lifelong work and activity for socialism and comments on the problem of economic development in the Third World.

DAILY: Could you begin by speaking a bit about yourself?

SWEETZ: I was born in New York City and grew up in the suburban area. I graduated from Exeter and Harvard, which are sort of Ivy League schools. In 1932, I was completely orthodox neoclassical economist, and I went for one year to the London School of Economics. In 1932-33.

There I ran into an entirely different situation. A lot of the graduate students came from the London East End and had had radical experiences. There were several Marxists, like Harold Laski. There had been nothing like that around Harvard at the time, as far as I know.

That was the year that the banks went bust and Hitler came to power in Germany and the Depression reached a low. It was quite a year.

And all this had no place in the textbooks or the courses in economics that I had taken; so it seemed as though reality was completely separated from everything that was taught. That began to make me think about what was going on.

Just about that time, the English translations of Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution came out and I read it. I really didn't know anything about the Russian revolution. I didn't even know if I had ever heard of it — maybe vaguely, but not really. And this suddenly opened up an entirely new way of thinking. I began to consider myself a Marxist. It was during the next four or five years or so or maybe more that I really stopped and began to think, "What does it really mean to be a Marxist?"

Theory of Capitalist Development

About 1936 or so, I went back to Harvard after I got done at LSE and became an instructor and tutor in economics. A few years later, there was a course in the economics of socialism, which had been taught by Professor Mason and I had been his assistant for several years. He got tired of teaching it, and he handed it over to me.

So for the next three or four years, I taught this course and I found there was really no suitable reading matter in the whole area of Marxian economics; so I started to write something myself, and it took a long time. That developed and changed, and it finally resulted in the book The Theory of Capitalist Development, which was published in 1942.

Just about then, I finished at Harvard and went into the army. That had been a period of three or four years of trying to make up my own mind and understand Marxism. It provided me with a lot of self-clarification. I would suggest to anyone that the best way to understand something is to write a book about it or give a course.

During the war I was in the Office of Strategic Services — in the Research and Analysis branch. We were supposed to evaluate what was coming out of the Axis powers. I spent most of the war in England, France, and Germany. After that, I came back to the United States, got out of the army, and had the problem of whether to go back to the United States, got out of the army, and had the problem of whether to go back to Harvard, where I could have taught for two-and-a-half years on the remainder of my contract. But I ascertained at the time through talking to friends in the department that the department was split down the middle about ever promoting me to a permanent position; so I decided to forget it, and I resigned. It is not true, as often gets around, that I was fired.

I lived for the next 10 years in the country, up in New Hampshire, writing. In 1949, Leo Huberman and I founded the Monthly Review with a donation of $5,000 a year from F.L. Mathieson. We had been good friends with him and often spoke about the desire to build an independent Marxist magazine.

DAILY: Could you clarify that? What does it mean to be an independent translation that nobody in the United States would publish.

DAILY: Why do you think that Monthly Review was not interrupted during the McCarthy period?

SWEETZ: You have to remember that the bourgeois-democratic freedoms in certain areas, like freedom to publish if you have the money to do it, is quite a deep tradition. While it is a very fragile one, it still exists. We were never really big enough or influential enough to warrant anyone getting very excited about us. Maximum circulation was never any more than 12,000...of course, it reaches a lot more readers than that.

I am not saying that it is miniscule. An Nazism, himself. He was very sympathetic and told me he couldn't do it and asked me if I could understand. I told him that, of course, I could. That was probably around 1955 or 1956. Then in 1958, a breakthrough came, in the sense that friends of mine at Cornell invited me to teach two summer courses, and I taught there for a while.

It wouldn't have been that way a few years before, and then the following year I taught two quarters at Stanford. That was partly because Paul Baran was then a professor at Stanford. We were working together and writing a book together. His colleagues were relatively friendly...it was only when we came back from Cuba Marxist magazine?

SWEETZ: To start off: a paper with no strings attached, no party ties, no obligations to anyone, no political affiliations or commitments to any political line or anything of the sort. The first issue of Monthly Review had 400 subscribers; that was in 1949. This May will be the 25th anniversary. The magazine now has a circulation of around 12,000.

We started publishing books in 1951. I.F. Stone had written the Hidden History of the Korean War. He couldn't find a publisher anywhere in the United States or England. It was a very critical expose of the way the war had been handled by the US and the lies that had been put out under MacArthur's completely phony handling of propaganda on the invasion of the North and all the rest of it. Stone did a marvellous job of exposing all this. It was the height of the Cold War in the McCarthy period in the US and nobody would touch it.

McCarthy years

So we decided somebody had to publish it. We then invented the imprint Monthly Review Press. That book was the first publication; and after that, there was a long period during the next four or five years of McCarthy in which we published quite a number of other books that nobody would publish. We soon found that we had a little publishing house; and after a while, it became sufficiently well established so that people would come to us with books or some example of this is that even during the worst Japanese imperialist expansion there was a big school of Marxist and Leninist thinkers, but as long as they wrote for a small enough audience in an esoteric way, they were usually left alone.

In the United States, if there had been a really big left-wing movement to defend us, that would have been a different situation; but somewhere in between insignificance and power, there is an area where you have got to expect to be harassed but we haven't reached that level yet. Obviously you hope that before you get to that position, there is going to be a movement sufficiently strong to defend radical thought, but that is still for the future as far as the United States is concerned.

DAILY: After the Cold War, or rather after the McCarthy era, were you still subjected to a certain degree of harassment from academia, especially from the economics people?

SWEETZ: Well, for a period up to 1958, it was very very rare that we got invited to lecture at a university. Actually one of the problems that I got into with a New Hampshire committee was that I had been invited to lecture on socialism at the Western Civilization Course at the University of New Hampshire. That attracted the attention of the investigators, since it was quite rare in those days. I once tried, because I needed some money, to get a course in adult education at the New School of Social Research.

I went, to see the president of the School, who was a German refugee from and wrote favorable things about the Cuban Revolution that Stanford got terribly uptight. They were glad to see me leave, and they harassed Baran from then until the end of his life.

I'll send you, if you are interested, some of the documents of the Baran academic freedom case. In the period of the student uprisings in the late 1960s, these documents were all stolen from the Stanford files. There are correspondences between the trustees and the people who were complaining about Baran's activities.

Since then, I was invited to give a couple of courses at the new School around 1965, and I gave a seminar at Yale during 1971, and I got lots of invitations now to go for a day, or a couple of days, or a week, to give lectures at various universities because they like to have a radical around for a little while. It's fashionable; students like it. In fact students often demand that they should be given some different fare on the menu.

That's quite different from what it would have been during the witch hunt period. One thing that nobody wants even nowadays, though, is a full-time Marxist unless they are already stuck with him, because, they inadvertently let him slip through.

Baran just got in under the wire at Stanford, and he got tenure at the very beginning. Although they harassed him and tried their best to get him out by keeping his salary low, giving him extra work, and insulting him, and that kind of thing, they never quite wanted to provoke and out and out academic freedom case, because he was a damn good teacher and the whole thing would have looked ridiculous.

But now, a sign of some change would be that there is a very good teacher at Stanford by the name of Jack Gurley. He was for quite a few years the editor of the American Economic Review. You can't get to be any more establishment oriented. Jack spent one semester or more, 1958-59 I think, at the Centre for the Study of Behavioral Science.

American Economic Association nominates Sweezy

He took the occasion to go through all the North American literature written by economists on China. He made up his mind that it was all a bunch of nonsense. He wrote a long paper, which wasn't published at the time, but which circulated widely in mimeographed form; and from then on he developed more and more to the left. Some of you may have heard of a paper he wrote called Maoist and Capitalist Economic Development.

Last year, the nominating committee of the American Economic Association, which puts up candidates for voting by the whole membership, approached me and Jack Gurley and asked us if we would be willing to run for positions on the executive committee. Both of us accepted the nominations—neither of us thought there would be the slightest chance of getting elected since they usually chose much more establishment, less radically oriented people, but we both got elected. I really don't understand what that means. There are about 50,000 members of the association, most of whom are liberal to conservative, very few radicals. There are lots and lots of business economists and I don't have any idea why they would want to elect Gurley and Sweezy.

Daily: What kind of critique do you have of economics as it is taught in North American universities?

SWEETZ: Well, it's mostly concerned with building models of equilibrium systems—equilibrium static systems, equilibrium growth systems—which trace patterns of full employment, macro employment, optimum employment, price stability, and equality of savings and investments. I don't have to tell you what they do. It means that they are concerned with an imaginary world, which has tendencies of equilibrium and harmony, of reconciling interests and gradual change.

That isn't the real world. The real world is one of disharmony, disequilibrium and conflict, sudden changes, big leaps, revolutions, wars, discrimination among races and national groups, and all that, which are pretty much ignored and treated as though they were temporary and solvable conflicts by orthodox economics. The result is that they become increasingly irrelevant to the problems of the real world.

Perhaps the clearest example is that the whole growth and development economics treat the problems between the advanced rich countries and the underdeveloped poor countries as though the rich countries help the poor countries. All you need is to have more rational and sensible policies, and the poor countries will become rich too.

We all know that if we go to the facts that it goes the other—that the gap between the two grows and that far from being to the advantage of the poor countries to be in close contact with the rich countries it has exactly the opposite effect. They only develop when they are cut off from the rich countries such as during wars and during the Great Depression of the 1930's. It was during those periods that there was some degree of industrialization and development in the South American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. But all this mythology of a common interest between the advanced and the underdeveloped countries continues to exist and constitutes what you might call the core of development economics.

Brazil and American imperialism

DAILY: But isn't Brazil developing now under the tutelage of American imperialism?

SWEETZ: Brazil is developing very rapidly in terms of the increase in the gross national product. It runs around 10-12 per cent per year in the last few years, but that is a very interesting case.

The president of Brazil, a few years ago, visited the United States and was quoted in the New York Times as having said that economy is doing fine but the people aren't.

This is precisely the notion of growth and development that is worshipped by orthodox economics—the great God gross national product. That real wages, which affect a vast majority of Brazilian people, have gone down by a half since 1964, when the military government took over, doesn't seem to bother anybody at all.

What has happened in terms of Marxian theoretical analysis is that the relative surplus value has been enormously increased, and the workers and the peasants, the people who do the work and who create the value of that society, have been pressed down to a barely subsistence minimum and, in many cases, a lower than subsistence minimum, to starvation. An enormous surplus product is, thereby, being turned up.

Now, the question is who is going to consume this surplus product? Certainly not the mass of the people who have been put down to the minimum of subsistence standard. So what you have is an upper class and an upper middle class that is going towards what we have come to call a consumer's society, buying such things as cars and appliances, (all on credit, of course), houses, second appliances, and technologically sophisticated export industries. What has this got to do with the Brazilian masses? It has nothing to do with them. You can't suddenly redistribute armaments. You've got to do the whole thing over again. You've got to junk all that stuff. If you're going to have a serious program of developing the economy and promoting the welfare of the mass of the people.

We saw this in Chile. The Popular Unity came in, and its first moves were to expand the purchasing power of the working classes, the poorer classes. They did it by raising income and by temporarily holding down prices. There was a tremendous increase for a while—in textiles, clothing, food—the kind of things that the mass of people in a poor country consume. It had nothing to do with these technologically advanced industries that are being fostered under the kind of program that the Brazilian military dictatorship has been living under for 10 years now. That's all completely irrelevant. It's worse than irrelevant. It ruins the environment. It has no regard whatever for the real needs of the people. For that, you have to have a totally different approach.

There I would say that the article I referred to a little while ago, Jack Gurley's Capitalist and Maoist Economic Development, is the clearest simple exposition that I know of, of these two total-power. As you know, in total surplus area, it is almost as large as the United States. It's in the same league as a geographical entity. It has close to 100-million people, about the size of Japan's population. It has fabulous natural resources most of which have not even been explored. Brazil has a whole range of climate from a moderate or temperate zone in the south, all the way to a tropical zone in the north.

It has tremendous potential, and in time, I don't see any reason why it might not develop to a point when—the United States and the other advanced powers get into increasing rivalry and knock each other off to a certain extent—that Brazil might not come up into that league. Not that I think that will do any good for the Brazilian people. Au contraire, the only way out for Brazil and all other countries is a genuine revolution.

DAILY: Doesn't that bring into question our whole notion of what constitutes development? For example, Galbraith earlier said that there are basically two types of societies—one that is egalitarian and distributes those goods that are available as best it can, and the other where there is such a vast surplus produced in relation to the needs of the community, (without taking into account, of course, that this often depends on the exploitation of other areas) that a certain trickle-down is effected, which ultimately provides people with their needs.

Sweezy on Galbraith

SWEETZ: Well, Galbraith has gone through a considerable "development" himself. In his American Capitalism, which was published in 1950 or '51, he took a very complacent view of the situation in the United States.

The next book was The Affluent Society, where he treated inequality and poverty as disappearing problems. This was his "trickle-down" theory, where there was so much affluence that it would trickle down and float everybody else up to a level of at least reasonable affluence. The waste and dissipation of wealth was of relatively small importance, because it was nothing compared to the total picture.

Then came The New Industrial State, in which he presented a more skeptical view, and now the last book, Economics and the Public Purpose, in which he says that inequality is the major or one of the major problems, and not only that, but he says that the structure of the system is such that it increases inequality. The power is in the hands of what he calls the "technostructure". I think it's a non-sensical concept.

But if you put in place of the "technostructure", a ruling capitalist class that has the power, and uses this power not to distribute the surplus, not to allow it to trickle down, but to appropriate more and more to itself, to increase the gap between the top and the bottom, then it's the power structure that counts. And unless you change the power structure and the purpose for which economic activity is undertaken, there's not going to be any trickle down.

Up till about 1961, in the United States, poverty was treated as a disappearing problem, and then Michael Harrington's book, The Other America came out. It pointed out that there was an enormous problem of poverty. Since then, this has become part of the conventional wisdom of the United States—that there is a problem of poverty and you have to tackle it directly.

But it goes on getting worse all the time. Why is that? Because of bad will? No, it's not because of bad will. It's the way the system works. And Galbraith now knows that. Now, he has a panacea for it, which he calls "the public state". He wants the people to elect a government that will put the technostructure in its proper place, and to forget all about the real relation of power in society, which are entirely different from anything he wants to think.

He now understands the problem a little bit better than in the series of books that began in 1950, and the reason he understands it is very simple. The facts are hard truths. Twenty years of experience told the other way from what your theory told you makes you wonder about your theory.

Not everybody, but Galbraith is a cut above the rest of the economists, and he's at least reasonably realistic. He suffers from many shortcomings, but they are the shortcomings of a decent person, not a complete dogmatist of the neo-classical variety who put such blinkers on, that they don't see the facts.

Paul Sweezy says it's possible that Brazil will one day be a rival of the United States.

houses, boats, the whole bit. This involves, at the outside, maybe 15-20 per cent of the population. That doesn't eat up all the surplus either so you have to have a tremendous export drive. They are going in for exports on an enormous scale, invading markets all over the world—in particular South America and Africa.

To further back up all of this, they play a sub-imperialist role as a junior partner of the United States. For that function they must have military strength. There is an enormous increase in spending for the Brazilian military establishment. They're now making their own ships and I think they're even making their own planes. So what you have is a monster growing that has absolutely nothing to do with the welfare of the Brazilian people.

There are 90 million people, of whom some 75 million are living on the verge of starvation or on a subsistence minimum. There may be a small, relatively wealthy working class in some industries, but it doesn't amount to much. The spread of capitalist farming also means that you have more and more peasants being put off the land and congregating around the cities. Brazil is a classic example of South American countries where you find cities with a very small, enormously wealthy, upper class and the whole city completely surrounded by shanty towns. Brazil is a perfect example of successful capitalist development.

DAILY: The argument can be made that the strong centralized government will only exist until a pluralist opposition is formed and with the advance of capitalism there can also be a sufficient redistribution of income.

SWEETZ: What is the kind of capital that is being developed? Automobile industries, armaments' industries ly different conceptions of economic development. You can't say, "Well we'll get rich along one line and then we'll redistribute along the other."

Capital and production serve a tiny minority

You know, capital and production are not putty that can simply be squeezed into any form you like. They are very definite structures, built up to serve a tiny minority. They are going to have to be totally turned around. There may be skills and a certain knowhow that is acquired that could be put to other uses.

That would be a reason why a country like Brazil, if it had a good revolution, would now be in a position to develop fairly rapidly along that line. It has engineers, and it has people who know how to work in metal, and who know enough about technology to adapt it to serve the needs of the people—just as they have done in China—through industrializing the communes, through building up altogether new types of consumer durables, and through equalization of income. Those are the types of things that have to be done.

But the benefits of the industrialization of Brazil today are very indirect, and anybody who says you have to go through all that to arrive at a position where you take the other road, is absolutely crazy.

DAILY: Do you think it's possible, given the strength of the ruling class in Brazil, that it will use development, as you have described it, as a base for Brazil becoming an Imperialist power?

SWEETZ: Yes, I think that Brazil has the potential not only of becoming a sub-imperialist power, but a rival imperialist

Lip workers set example, practise 'autogestion'

Last summer the employees of the Lip watch factory in France decided to occupy the factory when they heard that the owners were about to declare bankruptcy. They continued to produce the watches, selling them at lower prices and through friendly unions. This one example of self-management has shown many pessimists that in fact the job can be carried out and that workers can successfully organize their own workplace.

The following article, written by Peter Herman is reprinted from Working Papers: for a new society. Herman has been studying workers' movements for some time with much interest. The article is lifted from our friends at the chevron, the University of Waterloo student newspaper.

On June 12, 1973 workers at the Lip watch factory in the French provincial city of Besancon barricaded two administrators in their offices. The workers' suspicion was that the company was near bankruptcy; their fear was massive layoffs. They demanded to know the management's plans.

That night the CRS, France's national "riot police," freed the hostages. The occupiers offered no resistance. Before the police arrived, however, workers had thoroughly perused managerial files. There they discovered a plan to restructure the plant, dismantle major sections, and eliminate some 350 jobs.

There were 65,000 watches then at the plant, which the workers proceeded to sequester. The next day most of the 1,300-person workforce entered the factory and began to run it without the managers. The events that followed—l'affaire Lip, it shortly came to be called—became both the focus and symbol of the biggest wave of political activity to hit France since 1968.

Lip squeezed by multinationals

The Lip watch company dates from the late nineteenth century. Under its Swiss founder, Emmanuel Lippmann; and his son Marcel Lip, the company grew to be a successful and well-known maker of high-quality watches, sold in jewelry stores throughout France. For most of its existence, Lip was a typical middle-sized French enterprise. The Lips maintained a friendly, paternal rapport with their employees, many of whom were women. The workers in turn developed a sense of professional craftsmanship.

After the Second World War, control of the company passed to Fred Lip, grandson of the founder. Lip, flamboyant and energetic, looked to a future of dynamic growth and diversification. He built a new factory in Palente, a modern suburb of Besancon, and added two new sectors, machine tools and weaponry, to the company's traditional watch manufacture. But performance did not match expectations.

Lip failed to penetrate the new markets in any significant way, and the watch operation itself began to go downhill. (In the 1960's, other watch manufacturers such as Kelton, or Timex in the United States, developed a line of mass-produced inexpensive watches, which they sold in large department stores. Lip never developed such a line, continuing to sell only through small jewelry and watch stores. As a result, despite its well-known and trusted brand name, Lip steadily lost its hold on the watch market.)

To raise money, Fred Lip began to sell the business to Ebauches, a Swiss watch trust. Ebauches bought 33 per cent of the Lip stock in 1967 and raised its holdings to 43 per cent in 1970. By this time, it was clear that Lip was no longer master of the business; he retired in 1971, leaving effective control of the company to Ebauches.

Ebauches' primary goal was simply to sell its own products in France under the recognized name of Lip. (Watches made in Switzerland bearing the Lip name have been sold in France since 1970.) The trust also planned to sell watch springs and other parts manufactured by their Swiss affiliates to the Besancon factory.

The plan meant radical changes for the Lip company. Traditionally, Lip had made watches from start to finish. Ebauches began to convert the factory to an assembly plant for premanufactured parts. In 1967, for example, Lip manufactured 76 per cent of its watches in their entirety. By 1972, this figure had fallen to 40 per cent. The once largely self-sufficient plant was becoming a module in a larger, multi-plant organization controlled by Ebauches. And Ebauches, like many other Swiss watch companies such as Longines, is itself controlled by the giant ASSUAG, the most powerful financial group in watchmaking in the world.

Changes in the manufacturing process meant changes in the workforce. Many workers became no more than assembly-line operators. The pace of work became more uniform and "rationalized."

The watch assemblers anticipated layoffs as production became more standardized and mechanized. And Ebauches, planned to eliminate the other sectors of the plant, which had never been successful.

Trade unions and Catholic social militancy

Most of Lip's employees work at the Palente plant. The company is one of the few employers in the area, and turnover is low. The workers' unions include the Communist-led Confederation General du Travail (CGT), and an unusually powerful local of the Confederation Française Démocratique du Travail (CFDT). The CFDT, originally a Christian socialist union, draws strength at Lip from a tradition of Catholic social militancy in the region. It stresses the idea of autogestion, or self-management, which was to prove centrally important in the Lip struggle.

A series of confrontations three years ago fore-shadowed the events of last summer. Fred Lip, deep in financial difficulties, had tried to avoid the raises and benefits widely granted to French workers in the prolonged wake of May 1968. The response of the workers included an eight-day occupation of the factory, which forced Lip to back down and grant the raises. As a result, union leadership was powerful and well-respected among the workers.

In 1973, Ebauches decided to imple-both because it avoided inter-union rivalry and because it could convincingly claim to speak for all the employees.

Its intensive meetings came to two critical conclusions: first, that a general strike would be a disastrous tactic against a bankrupt firm, since it would give management the excuse it needed to shut the plant down; and second, that the workers must nevertheless act decisively, and not wait for the planners to plan for them.

The committee resolved to begin a work slowdown and to publicize the worker's situation through public meetings. The slowdown began April 24; in May the committee organized support meetings in Besancon, Paris, and even in Neuchâtel, a nearby Swiss watchmaking city and the seat of Ebauches. (This last demonstration was intended to show that the Lip workers did not oppose the Swiss workers, but were struggling against the patrons, both French and Swiss.)

Meanwhile, anxiety about the real plans of Ebauches and the provisional administrators continued to grow, despite the directors' assurance that the new "administrative and financial arrangements" would not affect the employees. On June 12, the workers barricaded the two administrators in their office and declared that they would release the hostages when they learned the management's plans.

During the day, the workers made their key discovery in the director's office: a file of letters and plans exchanged between Lip, Ebauches, and the government's Institute of Industrial Development, dating from November 1972. The file revealed the plans for restructuring, dismantlement, and layoffs, including setting aside five million francs for the cost of the layoffs and two million for the cost of dismantling the armaments and machine-tool sectors. None of the workers had anticipated such a well-orchestrated plan. If confirmed their fears, and gave an atmosphere of crisis to their situation.

Anticipating the intervention of the police, the workers hid the entire stock of watches and decided to occupy the factory. When the CRS freed the hostages that night, the workers concentrated on organizing a regional demonstration of support for the next Friday evening. To their considerable surprise 15,000 people came to the rally. It was the biggest public meeting in Besancon since the Liberation in 1944.

Workers organize to save jobs

With this symbol of public support, the workers' committee geared up its activities. The group formed seven sub-committees open to any workers: production, sales, welcoming, fund-raising, publicity food, and security. It decided to continue producing watches, though on a smaller scale, and to sell them at reduced prices directly to customers. The publicity committee organized speakers' tours to other cities, and sales groups to sell watches through union offices. A news leaflet, LIP UNITE began to come out, and a film on Lip was commissioned.

A factory like Lip is honeycombed with job classification and hierarchies of workers. But the Ebauches plan did much to unify the employees: foremen, and workshop heads (the so-called cadres du deuxième college) as well as the rank and file all helped to keep the factory going. All, that is, but the sixty-odd cadres du troisième college: the top managers of the plant, and most of the technical experts and research personnel.

Many of the latter faced unemployment if the Ebauches plan was carried out, and it would not be easy for them to find other jobs. But they did not participate in the occupied factory. They worried about the illegality of the occupation and watch sales, and feared that involvement in the struggle would leave permanent black marks on their records.

Their own committee (outside the factory) denounced the Ebauches plan, but at the same time deplored the tactics of the workers. The workers' committee, for its part, encouraged the "cadres" to join the other employees.

The factory, during the occupation, looked like few other factories in the world. A huge sign outside the parking lot read, "It's possible: we make them, we sell them." A poster in the front hall, renamed the Hall of Welcome showed a ship flying a Swiss flag navigating through a sea of struggling swimmers; the caption was "They save the ship, but the people...drown." The hall also had a display of Lip products and the watches available for sale. A "solidarity wall" was filled with thousands of letters and telegrams of support from all over Europe. In the restaurant area, a group of workers answered visitors' questions.

And the visitors were frequent and numerous: families on vacation, curious onlookers, groups of students and workers who had come to learn about Lip and to help the committee. Some of this last group stayed in the plant all night to help with security. Watch sales went up sharply as customers were glad to show their solidarity by buying good watches cheap. One Besancon businessman joked that he would be glad to take control of Lip—provided the strike continued.

Security was loose, despite the obvious presence of the CRS in buses down the street. The only sign of secrecy was the hidden stock of watches. Few knew where they were hidden on church property. The liberal archbishop of Besancon had been an outspoken supporter of the Lip workers, and church property is relatively safe from police search and seizure.

By the end of July, the situation at Lip had become nationally known, and newspapers reported daily on the situation. The workers' committee, in a virtually unprecedented action, began to pay the employees from the profits of their watch sales.

This further venture into self-management was of course technically illegal, like the watch sales and the occupation itself. But it was enormously popular, and the Lip slogan changed to "It's possible: we make them, sell them, and pay ourselves."

While the workers were paying themselves, the committee collected funds "to express solidarity with the strikers of Pechiney (an aluminum factory), worthy to share the first workers' pay in syndicalist history." The wages, while economically necessary, thus became a political act as well: a symbol of autogestion.

Self-management at Lip

The issue of self-management at Lip is complex. The Lip workers are not, by and large, sympathetic to the symbols and styles of youthful leftism. When a group called Front Rouge painted slogans supporting the workers on the church bell tower in Besancon, a large group of workers urged the committee to condemn the action and not to associate with such cochonneries. The workers' committee has consistently chosen tactics that unify the workers instead of dividing them along ideological lines. For example, the committee rejected a plan to pay every worker the same wage. They knew that such a change was marginal to their immediate struggle and would seriously divide the work-force.

Many key decisions, in fact, were last-minute moves taken to meet crises. The decision to produce and sell watches, for example, was an improvisation to meet the workers' financial needs when, to their surprise, the government did not act promptly to remove them from the factory in June.

The committee was split on the wisdom of these illegal sales: many feared that both the average watch assembler and the public might react negatively. This initial nervousness became confidence and enthusiasm when the public greeted each step with renewed support and watch sales began to shoot up.

One CGT delegate at Lip said: "At first we all agreed not to talk about workers' control or socialism. But the government made no move, and the patronat hardened. The weeks passed and our experience changed us. We still don't think of installing full workers' control. Just a bit more autonomy. But, as a result we are beginning to hope."

The "direct control" of the Lip plant had a major effect on the workers themselves. People often worked around the clock on the various committees. Men and women showed initiative and talent that had lain dormant for years. A young woman assembler said:

You must try to understand what a thing like this means to a woman like me, used to bending over the same neon light, doing the same things eight hours a day. Suddenly I'm free to set my own hours, my own work pace, to get up when I want, even free to change jobs, by shifting from one committee to another.

The workers fought to protect their jobs, not to "change the system." The bywords of the struggle were "no dismantlement, no layoffs." Much of the national support has been similar in nature. The French traditionally dislike government meddling. Nor are they fond of huge corporations and financial empires, particularly those based in other countries. The spectre of unemployment haunts a number of Frenchmen, and the spectacle of a little plant successfully defying a corporation's plans for layoffs is hearening.

There are other factors as well. The CRS is unpopular. The watches were cheap. And no one like to see the French government collaborating with Swiss financial groups.

At the same time, the tactics of the Lip struggle have conjured up a sense of social idealism that is revolutionary in spirit if not in politics. Cartier-Bresson's pictures of middle-aged men and women voting in assembly at Lip, which have been publicized widely in newspapers and magazines, suggested the old dreams of small-scale, participatory socialist co-operation. Besancon is the birthplace of Fourier and Proudhon, and the symbolic connection between their utopian theories and the experience of the Lip workers is not lost on the French. Self-management, though not officially espoused by the workers, is a part of that utopian vision.

Unions affected by self-management

Self-management is also a live political issue for the unions. Most of the Lip workers' organized support throughout France comes from the two major union federations, the CGT and the CFDT. But nothing brings out the latent divisions between the two more than the idea of self-management.

The CGT, the most powerful union federation in France, is largely controlled by the French Communist party and the party is committed to parliamentary politics. The CGT stresses economic gains on a national scale, and often tries to suppress spontaneous local actions in factories.

In May 1968, for example, the CGT leadership nominally supported the wave of strikes but attempted, with the Grenelle negotiations, to steer the social upheaval into the pattern of orthodox demands for higher wages.

Workers' self-management in a capitalist system, to the CGT, is contradictory; it asks the workers to collaborate in their own exploitation. More, a policy of undermining capitalism through a gradual factory-by-factory restructuring of power is incoherent.

Centralized monopoly capitalism must be attacked centrally, by an attack on the state. And in a nonrevolutionary system such as present-day France, the goal must be electoral victory. The CGT argues, for example, that the "irresponsible" leftism of May 1968 scared the French, and led to a landslide election for Gaullism in June.

Hence any attempt to introduce ideas of workers' control at the shop floor or plant level is, according to the CGT, fatal; the only proper course is resolute opposition. Georges Seguy, the secretary general of the CGT, sent an open letter to the federation's members at Lip, praising their struggle against "the government and the patronat." But he went on to warn them not to fall into the "trap" of allowing Lip to be used for "certain partisan ideas and theories" (a transparent reference to the notion of autogestion), but to stick to the precise demands of no layoffs and no dismantlement.

The CFDT, the other major union federation, is the main proponent of autogestion. The CFDT is more libertarian than the CGT. It opposes the latter's centralized hierarchy and its subservience to the Communist party. It favors a union movement that is not subordinated to parliamentary politics, that is open to many currents of left-wing thought, and that stresses the demands of rank-and-file workers.

The CFDT has provided an organizational home for many veterans of the leftist activities in 1968; it is the only trade union that has been moving to the left in the last few years. Its argument is that movements for more control over working conditions, far from hindering the transformation from capitalism to socialism, are indispensable.

Most of the leaders of the Lip strike are CFDT delegates; many are also members of the PSU (Parti Socialiste Unifié). One can assume that they are sympathetic to the ideas of self-management; but clearly the first priority is to maintain unity among the workers and to avoid alienating the CGT.

Hence the demands of the strike have been formulated negatively. In fact, the first issue of LIP UNITE makes a clear concession to the CGT position when it warns: "In a conflict of this type in a capitalist society the solutions are not in the hands of the workers. 'Workers' cooperative' or 'self-management' are hollow concepts in present-day society."

But if the workers are necessarily restricted in their demands, they can afford—as we have seen—to be considerably more imaginative in their organizational tactics. The implicit element of autogestion in the tactics appears to be an essential ingredient in the success of the Lip strike both among the workers and the public at large.

Government presents plan to restructure Lip

On August 1, Jean Charbonnel, the minister of industrial development, presented his plan for the restructuring of Lip. It called for the creation of a watch company under Ebauches' control, and a machine-tool and armaments plant, supported largely by public funds. It envisioned between 500 and 600 layoffs, and made vague promises about helping the laid-off workers to find other employment. In short, it differed little from the plan that had triggered the occupation in June.

continued

on page 48...

...continued from page 47

The workers lost no time in rejecting it. Charbonnel then sent Henry Giraud, an experienced industrialist, to begin negotiations with the committee. But Giraud had few independent powers, and the negotiations were more charade than reality.

By this time the government was impatient, perhaps a bit desperate. The affair had been dragging on for two months. The popularity of the Lip workers was growing. Other factories were beginning to take cues from the Lip experience. A wave of occupations broke out: an aluminum plant at Nogueres, a shoe factory at Romans, a clothing factory at Lorient.

The government decided to act before people returned from summer holidays on September 1: early on August 14 the CRS occupied the plant. The workers, a token night force, offered no opposition.

The struggle continued in no less imaginative ways. The mayor of Besançon donated the use of a high school gym as a strike center. Clandestine workshops were established, capable of finishing the assembly of several hundred watches a day.

Key parts of plant machines had been removed before the arrival of the CRS and were held as material hostages. The Lip committee organized another major rally in Besançon, and the unions arranged a rally in Paris. Both were well attended, particularly for the middle of August.

But the leaders were nonetheless worried. Without the occupation of the factory, they had no way to maintain public attention, and if publicity died down before the return from summer vacation, the Lip affair would be effectively over.

Their ties with the unions paid off at this point, however: the CGT and the CFDT both continued to organize meetings and rallies in support of Lip, and momentum was somehow maintained. Lip was still very much on people's minds on September 1.

At this writing (October 1973), negotiations between the government and Lip workers have bogged down. A juridical compromise had been worked out, permitting the creation of three companies. Each of the three was to function independently, but they would be under one corporate umbrella, thus permitting one workers' committee for all three plants, as the workers' demands specify.

The key issue of layoffs, however, is still unresolved. The government insists that roughly 300 jobs must go, and the workers are sticking to their demand of no layoffs. No solution is yet in sight.

There are still public rallies and union meetings in support of Lip. But the essential phase of the Lip affair is probably over. For two months, the workers of Lip organized and ran the factory, making and selling their product and paying themselves in the process with an astute combination of realism and imagination, they succeeded in creating sympathetic reverberations throughout French society. And they did not yield when the government used force, but instead maintained their demands and their popular support even after they lost control of the plant.

Many ingredients of the Lip workers' success are unusual. Hence it is hazardous to generalize uncritically about the future of this form of workers' control. For one thing, the Lip workers' committee moved into the power vacuum created by Ebauches' bankruptcy maneuver. They did not have to struggle directly with an employer for control of the factory. Second, since the movement presented itself not as a "revolutionary act" but as protection for threatened jobs, it automatically commanded the support of nearly all the Lip workers. Finally, the workers were greatly helped by Pompidou's policy of wait and see, which enabled them to maintain uncontested control of the plant for two months.

Lip strategy sets example

The Lip strategy of production and sale suggests one way of sustaining long strikes, since French workers are poorly protected from the economic consequences of protracted work stoppages (many workers are not unionized, and the unions themselves have no substantial strike funds). But Lip's success here depends partly on the firm's particular product. Watches are small, relatively simple consumer items that are marginal to the economy.

It is not clear that a similar strategy would work in a major industry: you can't sell aluminum or steel to the public at large, and coordinating production at an auto plant, say, is infinitely more complex than assembling watches. (Even Lip's watch production was dependent on the stock of watch movements seized by the workers in June.) Also, employers and the government would be less likely to adopt the wait-and-see policy in the case of a key industry.

Yet there is no doubt that the Lip affair marks a watershed in the history of the French workers' movement. For one thing, Lip reveals the drift of the Pompidou regime toward a policy of tightly knit European capitalism involving large multinational firms.

Despite the residual Gaullist rhetoric about the glory of France, and the Gaullist vision of workers and owners participating in a grand cooperative effort, the Pompidou government refused to bail out the small firm and refused to re-employ the endangered workers. The ministry, instead, acted wholly in the interests of Ebauches.

The Lip affair also demonstrated that a group of determined people could successfully resist, for a time at least, the plans of the government and the big corporations.

The Pompidou regime prides itself on its technocratic central planning. But it proved unable to solve the industrial problems of a small watch factory and unable to respond to the challenge posed by the workers' occupation of the plant. What would the government do in the case of a major industrial crisis? How would it respond to a general strike or a wave of factory occupations? After Lip, the questions seem open.

Most important, the tactics of the Lip workers revitalized the workers' movement more than anything in recent years. Young workers from all over France streamed into Besançon last summer to study Lip. Others requested Lip spokesmen to visit them and talk to their workers' groups.

The Lip experience is directly relevant to a range of small and middle-sized businesses; and workers' groups at large enterprises, aware of their different situations, are discussing with new vigor and seriousness the possibility of adapting workers' control strategies to their factories.

A group of young workers at Renault's Boulogne Billancourt complex (the largest factory in France,) for example, are discussing the possibility of isolating a sector of the plant and manufacturing consumer-salable auto parts.

The revitalization affected the unions too. In place of the bitter spectacle of 1968, when the CGT and the CFDT (among others) called each other "traitors to the working class," the Lip affair showed them working in uneasy but genuine collaboration. It suggests that the union of the left, that will-o'-the-wisp that the French have been pursuing for many years, may be beginning to take solid shape.

Two nights before the arrival of the CRS at the Lip plant, Roland Vitot, one of the leaders, said that he expected to be driven out of the plant. In a sense, he added, it didn't matter, because the decisive message of Lip had already been delivered. He was probably right.

74!

h

Y

varquity

M.C. L.C. B.P. G.O.

Women's course heard two socialist alternatives

By HEATHER SANGUINS
The connecting political thread of the INX 260 course on women this year was the socialist content.

Socialist groups heard in the series had two different solutions to the problem of women's oppression.

The first was for women to join working men to wage one class struggle.

"Maybe when this is won we'll get around to loosening the oppression of female comrades, dear," seemed to be the tone.

Contrasting this idea was the second socialist solution presented by the Radical Feminists. These women are rather 'iffy' about associating with men politically, let alone fighting a male-created battle for them. The first battle, for them, is for women.

Lesbians were the most extreme Radical Feminists who were represented at the lectures. These are women who have nothing to do with men, sexually, and only in a limited way socially.

From the overwhelming socialist dominance there followed a distinct weakness in the problems of emotion and imagination for women in the struggle for freedom.

No suggestions were offered for the expression of the individual when the supporting fabric of socialization as it is presently administered by society to females is removed.

However, not all the speakers were socialists. One such non-socialist liberationist was last week's speaker, Abbie Hoffman, Guelph University political science professor and 1968 Olympic games competitor.

Her argument was women are simply good at some unheralded things. "No man could ever begin to do what Olga Korbut does on the balance beam," Hoffman said.

Hoffman demanded an assessment of women's sports on their own terms and to no longer view them as "badly played men's sports." She said in Canada "the situation of women athletes is certainly not what it might be."

The speaker mentioned she was doing her best not to give an inflammatory speech which would either totally condemn male organizers who control sport and its funding or scare off girls from becoming athletes.

Hoffman decried the fact "facilities for women in their 20s to do sport is almost nil."

The 27-year-old amateur runner stated "I have virtually no female friends who do sport now" as compared to 12 years ago when most almost all of them did.

The speaker said: "Sport is a kind of discipline it gives me something around which I can organize my life." She noted: "Very few women have that organizational centre for their life."

The speaker raised laughter from the audience when she said athletics were "one of the few activities you can't possibly get worse at."

Hoffman is distressed about the way sport is handled in the Ontario educational system. She pointed out in most high schools the budget for boys' football is more than the total budget for all girls' sports.

Girls' sports are very "low status" in schools she said citing one recent instance where the Toronto school board allocated about $13,800 for referees for boys' games, and $300 for girls' games.

This is an example of what she called the "gross disparity in coaching, funding and general opportunities" between men and women.

"Most places give one-third to one-half less time" on their playing surfaces to female athletes.

Hoffman believes both men and women "in terms of their athletic ability should be looked at differently." She pointed out most people are "still hung up" on the argument over "which sex is better."

The speaker cited various examples of the physiological differences between men and women which support her demand for autonomy. Women have a lower centre of gravity than do men, and their muscles are less bulky, and hence more flexible.

The combination of these two things means women have a better sense of balance.

Other characteristics of women's physical make-up allows them to handle climatic extremes better than do men.

Hoffman said women are "much more durable in the cold." As an example she used Marilyn Bell's swim in across Lake Ontario in the 1950's on which occasion she left a male swimmer far behind her.

Hoffman said in sport women are "compartmentalized" as are men, to a certain extent. She reminded the audience "snide remarks are always made about men who want to take up aesthetic, or so-called feminine sports."

The Gannett

HARVARD RADCLIFFE ORCHESTRA

conductor, james yannatos

IN CONCERT

SUNDAY MARCH 31st, 1974

8:30 p.m.

The Great Hall
Hart House

Beethoven, Dukas, Piston, Liszt

$3.00 at the door
telephone 928-5524

NOW PLAYING - STUDENT CARDS - $2.00

"THE YEAR'S BEST AMERICAN FILM
THUS FAR!" — Paul Q. Zimmerman, Newsweek

'The Friends Of Eddie Coyle'
Starring Robert Mitchum and Peter Boyle

The story of Eddie. The best ex-cop in the business.

Parade Pictures Presents
A HOWARD W. KOCH Production
BADGE 373
INSPIRED BY THE EXPLOITS OF EDDIE COYLE

new yorker 651 YONGE ST. 925-6400

BE INVOLVED

Work for Office Overload
When you need us,
We need you

office
overload

151 BLOOR ST. W. 924-8844

BRAMPTON	451-4290	ISLINGTON-BLOOR	238-1111
CELEBRITY	431-1420	KELLY FINCH	670-0297
SCARBOROUGH	491-2880	LONG BRANCH	251-3351
DON MILLS	701-6135	OREVILLE	845-6863
WILLOWDALE		VILSTON/REXDALE	249-8409
DOWNSVIEW		190 BAY ST. W. (LEGAL)	364-9334

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Latin American Studies Committee of the International Studies Programme University of Toronto presents two lectures by Professor Egon Schaden, Latin American-in-Residence at the University of Toronto.

Lecture 1:

Topic: THE IMAGE OF THE BRAZILIAN INDIAN

Date: Wednesday, March 27, 1974

Time: 4:10 p.m.

Place: Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall

Lecture 2:

Topic: IS THERE A BRAZILIAN CULTURE

Date: Thursday, April 4, 1974

Time: 4:10 p.m.

Place: Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall

NEED EXTRA CASH?

we have

TEMPORARY JOBS

available

NOW

Male & Female

Labourers
Warehouse Workers
Production Workers

Inventory Counters
Assembly Workers
& many more

START WORK NOW TO ENSURE A JOB FOR THE SUMMER

industrial overload
a division of Office Overload

65 Jarvis St. 364-9361
777 Warden Ave. 751-3661
Brampton 459-4141

2725 Weston Rd. 741-3341
3249 Lakeshore Blvd. W. 259-9287
Oakville 844-4331

HEADQUARTERS

FOR

UNIVERSITY of TORONTO

JACKETS

LEVI'S AND LEES

BLAZERS and CRESTS

CRESTED SWEATSHIRTS

Lynn-Gold Clothes Ltd.

401 YONGE ST. (at Gerrard) TORONTO 200, ONT.
PHONE 368-7729

University made killing on 188 Yonge

By DICK BROWN

Where there's a will, there's a way.

U of T proved the validity of this old saw during this past year when it took Naomi Bilton's will and found a way to sell 188 Yonge St. for the new Eaton's Centre despite the will prohibiting the use of the land for an Eaton's store.

In the process, the university found itself up to its corporate gills for a few brief months with the land development industry in Toronto.

The end result for U of T was a $400,000 killing, a figure which business affairs vice-president

Alex Rankin freely admitted.

"The price is in excess of what our realty appraisers have estimated to be a fair market price having regard to the land sales in the vicinity," Rankin said in a memo weeks before the deal was closed November 9.

Rankin was not kidding, either.

Earlier in the year, McMaster University snapped up 182 and 184 Yonge St. for $167 a square foot.

U of T walked away with $202 a square foot, but there is no indication whether Rankin laughed all the way to the bank.

Fairview Corporation, which assembled the land for the Eaton's Centre, approached U of T last summer with the $400,000 figure for the property.

The 188 Yonge property was right smack in the middle of the proposed Eaton's complex, and if the university did not sell the land to Fairview, the super-sleek Eaton's project would have the ancient building standing like a sore thumb in the middle.

So Eaton's, through Fairview which in turn proceeded through a subsidiary, made an offer the university could not refuse.

For proverb collectors, there's another old saw which is appropriate:

Everyone has his price.

It probably would have been just another inflated land deal except Rankin's department found the proverbial fly in the ointment, Naomi Bilton's will.

No one seems to recollect much about Naomi, but her dying wish was to give her property to U of T, as was custom for some of ladies of the era, like Lillian Massey, to name another.

But for Naomi Bilton, willing her property to the university was just a little more than leaving a bit of her life's material wealth for an educational institute.

Her father originally owned the property back in the days—more than 100 years ago—when Timothy Eaton was just opening up the shop which would eventually lead to the Eaton's empire of today.

The Bilton and Eaton shops were next door to one another, and behind the stores was a laneway giving rear access to both stores.

While the protagonists are long since dead, such fleeting memories as descendants have today recollect a bitter quarrel developing between Timothy and Mr. Bilton over the laneway.

That quarrel over the laneway and access to it was strong enough that daughter Naomi carried the grudge to her grave, and in her dying wish she ordered her property never be sold to Eaton's or any company representing Eaton's.

For more than 60 years U of T held the property—most recently it has been used as a Reitman's clothing store—and the conditions of the will never were an issue despite the Eaton's Queen Street store looming as a neighbor.

However, as Eaton's has done ever since the days of old Timothy, another expansion was planned.

This expansion into an Eaton's Centre in the block bounded by Queen, Yonge, Bay and Dundas Streets was a strictly 20th century idea.

Fairview Corp did the land assembly for this "Ultimate Eaton's" amid the howls and cries of community and residents' groups wishing to preserve the charm and character of the old downtown Yonge Street.

The only concession made by the corporation came after a long wrangle with the parishoners of Holy Trinity Church, which predates Timothy Eaton, who took an Age of Aquarius position of, wanting the sun to shine in.

After conceding sunlight for the church grounds, Eaton's realized there was still that nasty parcel of land at 188 Yonge St. which had to be neutralized—or at least torn down for a later phase of Eaton's Centre construction.

Enter Alex Rankin and the business affairs folks who got in touch with the university solicitors, Cassels Brock, and the team tripped all over each other's feet to find a loophole to sell the land to Fairview.

It did not cost Fairview a cent for the university lawyers to find a way to sell the land for the Eaton's Centre without violating the technicalities of the will. After all, the university had been made an offer it could not refuse.

By September everything but the sale price had been made public and the howls were going up with accusations alleging the university was violating the terms of the Bilton will to make a last buck.

However, while U of T has never said just what the loophole is, Rankin assured Governing Council the sale to Fairview Corp. was all quite legal.

The deal was completed in November, but it is unlikely 188 Yonge St. will be torn down for a while as that particular chunk of property is slated for Phase II of the project.

The next question is what will McMaster University do now that it owns the adjoining property of 180, 182 and 184 Yonge Street.

On that piece of land is a Woolworth's store which holds a lease on the property which does not expire until 1980.

Yet by 1980, the McMaster land will be ripe for a Eaton's takeover move for Phase II of the Eaton's Centre project.

Mac could well be setting itself for a financial killing in six years since it paid $167 in January, 1973, for 182 and 184 Yonge St. and 10 months later 188 Yonge St. sold for $202 per square foot.

The August 31 deadline for eviction of the Toronto Island community gets closer, as island residents fight a last-ditch campaign to save their homes.

The Variety Brian Pei

Metro studies college land

The long slow process of evaluating St. Michael's College's million-dollar acreage in Forest Hill is now in process in the Metro government bureaucracy.

By fall, St. Mike's should know how much it will get—between $1 million and $4.25 million—for the 10-acre site bordering on the Cedarvale-Nordheimer ravine.

Currently the vacant land on a plateau next to the ravines does not have an official plan zoning designation, and that is the crux for St. Mike's.

The college has given first option on the land to Cadillac Development corp. for $4.25 million, but that option will only be good if the land winds up zoned for high rise.

However, if Metro council ends up approving a parkland designation for zoning, the value could drop to $1 million.

If Monday's meeting of the Metro transportation committee was any indication, college officials holding their breath will likely turn a deep blue before Metro gets any kind of idea how the land is to be zoned.

The land was once again up on the agenda, but this time a very cursory summary on zoning options and procedure was all the report contained.

With typical Metro finesse—earlier Metro parks committee had voted for studies—the transportation committee decided even more study was required and promptly sent the report off to three Metro commissioners—roads, planning and property—for comment.

Past experience with such reports indicates it will be weeks before such comment is forthcoming.

Even then the zoning proposal, whatever it may be, must make a pilgrimage through the Metro committee system, Metro council in addition to the committee and council sessions in the Borough of York and the City of Toronto.

The possibilities for the land are many. Area residents are opposed to the high-rise notion, and at present the land is used as parkland. Some residents want the municipalities to purchase the property.

Financially-troubled St. Mike's seems interested only in selling the land because of the college's need for cold hard cash.

The confusion surrounding what to do with the land dates back three years when Bill Davis' provincial government decided to kill the Spadina Expressway.

Up to three years ago the land was slated for a couple of slabs of sunken concrete with a subway down the middle to act as referee during rush-hour.

With the fender-benders now declared excommunicated in the ravines, only the subway is to build and the adjoining lands, including the St. Mike's parcel, are left in municipal planning limbo.

For St. Mike's, it's like a father pacing the hospital waiting room wondering if Dr. Metro will announce a boy or a girl. For Dr. Metro it's just another baby needing delivery, and it's a long labor, Pop.

Oil producers fight imperialism

By DAVID SIMMONDS

The era of colonialism may be over, but imperialism in the form of multinational corporations is still very much with us, Dr. Abderrahman Khene said Monday.

I Khene, Secretary General of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) was speaking in Toronto on "Nationalism and Natural Resources - The Lessons of OPEC."

Multinational corporations, said Khene, are "instruments of imperialism" which continually challenge those who threaten their supremacy.

Under the guise of nationalism, and through multinational corporation, US imperialism is the "biggest ravager of natural wealth" on the planet, said Khene.

The US has felt free to "dictate to everyone" what policies they shall pursue, at the same time keeping only its own national interests in mind, Khene claimed.

Since each country tries to solve its problems on the basis of national self-interest, said Khene, the US and others have no grounds to complain when OPEC countries do so by raising the price of oil.

OPEC is a "framework for strength and solidarity" in which the developing countries can better achieve their goals.

The alliance of interests which OPEC has made people aware of the need to protect the wealth against the interests of the multinational, and has also allowed greater control and use of natural resources by member states, Khene said.

Khene listed four reasons why importing countries must continue to "bear the brunt of severe circumstances."

First the higher price for oil will allow the underdeveloped countries to undergo "industrial transformation," a process accepted by all as being desirable.

Second, the price rise puts the right value on raw materials which have been too long undervalued, said Khene.

The advent of an "energy crisis" brought on by the price rise will also point out the need for conservation in a "civilization of waste," Khene said.

Finally, the price rise will help speed the process of nationalization, which, although a right of all countries, has been made difficult in the past.

Khene termed oil the "life blood of our modern civilization."

acknowledging "its strategic value is limitless."

Khene also admitted that although OPEC was acting self-interestedly like everyone else, nationalist solutions represented "old ways and means" to deal with oil problems. He did not advocate any other method.

Despite the operation of national self interest, in comparison to the US, countries like the Soviet Union were using "great discretion" in oil policy, Khene said.

Parity no closer as year ends

The turgid parliamentary procedure of Governing Council's committee structure defused and dispersed tenure and staffing as an issue for the first part of the academic year.

However in the second term students began taking their own initiatives.

The end result of the sporadic effort has left students little closer to parity in decision making than they were a year ago, although some isolated instances of progress toward non-parity student representation were chalked up.

The biggest blow to student parity came in August when the Forster report—recommending no student participation of any link in staffing and tenure—was handed down.

That report laid the groundwork for the administration to defuse the issue by plugging it promptly into Governing Council's academic affairs committee which managed to stall on the report most of the year to the point it may not finish with the report by the end of its term of office in June.

Student activity on tenure and staffing was a bit more to the point, but the results were at best mixed.

Parity went down to defeat in U the Faculty of Arts and Science, when for the first time in three years the general committee drew a quorum—mainly from non-parity faculty. That quorum turned down a bid for parity in the faculty's decision-making process.

Social work students, however, were driven to a two-day boycott of classes in their efforts to get parity in that graduate faculty.

However the faculty responded by saying they were not prepared to give a yes or no to parity and negotiations between students and faculty have started up again.

Students at Trinity made an inroad into tenure committees by getting representation, but not parity.

At S. Michael's College and Victoria, students also made inroads but this time at the level of the colleges' ruling bodies.

Vic students started with one seat on the 43-member Vic board of regents, will have four voting seats by fall and will be pushing for eight later on.

At SMC the college council has seven student seats in the 120-member body with the prospect looming of 20 student seats next fall.

Operational agreement in the classroom almost got lost in the shuffle this year until ECO 100 students pushed late in March for a floating 6-60-40 split in grading on final exam-term work.

They won, and now POL 100 students are pushing for the same thing.

U of T's sexism documented

In an unreleased working report submitted to the task force on non-academic women, a student governor recommends a special fund to equalize male and female non-academic staff inequities and to encourage women to apply for administrative posts.

The report is the first tangible achievement of the committee in six months but it was prepared on Howard Levitt's own initiative, and specifically not at the request of Chairman Gary Thaler, recently given tenure following an appeal to president John Evans.

Figures in the report published for the first time show salary differentials are minimal in some categories and large in others.

For instance the top male salary at the "laboratory technician four" level is $13,500 and the top female salary for the same job is $11,500.

However at the "lab technician one" level the situation is reversed with the top female salary $200 higher than the male.

This may be a trend in favor of equal pay at lower levels but at higher levels men are paid better for equal work.

There are far more women than men at lower levels but the situation reverses at higher levels.

The report calls for: committees to be established to hear grievances, a prohibition on discrimination on the basis of marital status, a three-day male paternity leave, subsidized day care for non-academic staff, and increased security and benefits for primarily female part-time workers.

A crucial recommendation is an investigation into job classifications and requirements as well as dropping all information on first names, sex, marital status and age from personnel files and a requirement that 50 per cent of all interviewers be female.

The report also suggests corrective action wherever there is a large imbalance in the number of male and female employees.

A long preamble argues women have been traditionally told they should expect less pay because they are not the breadwinners in their families.

This inequity has resulted in a large turnover and higher costs to the university in training, the report says.

The report also charges women have to work in the university in a "female ghetto" often with the same work but different opportunities for promotion.

The report accuses the university of "sexist hiring practices," hiring men for better paying jobs as well as paying them better for the same jobs as women.

It charges certain jobs are "deemed appropriate for women," for example, all the cashiers at the university bookstores are female and the sections heads and senior officials are male.

Looking for Office Work?

Temporary and Permanent

Call

The Personnel Centre

Ask For

Edith Geddes or Lynne Heaman

924-6274

ANNOUNCEMENT #1

THE SOUTH ASIAN STUDIES COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIES PROGRAMME, University of Toronto presents a seminar by Professor Robert Goldman of the Department of South and Southeast Asian Studies, University of California, Berkeley on "WANDERING OFF: FAMILIAL AND POLITICAL MODELS FOR THE RELIGIOUS LIFE IN INDIA". This will be on Thursday, April 4, 1974 at 2:00 p.m. in Room 2090, Sidney Smith Hall, 100 St. George Street.

ANNOUNCEMENT #2

THE SOUTH ASIAN STUDIES COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIES PROGRAMME, University of Toronto announces a lecture by Professor Eugene F. Irschick, author of "Politics and Social Conflict in South India" and Chairman of the Centre for South and Southeast Asian Studies, University of California, Berkeley on "THE RISE OF THE BACKWARD CLASSES IN THE TAMIL REGION". This will be held on Friday, April 5, 1974 at 10:00 a.m. in Room 2090, Sidney Smith Hall, 100 St. George Street.

ARTS AND SCIENCE FULL-TIME STUDENTS ST. GEORGE CAMPUS

PRE-REGISTRATION FOR 1974-75

Arts and Science full-time students on the St. George Campus must pre-register before April 19th for the courses they intend to take in 1974-75.

Pre-Registration forms and instructions have been mailed. If not received by April 5th consult College Registrar. 1974-75 calendars are in College Offices. Registration for 1974-75 will be September 3rd to September 10th.

W.D. Foulds,
Assistant Dean and Secretary.

SUMMER JOBS

-SMALL NUMBER OF JOBS AVAILABLE,
TWO WEEKS IN MID AUGUST

-FLUENCY IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH ESSENTIAL

FOR APPLICATION FORMS WRITE TO:

Canadian Local Arrangements Committee
Eighth World Congress of Sociology
University of Toronto

XEROX

EQUIPMENT USED EXCLUSIVELY

COPIES

7c
EACH

1st thru 5th
copies per original

5c
EACH

6th thru 10th
copies per original

2c
EACH

11th and additional copies of the
same original

All orders are subject to Sales Taxes, Federal 12% and Provincial 7%

• STUDENT DISCOUNT
(to students on student work)

20%

• FREE collating

ALSO AVAILABLE

• CERLOX plastic spine BINDING and COVERS
• REDUCTIONS - MAXIMUM ORIGINAL SIZE - 24" x 36"

college
copy
shop

76 CHARLES ST., W.
PHONE: 923-8115
HOURS:
MON.-THURS. 8:30 AM-9:00 PM
FRI., SAT. 8:30 AM-6:00 PM

NOTE:
ASK ABOUT FURTHER SAVINGS WHEN YOU HAVE YOUR WORK COPIED AND BOUND BY US

Campus Co-op

ACCOMMODATION IN HOUSES NEAR CAMPUS, T.T.C.

MAY 11 - SEPT. 1

Singles $17/wk.
Doubles $12.-$14./wk.

395 HURON ST.
TORONTO
964-1962

Thanks a hundred, Mister Bell.

One hundred years ago, Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone in Brantford, Canada.

By IGOR KGB ROMANOVITCH

FLIN FLON, Man — A secret device to allow a person to receive

Mute Box, parts list

- C1 - 0.47 microfarad, 200 volt capacitor
- R1 - 5600 ohm, ½ watt resistor
- S1 - spst toggle switch
- S2 - spst momentary contact push button switch
- (i.e., a doorbell switch)
- One small box to build it in about 20 feet of wire.

long distance calls for free was released yesterday by the Canadian Action Team (CAT) following the suppression of the report in June's 1972, issue of Ramparts magazine.

In a press conference here, a CAT spokesman said the American Telephone and Telegraph Company

(AT&T) had the Ramparts issue suppressed, but CAT was able to find a copy AT&T missed after months of digging.

The CAT spokesman said: "It would be most improper and our lawyers say quite illegal to use this device, but since the information was suppressed without a court hearing, we feel the dictum of free speech obliges us to release the information so people can judge for themselves if it is dangerous."

Armed with diagrams, charts and a parts list the CAT representative outlined how such a device works.

Known as a Mute Box, the device is installed on a phone and, when activated, fools the phone company's computer into thinking an incoming telephone call never happened, hence the caller is not charged for the call.

The CAT spokesman emphasized this mute box works only for incoming calls and has nothing to do with now-famous Blue Boxes which allow a person to call out to almost anywhere in the world for free although illegally.

"For instance," said the spokesman, "we know of one fone phreak whose girlfriend calls person to person for herself from Vancouver."

"Her boyfriend, of course, refuses the call. She hangs up and dials again only this time by direct dialing."

"Knowing this is the signal, her boyfriend trips the switch on his mute box before he picks up the second call, and zappo, his girlfriend is not charged for the call."

After providing parts list, the CAT spokesman said the parts could be bought in almost any major electronics store for about $5, although he said it might take some looking to find the capacitor.

Building the box, he said, is a simple task, being only somewhat more complicated than replacing a blown out fuse.

He produced a diagram and said the only thing needed to be done, according to the fone phreaks he had talked to, was to install the push button and toggle switches in the box, and then hook up the wires according to either the diagram or the schematic drawing.

"The only tricky part," he said, "is getting the three wires — A, B, and C — hooked up to the right spot inside the telephone."

He said the right spot is easy to find by taking the top off the phone and looking to find where the four wires from the wall enter the phone.

Next, he said, of the four wires only the red and green ones count for the Mute Box and all a fone phreak does is locate where those two wires connect onto a little box, called the terminal block. The red wire is disconnected from the terminal block L2 and connected independently with Wire B from the Mute Box.

Wire A from the Mute Box is then connected to where the red wire was taken from, labelled L2 for terminal L2.

Wire C is then added and connected to where the green wire is, terminal L1.

The CAT chap said wires A, B, and C are usually three to five feet long, so the Mute Box can be discretely hidden from unexpected eyes — like a surprise visit from the telephone repair man.

The CAT spokesman said fone phreaks have a seven-step procedure for testing a Mute Box. He said if any one of the seven steps does not respond as described, something is screwed up in the wiring and needs repair:

1. When the phone is picked up, a dial tone will occur when the toggle switch is in one position and no dial tone in the second position. The second position is labelled: "Mute".

2. Set toggle switch to Mute. When the doorbell button is pushed down, there should be a click and background noise on the line should disappear. After the button is held down several seconds there should be a short burst of dial tone, after the button is released.

3. With the toggle switch in the non-mute position, there should be a dial tone within a few seconds after the phone is picked up.

The next four test steps, according to CAT, are done by fone phreaks who have a friend call them long distance to check out the equipment.

4. When the phone rings at the pre-arranged time, the toggle switch is set to Mute and the phone is picked up. There should be a loud buzz on the line every six seconds and the fone phreaks should be unable to converse.

5. The doorbell button is depressed, but CAT said it is NEVER depressed for more than one second. The line should clear and conversation should be possible, although the buzz keeps coming at six-second intervals.

6. Once the caller hangs up, the person who received the call — and has the Mute Box — does not hang up but waits. There should be a dial tone for 30 seconds after the caller hangs up.

7. CAT said, however, the ultimate test for fone phreaks is to wait and see if the call showed up on the caller's bill.

CAT also gave a warning that the toggle switch should always be left in the NON-Mute position as otherwise any incoming call will have the ringing shut off and the fone phreaks will miss all those juicy local calls.

LUNCHEON NEWS
from under $1.00
Unique quick self-service
snack bar
hot and cold
specialties

Now Appearing BATTLE AXE
featuring RITA MARCUS
A favourite drag in place for celebrity visitors. The Week's place to rub shoulders with the likes of KRIS KRISTOFFERSON, RITA COOLIDGE, GORDON LIGHTFOOT, JIM AND SILVIA FRANK ZAPPA, the great BOB
DYLAN and more.

Always
exciting entertainment
• Biggest Club
Dance
Floor in Toronto
• No
Cover Charge

NICKELODEON
279 Yonge at Dundas Square (into the 400s)

Sex films with rave reviews? You must be kidding.

KIDDING?!!

"From the frankly erotic to the hilariously funny. Certainly worth investigation by all types of cinema buffs"

THE MONTREAL GAZETTE

"An ambitious program... presenting true-blue pornography in a cultural setting"

PLAYBOY

"Moving entertainment, clearly expanding the limits of celluloid sex..."

THE MONTREAL STAR

"Nudity and explicit sex with class and style."

THE NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

"quite interesting"

THE OTTAWA JOURNAL

"...represents much more than the usual porno fare."

VARIETY

"A sincere attempt to validate the erotic film as art"

FILMMAKERS NEWSLETTER

The Best of The
New York Erotic
Film Festival

COMING SOON!

DO YOU ENJOY
HIKING CAMPING CANOEING
CYCLING BACKPACKING CAVING?
THE U. OF T. OUTING CLUB DOES

JOIN US THIS SUMMER
CALL

ANNE QUICK 922-9878
OR BRUCE KING 622-4939

A PHOENIX
TOO FREQUENT

by CHRISTOPHER FRY

APRIL 3-6
AT 8:30
STUDIO THEATRE
4 GLEN MORRIS

Custom-made fade

Wrangler Fades

A Division of Blue Bell Canada Ltd

Banfield has more freedom than students: prof

By MARINA STRAUSS

Controversial American urbanologist Edward Banfield "has a larger amount of freedom to speak than the majority of members of this university," according to U of T history professor Michael Cross.

As one of six speakers at Wednesday's SAC-sponsored forum on "free speech and academic freedom," Cross told an audience of about 250 at Convocation Hall that a minority of the university community has the "power and opportunity" necessary to employ the right of free speech.

Untenured faculty and students, who don't have adequate representation on bodies which govern the university, have neither the power nor the opportunity to speak freely," Cross asserted.

"Banfield has access to the media, and his books are available in the library," Cross continued. "His rights need less defence than the majority of members of this university."

"The only power of students is sheer physical numbers," Cross emphasized to a responsive audience.

Internal affairs vice-president Jill Conway, the first speaker at the forum, received a ripple of applause as she told students she still felt the council should not proceed with implementation of the non-academic discipline code, despite the SDS action. But she received no more than loud hisses as she told the forum the university no longer recognizes SDS as a campus group and that the Caput will press charges on the group.

SAC president Bob Anderson, addressing the meeting later during the discussion period, said the university administration was not acting "consistently" in denying SDS a fair "trial."

Civil liberties lawyer Clayton Ruby, the forum's second key speaker, called it "most cynical" to take away the rights of SDS to be heard.

Ruby cited numerous examples where "society has determined there are limits of freedom of speech," emphasizing that he agreed "there ought to be limits."

The crowd cheered him as he recalled he did not "find letters of apology" when the Edmund Burke Society prevented lawyer William Kunstler from speaking at U of T three years ago. Ruby defended Kunstler at the time.

Ruby also reminded the audience the federal immigration department "keeps out Marxist academics and members of the Black panthers party."

Speaker professor Kenneth

McNaught, another prized feature of U of T's history department, countered Ruby's contentions, saying only a totalitarian is "not ready to subject his thoughts to debate."

Speaker Bill Shabas, an SDS spokesman, mocked McNaught's view that the university must be a sanctuary, saying that "academic freedom is a shield" for people like Banfield to express ideas which are harmful to a segment of society.

He told a bemused audience the university "will not scare us off," as SDS intended to hold a meeting yesterday at Sidney Smith.

Artistic workers lose case

"To the workers it must seem as though the whole system is against them — the police, the courts, the labor relations board and the government," declared a spokeswoman for the Canadian Textile and Chemical Union (CTCU).

The comment came following a decision by the board on March 19 not to reinstate two workers suspended by the Artistic Woodwork Company.

The workers lost their jobs on a technicality, the wording of Section 64 of the Labor Relations Act.

The act states workers suspended while they are "engaging in a legal strike," are guaranteed their jobs back.

The company suspended a total of nine unionized workers who had been out on strike two days after the strike ended.

The board interpreted the word "engaging" in its present tense, restricting the section to suspensions during strikes.

"The real crime," said a union official, "is the company suspended the workers because of their role in the strike."

The company had stated its intention not to take back certain workers it felt should have been arrested during the strike. They were forced to back down in final negotiations with the union.

The CTCU called the decision by the board "a complete abomination" of the section concerned and added it sets "a very dangerous precedent."

This is the first time section 64 has been submitted to the board for interpretation by any union.

Originally, a strike settlement was delayed because the company said it would not take back any workers who were arrested during the strike until they had been tried in court.

Finally, the strike was settled when the company agreed to submit the status of arrested strikers to arbitration.

Two days after the strike ended, the two workers in question were suspended.

Both were cleared of charges resulting from the strike before the board made its decision. The company used the board's decision as an excuse not to rehire these workers, according to the union.

The CTCU explained a favorable decision "would give the union workers in the plant a sense of victory." The way things now stand, a union spokeswoman said, "the question is whether we're going to have a strong enough union in a year when the next contract comes up."

SUMMER WORKSHOPS

at

TORONTO CENTRE FOR THE ARTS
(formerly Toronto Actor's Studio)

JULY & AUGUST

ACTING
Movement & Voice

FENCING
JAZZ DANCE
Advanced Classes

MAKEUP

CHILDRENS' CLASSES
Ages 6-14

TECHNICAL THEATRE COURSE

For more information, write:

Toronto Centre for the Arts

390 Dupont St. — Toronto or call 967-6969

Larry's
Hideaway Hotel
121 Carlton at Jarvis
THIS WEEK

SLEEZE

Mar. 29-30

Next big attraction

TANGERINE
Apr. 1-6

Roots would like your next walk to class to be a part of your education.

We'd like you to learn a little about your feet—why they work as they do, and why they don't always work as they should. Did you know, for example, that if instead of banging your soles about on campus concrete, you were to go strolling barefoot on a beach, lowest part of the shoe. You immediately stand straighter. And when you walk, you use leg muscles you probably haven't used for years. All of this takes the load off other parts of your body, parts which all too often get overworked from incorrect posture.

If you're wondering whether all this can happen in good-looking well-made footwear, try on a pair for yourself. One look should persuade you that Roots is much more than a beautiful idea. It's also a very attractive shoe.

1052 Yonge Street
(Opposite Rosedale subway Station)

two things would result. First, your grades would drop. Secondly, your heel would make the deepest part of your footprint. This is because nature intended your heel to be the lowest part of your body. So in Roots your heel sits in the

HARPSICHORDS MADE using historic principles for reasonable prices. Several models available. George Haeh 920-8841

ESSAY EDITOR. Do you want "A" on your essay? I can help you present your ideas more clearly, more relevantly. Just edited a PhD dissertation. Have M.A. in writing. Essays from $5. Call evgs. 532-9345.

WHY FREEZE? Used furs from $10, new from $99. Coats, Jackets, Stoles, Pant Coats, Bomber Jackets, Muskrat, Raccoon, Rabbit, etc., EXCELLENT SELECTION Trade-ins accepted. PAUL MAGOER FURS 202 Spadina Ave. (between Queen and Dundas) 363-6077. Open Thurs., Fri. 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. Tues., Wed., Sat. 9 a.m. - 6 p.m.

ESSAYS AND THESIS TYPED Joy's Office Services, 777 Warden (south of Eglinton), Suite 4 757-0621

POSITION OPEN AS RESOURCE PERSON for the Innis College Independent Studies Programme. Versatility, creativity, and ability to respond to student needs are essential. Reply April 1, 1974, with curriculum vitae, to Academic Co-ordinator, Innis College, University of Toronto

BABYSITTER FOR INFANT 3 or 4 hall days per week. Flexible hours. Phone Myra at 964-8853

THREE PEOPLE NEEDED for co-op house in Riverdale area beginning June 1st. Rent $60.00 month. Socialist inclinations preferred. Call 643-1786 evenings.

NEED MATH OR SCIENCE TUTORING? Call Upgrade Tutoring now, 638-4674.

ESSAY COLLECTION FOR SALE. Philosophy, history, english, economics, political science etc. 55 essays - over 750 pages $75.00 Phone 638-4674

GIRL WITH TYPING ABILITY WANTED as partner to write book on the disadvantages of education. Write: author, 295 Bold St., Hamilton.

CHEAP HOUSING IMMEDIATELY — 2 rooms, $55.00 each. Available now. In 5 room flat. Please call Bob 928-4053 days, or drop in at 543 Palmerston at night

ENGLISH SPECIALIST familiar with current academic requirements is needed for the preparation of authoritative review material, related critical analysis and precise commentaries. Please respond outlining qualifications and previous writing experience, if any, to: Jeffrey Cole, P.O. Box 585, King City, Ont.

EXAMINERS WANTED Math, Science etc. to graduate level. Send qualifications, experience, phone no. etc. to: Upgrade Tutoring, Box 412, Postal Station "T" Toronto M6B 4A3.

ESSAYS AND THESIS. We can solve your headaches. We'll type your essays & theses and deliver to you promptly. The rates are very reasonable. Call day or night. 438-6412

REPRESENTATIVES OF INT'L. MARKETING AGENCY WANTED for 1974-75. Must be hustling, non-graduating entrepreneur. Earn $500. semester from special promos. Earn $500. semester from special promos. Earn $500. semester from special promos. Earn $500. semester from special promos.

TO SUBLET a furnished, 3-bedroom apartment on Kendal Ave. May through August. $225./month. 929-5508.

YOUNG WOMAN, 27, graduate student, has large two bedroom apartment to share with same - must also enjoy classical music. $90./month. May 1. Call 651-6639.

MEDICAL SOCIETY WOULD LIKE STUDENTS from other faculties to help distribute cancer info. Interested? Contact Medical Society, Room 2141, Medical Sciences Bldg., 928-8730

TO SUBLET: own bedroom, furnished, shared kitchen and bathroom. Central location. $85.00. Hydro, gas, phone included. Available April 26 - September 13. Phone 961-6377, after 6:00 p.m.

APARTMENT FOR RENT. Available May 1. One bedroom, Broadview, unfurnished. $179. per month. On St. George close to campus and subway. 964-2639 evenings.

ACTORS(ESSES) NEEDED for "Primal Theatre Lab" in Weston. Potential O.F.F. grant. For information and auditions phone Joe Dwozynski - 244-7003

WANTED: MAY 1 - AUG. 31 Male to share 2-bdr. apt. Furnished; swimming pool; sauna; rent $75./month. Phone Ron: 466-0519

FAST, ACCURATE TYPING. 50c per page - call Kathy 537-1141.

SUBLET - large 1 bedroom apt. Partly furnished. May 1 or 15 to Sept. 1, near Westley Subway. Reduced to $160.00. Evgs. phone 921-3082

LARGE ONE BEDROOM APARTMENT with view and full recreational facilities, steps from Bloor-Sherbourne subway. Sublet 4 months or longer, available. May 1 - Call 924-7821.

LARGE MODERN 2 BEDROOM APARTMENT. Sauna & swimming pool. One block from Westley subway. Available May 1st - Sept. 1st. Furnished if desired. Phone 921-5125. Rent reasonable!

GAY DOCTORAL STUDENT has 2-bedroom apartment to share near campus for summer; April 1 - August 31 $80.00 per month. Tel.: 534-6947, evenings and weekends

PARTNER NEEDED (non-smoker) to share well-furnished, self-contained apartment. Own room, parking, phone, and TTC available. Rent: $170. Location: Bathurst and Mt. Pleasant. Occupancy: anytime. Call Arno: 484-4093.

LARGE ROOM FOR RENT, Beverly-Dundas area, $68. per month. Share house cleaning, furnished living room, kitchen, bathroom, with three university types. Available May 1st. 923-8171.

POSITION AVAILABLE July 1, 1974 as Residence Co-ordinator at Innis College. Experience working with co-operative or non-profit housing groups is desirable. Reply in writing by April 15 - 74 to: Residence Co-ordinator, Innis College, 63 St. George St. (928-2512).

RESEARCHER NEEDED by Ontario Federation of Students Knowledgeable about student issues and committed to strong provincial student organization. Send sample research and application to OFS, 380 Victoria St., Toronto by April 12. Salary $125. wk.

HOUSE TO SUBLET five fully furnished bedrooms $65. each. 20 minutes to downtown, walk to beaches. Available May 1st. Phone 466-0176 evgs

BIKE FOR SALE Hardly used, Raleigh Record (10-speed, girls', 19" frame, standard seat and handlebars). New $130. Asking $90. Linda 783-1364.

STREAK - Now that I have your attention I'm a booking agent with access to any union band or performer, any budget. Call Wayne 783-3097 or 781-2916.

ROOMATE NEEDED to share beautifully furnished, spacious, 2 bdr. apt. Yonge St. Clear area; $100. mthly. Call Judy at 481-6652.

TIERED OF THE CITY Want a weekend or summer retreat? 1 bdr. available in shared furnished 5 bdr. farmhouse on 100 acre farm overlooking Rice Lake near Peterborough. Sept. 1974-August 1975. $75./month. Call Ron 787-4624, 928-8768. Wendy 533-9506.

ISLAND HOME, 25 minutes from campus, has room for 1 woman with 2 Medical students who live there now. Watch spring unfold in a peaceful environment. 388-2003, evgs.

Wanna be more of a jock? Read on...

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

Even though the academic year is drawing to a close, the Hart House fitness appraisal centre will continue its service to the students and university community as long as a need is expressed.

The fitness testing at Hart House is done by qualified physical education students under the direction of Joe Rabel. And even better, it's free (although it'll cost you at least $25 anywhere else).

The tests are simple enough and only take 20 minutes. One test involves pedalling a stationary bicycle to measure the physical work capacity while the other is a caliper measurement of the per centage of body fat to body weight. (There's no question about physically surviving — even this writer lived through the tests and lived to tell about them.)

After the tests finish, the results are tabulated by a Rapidman pocket calculator and you are told how you compare with others of your age group. The students in charge can also answer other related questions and suggest what sort of program you can follow to best suit your needs.

Rabel suggested students might get tested now and then work out over the summer. Then in the fall, they could be retested and see how they improved.

Asked how the program got started, Rabel said that there had been "a felt need around Hart House" to do something along these lines. Weight-lifting didn't attract a great number of people in the fall and so an experimental fitness test centre was set up.

"People aren't sold on strength alone these days," said Rabel, "but they do know that general fitness based on cardio-vascular activity is a good thing. We're trying to appeal to the average person with this program and motivate them to improve their fitness."

So far, they seem to be succeeding as they have tested over 375 people this year. After the last Varsity article in January, interest was so great (and so unexpected), the program had to almost immediately be doubled in size.

The appeal of the program seems to be spreading too, because this week Tom Watt and some students travelled down to Pittsburgh to test the Pittsburgh Penguins hockey club. If you want to take advantage of this service, see Joe Rabel in room 107, Hart House or Robin Cambell.

All members of the university community, both male and female, are welcome.

Two women get fitness testing from PHE students Greg Ross (foreground) and Sandy Henderson (background) at Hart House.

Music at Hart House

ricordanza del tempo felice

Per divina bellezza indarno mira chi gli occhi de costei già mai non vide come soavemente ella gli gira;
non sa come Amor sana, e come ancede,
chi non sa come dolce ella sospira,
e come dolce parla, e dolce ride.

Our plaintive anthem fades.
If you'll be around after May,
enjoy our Summer Music.
If not,
See you in September.

ISELER

conducts the

Festival Singers of Canada

in their fourth series concert
Works by Bach, Morawetz, Byrd
Wednesday, April 3, 1974
8:30 p.m.

Lawrence Park Community Church

Guest artists: The New Chamber Orchestra of Canada

Adults: $3.50 Students: $2.50

Telephone orders 481-0743, Monday to Friday, 9-5 p.m.

FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA

Complete Educational Research Service

Termpapers Unlimited of Toronto

752A Yonge Street
Toronto 5, Ontario
(416) 964-7328

Hours: 10:30 - 5:00 (Mon-Fri)
10:30 - 4:00 (Sat)

STUDENTS' ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL POSITIONS AVAILABLE

STARTING MAY 1, 1974

Executive Assistant

To aid in the development and implementation of major projects of the SAC executive. The person holding the job acts as a resource person or source of expertise in efforts to organize students for progressive change in the university advocated by SAC. Salary - $117/wk.

Speaker

To act as chairman at SAC General Council Meetings. Salary - $10/meeting

Minute-taker

To take minutes at the SAC General Council Meetings and type them up afterwards. Salary - $30/meeting.

STARTING AUGUST 1

Services/Communications Assistant

To assist the Services and Communications Commissioners in carrying out projects initiated by their commissions and to act as a resource and information person for these commissions. Salary $117/wk.

Internal Assistant

To assist the Education and University Commissioners in carrying out projects initiated by their commission and to act as a resource and information person for the commission. Salary $117/wk.

THE FOLLOWING ARE NON-PAYING POSITIONS

One representative on the Hart House Board of Stewards: To be responsible to the SAC on matters that are covered by the Board of Stewards of an administrative nature.

One Representative on each of the Men's and Women's Athletic Directorships: To be responsible to the SAC on athletic activities that the Directorships administer.

One representative on the Bookstore Committee

One representative on The Advisory Committee on Day Care Programmes. To be responsible to the SAC on this committee that is concerned with the on-going development of day care programmes at the University of Toronto.

Co-opted positions on Governing Council Committees: Positions that are on the different committees of the Governing Council that deal with Internal Affairs, Academic Affairs and others

Three positions for The Varsity Board of Directors: To be responsible to the SAC on matters concerning the financial and administrative nature of the Varsity. Appointments are made for periods of two years starting July 1, 1974.

HANDBOOK EDITOR

To edit the 1974 Handbook to be distributed to the University of Toronto student body in the fall. Must have a knowledge of all aspects of producing such a publication: editing, layout, advertising etc. Honorarium Offered.

All positions require that a written resume be submitted to the Students' Administrative Council by April 15, 1974. Apply to Seymour Kanowitch; SAC office, 12 Hart House, Circle, University of Toronto. Phone inquiries: 928-4911.

ATTENTION: All University of Toronto Student groups and organizations.

Work on the Student Handbook 74-75 will be started in early May. We would therefore request that if your organization wishes to have a brief of its activities included in the Handbook, that you get in touch with the Communications Commissioner with-in the first few weeks of May

Records set at track meet

At the third annual interborough track and field meet at the CNE, nine records were established in what turned out to be a spectacular sporting event. The race of the day had to be the men's 1500 m won in this year's fastest indoor time for a Canadian: 3:49.4 by U of T's John Sharp. Two UTTC members, Greg Lockhart and Doug Cartan, finished with fine performances of 3:50.7 for second and 3:50.8 for third respectively. This was Cartan's first run at 1500 metres.

Curtis Sahadath of Scarborough set a new record of 7.0 in the 50 metre hurdles. UTTC's Mike Hart was second in 7.0 with U of T's Erik Little fifth in 7.7. UTTC's Susan Bradley won the women's 50 m. hurdles with a record performance of 7.2. She also won the 50 m. dash in 6.5.

In the men's 1500 m. walk, first place Roman Olszewski of Toronto

(6:17.2) and second place Helmut Boeck of Etobicoke (6:34.0) were both under the old record. The women's 1500 m. run was won in a record 4:42.8 by East York's Sharon Clayton followed by Swen Campbell of Scar in 4:52.8.

The men's 400 m. record was broken by Kirk MacKenzie of Etobicoke and U of T's Dave Colbert, 49.8 and 49.9. UTTC's Aris Birze ran 3rd in 50.9. The women's 400 m. was won in 58.5 by Etobicoke's Tami Doll.

The men's 3000 m. was run in a record 8:02.2 by North York's Dan Shaughnessy. Bob Moore and Jerome Drayton finished second and third also under the record in 8:09.0 and 8:09.8 in what was the fastest 3000 this year. Sharp was fourth in 8:27.4.

Abbey Hoffman, running for Toronto, set a new 800 m. record of 2:05. The men's was won by North York's Robin Pond in 1:56.5.

The men's high jump was won by Toronto's Ian Watts with a jump of 1.95m. U of T's Carl Georgevski, Mike McVarish and Erik Little were 4th (1.90m), 5th (1.90m), and 6th (1.85m.) respectively. Witold Klinger set a new long jump record for Toronto with a jump of 6.84m. U of T's Little and McVarish were 2nd (6.45) and 3rd (6.40) respectively.

U of T's Ron Nastiuk won the men's pole vault with a height of 4.11m and finished 3rd in the shot put with a toss of 10.12m. Etob's Bill Milley won the event with 13.06 m.

The meet was won by Etobicoke with Toronto in Second and North York in third.

Zoo too can be a Zebra

There will be a meeting and clinic for any members or recent graduates of the university interested in officiating interfaculty football next year.

Successful applicants will also have a chance to handle high school football games if they wish.

The clinic begins at 5 pm, Wednesday, April 5, in the Hart House Music Room.

For further information, call Paul Carson at 284-3135 during the day.

Snildians up to snuff

St. Hilda's College for the second straight year has won the Marie Parkes Award.

In 1916, Miss A.E. Marie Parkes, and undergraduate student, wrote an editorial for the Varsity stressing the need for a women's athletic building at the University of Toronto.

As secretary-treasurer of the W.A.A. from 1922-1959, Miss Parkes worked with others to attain this goal.

In commemoration of her service and work for athletics at the University of Toronto, the senior T-holders (now University T holders) at the opening of the Benson Building in 1959, donated a trophy named in her honour to be awarded annually to the Faculty, College or School with the highest number of points in interfaculty sports, based on participation and championships.

Because the colleges and faculties are of various sizes, a computer-based formula is used to calculate the winner. Both individual and team activities contribute to the computation of the winner.

Consideration is given to numbers of students participating from each college or faculty, as well as to the winners of the individual and team championships.

St. Hilda's (Trinity) gained 302 of their total 326 points by participation, while New College, who came second, gained 280 of their 305 points by participation.

The standings were as follows:

	Points	Placement
	73-74	72-73
1st St. Hilda's	326	1
2nd New	305	5
3rd Medicine	303	4
4th P.H.E.	284	■
5th Pharmacy	283	6
6th St. Michael's	217	8
7th Engineering	192	13
8th Erindale	188	10
9th Victoria	171	3
10th UC	161	7

eye fashions
unlimited

Come in and see our vast selection of exciting
frame styles.

Shorneys
OPTICIANS

70 BLOOR ST. W.
4 OTHER LOCATIONS IN TORONTO
SEE YOUR YELLOW PAGES

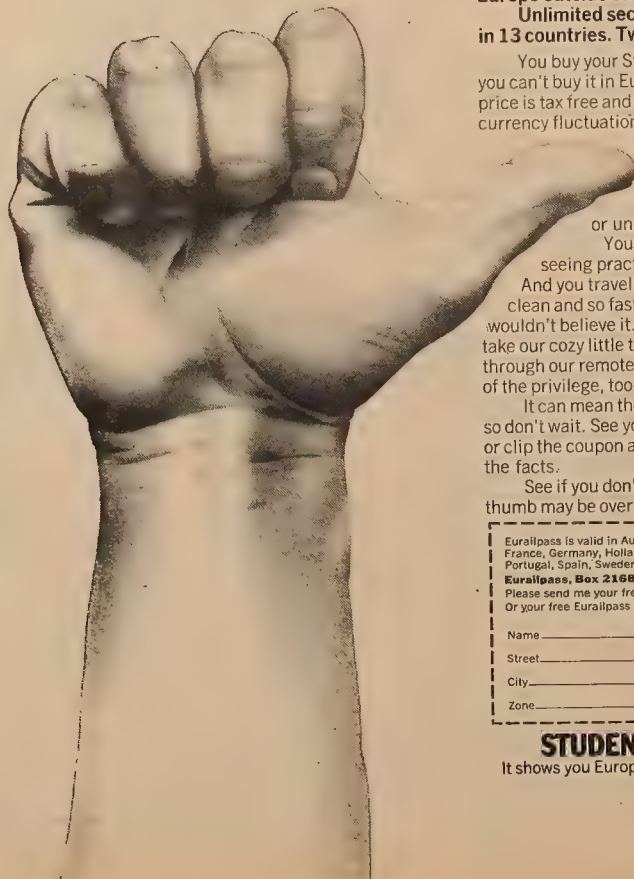

Eurailpass at Student Prices

Also: student flights to Europe and within Europe, car rentals, international ID cards, tours, and hostels.

AOSC/44 St. George Street, Toronto (416) 962-8404
Association of Student Councils

THE THUMB IS THREATENED.

Student-Railpass.

Just about the cheapest way to see Europe outside of hitching.

Unlimited second-class rail travel in 13 countries. Two months only $165.

You buy your Student-Railpass here—you can't buy it in Europe. And the $165 price is tax free and a beautiful way to beat currency fluctuations. Who's eligible?

Any full-time student under 26 years of age registered in a North American school, college or university.

You spend two whole months seeing practically the whole of Europe. And you travel in comfort. On trains so clean and so fast (up to 100 mph) you wouldn't believe it. Of course, you can also take our cozy little trains that meander through our remote countryside—that's part of the privilege, too.

It can mean the Summer trip of your life, so don't wait. See your friendly Travel Agent or clip the coupon and we'll send you all the facts.

See if you don't agree. The day of the thumb may be over.

Eurailpass is valid in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.
Eurailpass, Box 2168, Toronto 1, Ontario
Please send me your free Student-Railpass folder. ☐
Or your free Eurailpass folder with railroad map. ☐

Name _____
Street _____
City _____
Zone _____ Prov. _____ VARS-5

STUDENT-RAILPASS

It shows you Europe as the Europeans see it.

Fares subject to change.

Directorate does its housekeeping

By LAWRENCE CLARKE

The Athletic Directorate dealt with various housekeeping chores, including the annual athletic dinner, hockey and football ticket prices and rentals of the stadium to groups over the summer at their March 26 meeting.

The first item on the agenda was a letter from Tom Watt which was read to the Directorate. He complained that during the athletic dinner on March 20, little recognition was given to winners of the individual awards, the bronze T's and the athletic letters. He also deplored the manners of some of the athletes attending the dinner, specifically the rugby team, whose conduct was "disgusting".

"I was ashamed for Ken Dryden, a great athlete and a gentleman, who finished his talk over the noise," said Watt.

Roger Wright, a student member of the Directorate, admitted the rugby team was responsible for "60 per cent of the noise" and apologized on behalf of the team.

Don Ivey noted the pre-dinner bar lasted a half hour longer than it should have, which meant many of the athletes "entered the dinner in a different style than they had planned to."

Bruce Durno admitted to all and sundry that there had been a delay because there had been difficulty in setting up the Great Hall.

The Directorate was then introduced to the new student members for next year: William Fifield (hockey) Glenn Scott (basketball), Paul Kitchen (rugby), Jerry Hamm (PHE) and Ron Nastuk (track).

Rolling on, the Directorate learned that hockey ticket books would cost $4 for 10-12 games. The Cornell game would not be included, since the UTAA had to give them a guarantee. Ticket prices for this game will be $1 general admission and $2 reserved.

Football ticket prices will be 50 cents a game but it is not known how many tickets there will be in the book because the schedule has yet to be set. An interlocking schedule with the Quebec teams and problems with playoff dates have left this fall's intercollegiate football season in confusion.

Wright asked whether admission to all hockey and football games could be made free. Ivey replied that the executive committee of the Directorate was looking into the matter.

The Directorate then discussed several requests from various groups, including SAC, to rent the Stadium during the summer.

With little hesitation, the members turned down the Canadian Equestrian Team's request to rent the Stadium because of the damage they would cause the grounds. Noting that the infield was closed to the track team during the summer, Dave Watt said, "Why should horses be allowed to use the grass and not people?"

Next, the members discussed SAC's request to rent the stadium during the summer for several concerts. Actually, it seemed SAC wanted it for free. The members soon made short work of that.

The question, the members agreed, was whether it was proper to rent the athletic facilities for commercial purposes with the profits going entirely to that group.

J.W. MacDonald said that the UTAA had a right to profits in such a venture. Wright also agreed, saying SAC would use the money for student services like pubs, etc. but that the UTAA would also use the money for student services, such as the athletic building, and therefore had a right to a share in SAC's profits.

R.C.B. Risk said the UTAA needed money and was just giving it away if SAC's proposal was accepted.

The members of the Directorate then passed a motion that SAC would have to pay the regular fee for the Stadium.

Another rental proposal — from

Benson and Hedges for a proposed jazz festival — ran into some difficulty when Dr. George Wodehouse criticized the smoking advertisements that would decorate the Stadium. The other members, however, seemed to agree with Durno that if Benson & Hedges was paying all that money to the UTAA, then they should be allowed their advertising.

To close out the meeting, Dalt White informed the members that the architects were beginning the preliminary drawings for the new athletic building. The university, however, was $3½ million short in funds and couldn't put everything into the building that was originally intended. White said the matter was going to the Governing Council later this week and suggested little could be done until after their meeting.

With that, the meeting adjourned.

Bennet and Dartford win Powell award

Sandy Bennett and Pat Dartford are co-winners of this year's Hill Powell Administration award.

Last year upon their leaving, Nancy Hill and Gwen Powell presented this trophy to the Women's Athletic Association to be awarded annually at this time of year.

The criteria left by Miss Hill and Mrs. Powell were as follows:

"To be presented annually to the individual student contributing most to the administration of the W.A.A.

To be chosen by the Director of Athletics - Women, Secretary-Treasurer W.A.A. and assistants (where applicable), administrative staff from recommendations received from staff, and students."

The donors indicated that it may not be presented if there were no deserving candidates, or that it could be awarded to two girls if it was felt they were equally deserving.

Such was the case in 1973-74.

Both women were managers of senior intercollegiate teams, both were curators, both were members of Intramural Council and both wrote sports articles for the Varsity

BRITRAIL PASS

THE INFLATION FIGHTER

UNLIMITED travel on ALL British Rail services in England, Scotland and Wales — At prices which have been held at '73 levels for 1974!!

1,000 Inter-City Expresses — EVERY DAY
14,000 Local Trains — EVERY DAY
70 Inter-City Sleeper Trains — EVERY NIGHT

BRITRAIL PASSES are available for unlimited travel in either Economy or First class for periods of 8 Days, 15 Days, 21 Days or One Month at prices starting as low as $40.00 for the 8 Day Economy Pass.

REDUCED RATE 8 Day 15 Day and One Month Passes are also available for the young traveller between the ages of 14 and 22 years.

IMPORTANT! BritRail Passes are NOT sold in Britain. You must purchase them before you leave Canada. SEE YOUR TRAVEL AGENT! Then travel the length and breadth of Britain without the worry of fuel shortages.

To obtain your brochure with full details of the BritRail Pass including sample itineraries which prove the value of the Pass plus information on other services we offer complete and return the 10¢ off coupon underneath.

BRITRAIL TRAVEL INTERNATIONAL
 55 Eglinton Avenue East, Toronto, Ontario M4P 1G8

Please send brochure to:

NAME
ADDRESS
CITY PROVINCE VA

WHO IS CUSO?

Let's say first who CUSO isn't.

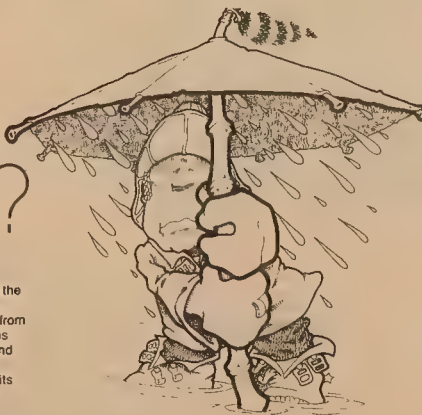

CUSO isn't a government department although it does get some support from the public purse. It isn't a relief organization although it does work on relief projects from time to time. It isn't a religion but it does sometimes work with religious orders. And although it's closely connected with Canada's universities which do a lot of its administration free, it isn't a placement agency solely for university graduates.

So who are we?

We're an organization that sends manpower with some material support to 44 countries of the Third World.

Located in Asia, Africa, Latin America, the Caribbean, and the South Pacific, these countries are trying to develop their potential but lack enough of their own trained and experienced people to do it alone. So they ask us to find trained and experienced Canadians willing to work for them overseas. And since those requests for assistance cover a changing variety of up to 70 occupations, no one source provides our recruits.

Right now, we have overseas 1200 people ranging in age from 19 to 80. And because the developing countries are increasing their requests, we can use more of everybody —

LIKE:

ARCHITECTS
 BACTERIOLOGISTS
 BIOLOGICAL SCIENTISTS
 BOTANISTS
 CHEMISTS
 DIETITIANS
 ECONOMISTS
 ENGINEERS
 FORESTERS
 GAME BIOLOGISTS
 HOME ECONOMISTS NURSES

OCCUPATIONAL THERAPISTS
 PHYSIOTHERAPISTS
 PHYSICIANS TEACHERS
 -MATH-
 -SCIENCE-
 -LANGUAGES-
 TOWN PLANNERS

INTERESTED?
 CALL 928-4022
 CUSO, 33 ST. GEORGE ST.,
 TORONTO M5S 1A1.

WOMEN

Do you have
NLS or Award of Merit
or Instructors?

Do you want to make
some money next year?

Apply to lifeguard at the Benson Building Pool
for the academic year 1974-75

Application forms are
now available in
Room 226 or 230
of the Benson Building

TERMPAPERS

We Research All Subjects
High Quality
Fast Service
Very Reasonable Rates

Call:
QUALITY RESEARCH

653-3693

Weekdays 6 p.m. 10 p.m.
Saturdays 9 a.m. 5 p.m.

WOMENS ATHLETICS APRIL 1-11 PROGRAM RECREATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

Swim Dips
 - Suits and towels provided - Monday to Friday: 12:30 p.m. to 2:30 p.m.
 6:30 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.

Tennis
 - Racquets and ball provided - Half hour court reservation sheets posted in the Sports Gymnasium - sign up yourselves maximum one hour per day unless unused - Monday to Friday: 1:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m., 6:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m., 8:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.
 - Supervised practice: Monday to Friday: 1:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m., 5:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m., 7:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.

Golf
 - Supervised practice, equipment provided - Monday to Friday: 12:00 p.m. to 2:00 p.m., 6:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Badminton
 - Monday to Friday: 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

INSTRUCTIONAL CLASSES

Archery
 - Equipment provided-classes are two-hour sessions - come to all sessions -Monday, Wednesday, Thursday: 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

Basic Life Saving
 - Suits and towels provided-come to all sessions - Monday to Friday 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Survival
 - Monday to Friday: 2:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Learn to Swim
 - Suits and towels provided-come to all sessions - Monday to Friday:
 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Fencing
 - Equipment provided: Beginners - come to all sessions Monday, Wednesday, Thursday: 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. - Coaching: for those with some experience Monday to Friday: 12:30 p.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Fitness Evaluation
 - first week only: Monday 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m., 5:00 to 6:00 p.m., Tuesday 1:00 to 2:00 p.m., Wednesday 4:00 to 5:00 p.m., Thursday 12:00 to 1:00 p.m., 5:00 to 6:00 p.m., Friday 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m.

Slim and Trim
 - Monday 1:00 p.m. to 2:00 p.m., Tuesday 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m., Tuesday 5:00 to 6:00 p.m., Wednesday 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m., Wednesday 1:00 to 2:00 p.m., Thursday 1:00 to 2:00 p.m., 6:00 to 7:00 p.m., Friday 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m.

Modern Rhythmic Gym
 - Monday and Wednesday 7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Golf
 - Monday to Friday 2:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m., 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Law A, Jr Eng win hockey championships

By DAVE STUART

Another glorious season of interfac hockey has finally drawn to a close. The champions this year are Law I in the first division and Jr Eng in the second division.

Division I

Only three games were required for Law to establish its superiority over SMC. In the opening contest of the final series the lawyers tied the Mikes 5-5, but stormed back in the second game to dump SMC 5-0. A combination of solid team work coupled with a version of Horatation at the Bridge by Law's net-minder Durno humiliated the fathers.

McDonald led the lawyers with two goals while Wright, Armstrong and Morrison also tallied one each.

In the third game Monday night, the lions were hungrier than the Christians as Law won a tight one 3-2. Zimmerman opened the scoring for Law in the first period on a power play effort while SMC's Corcoran meditated his sins in the penalty box.

Sibbitt tied the score for the priests early in the second period on a feed from Corcoran.

However in the final stanza, Law took the lead again on yet another power play as Little from Sheen and Polombi counted for the lawyers.

At the 12:30 mark of the period with Law's McDonald and Zimmerman in the bad boys box, SMC pulled its goalie (by the ear). This stratagem paid off as Lahnert tied the game for the fathers once again.

But if the game ended in a tie, Law would still have the championship, which is based on a point system. SMC and Law each had one point from the initial tie, Law gained two points from their win. So SMC had to win the third game to tie Law in points, which would have required another game to decide the series.

Considering all this, coach Don Pagnutti kept the netminder on the bench while play resumed. The law rooters (indeed most of the fans) couldn't believe their eyes as Morrison fired the puck into the empty net for the winning goal at 14:00 to give Law the Jennings Cup.

The priests' game play plan actually called for them to set a new penalty record. They fell short of the record but still amassed 46 minutes in minors as well as two misconducts and a game misconduct, most of which were assessed during the last two minutes of the game. At one point, the official scorer, Randy Curran, had to vacate the penalty box in order to get all the players in.

Good sportsmanship and fair play were not restricted to only the players as an SMC fan burst into the ref's dressing room after the game and harrangued the officials at length.

Other weirdos in the SMC rooting section included the tooth fairy who was resplendent in his flowing cape and light blue long johns, and gold sword.

Division II

Jr Eng found Pharm easy pickings as they took two straight games for the second division championship.

In the opening game last Thursday, Skule came out on top 3-1 on a goal by Gilbert and two by Montgomery. Felice from Rando and Clement replied for the druggists.

In the second game played Monday night at the Varsity zoo, the plumbers sewed up the championship edging Pharm 2-1.

The engineers opened the scoring in the first period with a power play goal by team captain Kolanko from Seckington and Kennedy. The game quickly deteriorated into a version of George Orwell's Animal Farm as Skule's Dimarco recieved a match penalty and a five minute major for kicking a pill peddler. No doubt Dimarco will play his hockey somewhere else next year.

The carnage continued into the second period with both teams receiving a fair share of the penalties. The scoring was split: Smith from Walker at 1:41 for the druggists and Kennedy from Kolanko at 9:34 for the plumbers.

There was no scoring in the third period.

The Varsity — Lawrence Clarke

SMC's Lahnert, uncovered beside the Law net, ties the game 2-2 with less than three minutes to play, as his shot slides by Durno.

Hoechst thinks ahead

Ideas: The spark we run on

Hoechst develops a constant stream of new ideas to keep its research pointed in the right directions. Ideas about what is needed, ideas about what is wanted, ideas about what is possible, ideas about what is probable in the light of a constantly changing, ever-increasing body of basic knowledge.

Imagination steers the ship

Imagination is a prime source of the new ideas Hoechst uses constantly in order to keep developing better products — more effective medicines, better chemical and industrial materials. Imagination is only half the battle, but when good ideas are properly teamed with the discipline of applied research, they constitute a formidable force in the search for improved products in every area of modern life.

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organizations Canadian Hoechst Limited has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, printing plates, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst products and services, Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. Hoechst thinks ahead.

REG. TM HOECHST
HOECHST

Canadian Hoechst Limited
4045 Côte Vertu
Montreal 383, Quebec

40 Lesmill Road
Don Mills, Ontario

A bowl for Punch

The Law school is the only faculty in which all intramural athletic squads are coached by professors from the faculty. The hockey coach for the past thirteen years has been Professor Bruce "Punch" Dunlop. Over this period he has put in many hours at the rink and in planning hockey activities at the school.

It goes without saying that Punch was the most deserving and happiest person in Varsity Arena Monday night after Law won their first ever Jennings Cup.

HERE AND NOW

TODAY all day
Recent work by University of Toronto Fine Art students at OISE, 252 Bloor St. W. fourth floor till April 10.

5:45 am
Nominations open in one hour. This coincides with the beginning of National Nicotol Machiavelli Week.

6:45 am
Graduate students interested in representing the GSU on the Varsity Board of Directors please contact Lea Usin, Executive Assistant, GSU, 928-2391, by 4 pm Friday, April 5.

1:15 pm
Muslim Students may note that regular Friday congregational prayers are held in the South Sitting Room, 3rd floor, Hart House, University of Toronto.

3:30 pm
The Friday Afternoon Pub is running again today in the Junior Common Room of University College. Wine and Beer Free popcorn.

4 pm
In the Council Chamber at Scarborough College the Commissioner of Official Languages for the Government of Canada, Dr. Keith Spicer, will speak on promotion of bilingualism.

5 pm
A Meeting of the Christian Science Organization at the University of Toronto. All welcome.

6:30 pm
Light Benchmen this week at Hill House. All welcome to attend.

7:30 pm
The St. Michael's College Film Club will present Bunuel's "The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie." Admission $1.00. Also at 10pm.

8 pm
Free French films. "La Femme infidèle" (Chabrol) plus "Champagne - Ardennes." UC 106.

9 pm
Third World Troubadours: Cecil Roberts, Sierra Leone and Cecil Rajendra, Malaysia perform in the Cumberland Room, ISC, 33 St. George with David Campbell, a poet from Guyana. Admission $1.50/door & $1.00 tickets in advance from CCCC (537-2222) and DEC (964-6560).

9 pm
The 3rd Annual Innis College nummies game will take place at Varsity Arena until 11 p.m. All those looking for a laugh are urged to attend.

8:30 pm
UC Playhouse presents Vanya, an experimental approach to Chekhov's Uncle Vanya, directed by Jim Garrard. Admission is free.

SATURDAY March 30
7:30 pm
The St. Michael's College Film Club will present Bunuel's "The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie." Admission $1.00. Also at 10pm.

8:30 pm
UC Playhouse presents Vanya, an experimental approach to Chekhov's Uncle Vanya, directed by Jim Garrard. Admission is free.

9 pm
New music concerts devotes final concert to the fascinating music of Pulitzer Prize winning composer George Grumb. Featuring Orford String Quartet, flutist Robert Aiken, and others. Tickets at door, $1.50. Edward Johnson Bldg. 967-5257.

9 pm
Hillel's Coffeehouse will be open tonight at Hill House All welcome to attend. Hillel's Holocaust Observance week is presenting Roman Vishniac speaking on "The Vanished World of the Shtetl" at Shaare Tefillah Cong. 3600 Bathurst St. All welcome to attend.

SUNDAY March 31
6:30 pm
The Muslim Students Association invites all to the regular Quranic Explanations Session, held in the Pandarves Lounge, International Students Centre, 33 St. George St. Lecture sessions is followed by discussions and refreshments.

7:15 pm
The next Sunday series feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be Luis Bunuel's "The Milky Way." Admission by series ticket or $.75 at the door. Also at 9:30 pm.

8 pm
Hillel's Holocaust Observance Week is presenting Arnost Lustig who will be speaking on "Transport from Paradise" at the Medical Science Bldg. Room 2172. All welcome to attend.

8:30 pm
The Harvard-Radcliffe Orchestra in concert in The Great Hall, Hart House under conductor James Yannatos, will perform works including Beethoven's Second Symphony, and Liszt's Piano Concerto in E flat major. The oldest performing orchestra in North America. It is the pinnacle of college orchestras in the US today. 928-5524, Admission $3.

MONDAY April 1
1 pm
Geographers: meeting to discuss the specialist programme and the minor in Geography. Room 622 Sidney Smith.

"ONCE A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY, ALWAYS A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY!"

Sponsored by Toronto University Geographical Society (TUGS)

3 pm
The International Relations Committee of the International Studies Programme presents a seminar by Professor Roy Macridis of the Department of Political Science, Brandeis University on "Contemporary trends in French foreign policy and strategy" in Room 3050, Sidney Smith Hall.

4 pm
The Recorder Club to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street. Advanced players from 4 to 5 pm, beginners from 5 to 6 pm.

6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm.

8 pm
Hillel's Holocaust Observance Week is presenting a film Shop on Main Street at Medical Science Bldg Room 3153 All welcome to attend

TUESDAY April 2
4 pm
Prof. Jacques Monod, University of Ottawa, Lecture: "Two Canadas: One History." Lecture Theatre, Library Science Wing, Roberts Library.

6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel supper served at Hill House Please call in to reserve by 5 pm

7 pm
Graduate English Association, general meeting and elections. Music Room, Hart House

8 pm
Intermediate French classes to meet in the Morning Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George St. Hillel's Holocaust Observance Week is presenting 3 different films on the Holocaust at Hill House. All welcome to attend.

8:00 pm
Graduate English Spring Party. Wine and beer. All graduate English students and staff members are invited. Music Room, Hart House

WEDNESDAY April 3
9 am
U of T 3rd Year Fine Art Students Art Exhibition until April 11th Cumberland

"ONCE A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY, ALWAYS A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY!"

Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

5 pm
Interfaculty football official's meeting, Music Room, Hart House. Anyone interested in officiating football next fall is urged to attend. Women Welcome

6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel supper will be served at Hill House Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

8 pm
Hillel's Holocaust Observance Week is presenting a film The Black Fox with a discussion led by Prof. Emil Fackenheim following the film at New College room 1017. All welcome to attend

8:30 pm
"A Phoenix Too Frequent" by Christopher Fry, Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris, free.

THURSDAY April 4

2 pm
The South Asian Studies Committee, International Studies Programme presents a seminar by Professor Robert Goldman, Department of South and Southeast Asian Studies, University of California, on "Wandering off: familiar and political models for the religious life in India", in Room 2090, Sidney Smith Hall.

4:10 pm
The Latin American Studies Committee of the International Studies Programme presents a lecture by Professor Egon Schaden, Latin American-in-Residence at the University of Toronto on "Is there a Brazilian culture?" in Room 2117, Sidney Smith Hall

6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today

7 pm
The German Conversation Group, 3rd Floor, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street.

8 pm
Le club français se termine guere pendant l'été On sera là, au Centre International, tous les jeudis soirs, comme d'habitude à partir de 20 heures. Vive le Club! toujours a 33 rue St. George.

Martin Luther King, Jr. Dreamer?

"ONCE A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY, ALWAYS A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY!"

Prophet? Revolutionary? The Black Student Coalition invite you to a discussion on at UNIA Hall, 355 College Street. Admission free. Refreshments.

8:30 pm
"A Phoenix Too Frequent" by Christopher Fry, Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris, free

FRIDAY April 5
7 am
Nominations close in nine hours

noon
Hillel wishes to extend its members a Chag Koshel Vesmeach.

1:15 pm
Muslim students may note that regular Friday congregational prayers are held in the South Sitting Room, 3rd floor, Hart House

3:45 pm
Graduate students have only 15 minutes to contact Lea Usin, GSU, 928-2391, if interested in being the GSU representative on the Varsity Board of Directors

6:35 pm
Light Benchmen this week at Hill House. All welcome to attend.

7:30 pm
The last feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Mangolds," starring Joanne Woodward Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

8 pm
"Coffee Pub" sponsored by the Toronto Polish Students Association. Join us for some music, culture, and drinks or just to relax and chat. This is your last chance to enjoy yourself before the exams. At the SPK Hall, 206 Beverley St. Free admission.

8:30 pm
"A Phoenix Too Frequent" by Christopher Fry, Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris, free

SATURDAY April 6
10 am
"From Montgomery to Memphis," a film on Martin Luther King, Jr., sponsored by the Black Student Coalition. Medical Science Auditorium. Admission: children $0.60, adults $2.00. Also at 2 pm and 7 pm.

7:30 pm
The last feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Mangolds," starring Joanne Woodward Admission $1.00. Also at 10 pm.

8:30 pm
"A Phoenix Too Frequent" by Christopher Fry, Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris, free

SUNDAY April 7
6:30 pm
The Muslim Students Association invites all to the regular Quranic explanations Session, held in the Pandarves Lounge, International Students Centre, 33 St. George St. Lecture session is followed discussions and refreshments

7:15 pm
The last Sunday series feature of the St. Michael's College Film Club will be "Ride in the Whirlwind," starring Jack Nicholson (re-scheduled from March 24th). Admission by series ticket or $.75 at the door. Also at 9:30 pm.

TUESDAY April 9
6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel LePasach supper will be served tonight at Hill House Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today.

WEDNESDAY April 10
6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel LePasach supper will be served tonight at Hill House Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today

THURSDAY April 11
6:30 pm
Hillel's Koshel LePasach supper will be served tonight at Hill House. Please call in to reserve by 5 pm today

SATURDAY April 13
9 am
Don River Day The Second Annual Canoe Tour on the Don River. All canoeists, naturalists, hikers, politicians, picknickers and industrialists are welcome

SATURDAY April 20
10 am
Art Exhibition to be held in Cumberland Room, International Student Centre, 33 St. George Street until April 26th.

FRIDAY May 10
6 pm
Remember May 10th. The exams are over and you want to let yourself go! Drink, and dance the evening away at the EOE dance, sponsored by the Toronto Polish Students Association. This will be our last big bash of this year. So, come and really enjoy yourself!!! At the SPK Hall, 206 Beverley St.

Oil barons reveal truth of bathroom jokes

Question: what happens when you put 250 top executives from resource industries together under the same roof for two days?

Answer: a lot of bathroom jokes. That, at least, seemed to be the most popular way to introduce a speech to those mighty moguls of the energy world, when they got together Monday and Tuesday at the tacky Regency Hyatt hotel to discuss "Our Disappearing Resources."

Well, not quite disappearing. That depends who you talk, or listen to. Take William Deeks, vice-president of Noranda Sales, a subsidiary of Noranda Mines Limited, one of the world's largest mining companies.

According to Deeks, resources are not disappearing, they are merely a function of exploration.

That means means more exploration, with more foreign involvement, and more exports, said Deeks.

To facilitate this, Canadian governments must "reduce the risks" to the companies involved, and help them find markets for their products.

Any implication Canada was under the thumb of foreign interests was a "overrated myth," said Deeks.

Speakers at the conference pointed to two events which gave the impression resources were disappearing.

In the first case, the diminishing supply of oil, accentuated by the price rise, pointed out the degree of dependence on an energy source with no substitute at present.

Secondly, the 1972 study for the Club of Rome, "The Limits to Growth," suggested a global collapse within 100 years unless economic and population growth were curbed quickly.

Ronald Ritchie, formerly a vice-president of Imperial Oil, and a member of the Club of Rome, praised the study as a "competent, professional scientific analysis," but concluded the "normal forces in the market economy" could sort things out without bringing a collapse.

That was a sentiment a lot of people at the conference seemed to share.

What they did not share was the enthusiasm of federal energy minister Donald MacDonald, who managed to blurt out that "instead of Imperial Oil managing the price its going to be the government of Canada and the provinces."

MacDonald looked a bit sheepish after saying that, and dashed out of the room shortly after (to tell a bathroom joke in the bathroom?).

The men from the market also heard the same tune from Ontario energy minister Darcy McKeough, who, however, salvaged his credibility by firing off a better bathroom joke than most.

McKeough told his audience "the days of laissez faire are finished," that it was "simply unacceptable" to let market forces set prices. That was for the politicians to do.

Poor Bernard Lachapelle, Quebec minister of planning, brought down the wrath of the house with his enthusiastic proposal for a comprehensive federal-provincial planning body, a body which did not reserve a place for the business community.

MacDonald underscored the importance of Canadian resources when he suggested Canada might align itself with producing, rather than consuming nations, at the same time as pushing for greater control of resource processing in Canada.

Geoffrey Conway, an economist from York University, cautioned that the US desire for more Canadian resources, and for an equal balance of payments, meant Canadian manufactured goods would be unable to find a market.

If there was any agreement at the conference that resources were disappearing, it did not translate into concern as to whether Canadian oil and gas reserves should be developed as rapidly as at present.

Well, you can always put a brick in your toilet, can't you?

The Varsity - Phil Schwartz

Energy star "Ronald" MacDonald forgot his best bathroom jokes and lived.

A cosmological triple play point of space-time that is called the singularity. Singularity is a mathematician's euphemism for something that is not defined.

It is not clear whether the singularity is a real feature of the universe or just a mathematical artifact. But it is clear that the singularity is a point of no return. Once you reach it, you cannot escape. It is the end of the line.

Every point in this two-dimensional space-time represents an event. It specifies both the location and the time. The light cone is a line that separates the past from the future. It is the path that light travels. The timelike region is the region where we live. It is the region where we can move from one event to another. The spacelike region is the region where we cannot move. It is the region where we can only observe events.

For two events in the timelike region, where we live, it is possible to find an observer moving in such a way that the particle was in his hand at the start of the flight and will be in his hand at the end. In the spacelike region, in a region, which is not two regions but one. This can be seen if we add a third dimension and imagine the diagram as a three-dimensional object. The light cone is a cone in three dimensions. The timelike region is the interior of the cone. The spacelike region is the exterior of the cone.

old gain support from an experimental discovery of the Dietrick E. Thomsen

Science News

